OCEAN SPRINGS HOTEL,

SITUATED AT THE

CELEBRATED OCEAN SPRINGS, MISS.

This house is now open and in complete order for the reception of guests. The bathing and fishing is the best of any place on the coast, and persons seeking either health or pleasure cannot do better than to visit the Ocean Springs Hotel, where they will receive every attention during their stay at the hotel. The table will always be supplied with the delicacies of the season.

I would refer invalids seeking health to the physicians (to be had at the Hotel, or at Messrs. Schmidt & Zeigler's, New Orleans, Louisiana,) containing an analysis of the waters of the Springs and their wonderful cures, which are certified to by some of the most eminent physicians of our country.

Terms are more reasonable than at any of the other watering places on the coast for the same accommodations. Liberal arrangements made with families and those wishing to remain during the season.

There are also connected with the house a Ten-Pin Alley and Billiard Saloon; also fine Croquet grounds for the guests of the house.

The proprietor has made arrangements for a Band of Music, which will be in attendance during every evening of the week, besides a fine Piano for the use of the guests of the Hotel.

A CONVERSATION FAN.

No family circle is complete in social diversions and entertainments without one, and in order to enjoy the pastime it should be distinctly understood that the answers do not numerically follow the questions, but to spice the amusement an answer must be looked for that will afford a telling response to an interrogatory.

Where a direct answer is not to be found to a direct question, it will be discovered that it furnishes the sequel to a sustained conversation, so that couples can carry on a tete-a-tete, which they may not wish to make audible, by silent indications of numbers.

THE CONVERSATION FAN

is an infallible remedy against dullness, breaking the spell of silence by a suggestive inquiry, furnishing congenial pleasures for an evening's entertainment, and opening up a novel and ingenious method of whiling away agreeable hours at home, in the promenade, at a party or private gathering.

MEDICAL.

HAS LONG ATTRACTED THE NOtice of the most eminent physicians by its great efficacy in curing what were considered incurable cases of disease, where the patients have been almost destroyed by SCROFULA, etc., and Prof. Valentine Mott, of the New York University, Profs. Gibson, Dewees and Chapman, of Philadelphia, and many other physicians of celebrity, gave, over their own signatures, letters certifying to its great merits. It has been occasionally advertised, and thousands of families recommend and use it. The Laboratory is under the direction of Dr. FRANKLIN STEWART, who has devoted his attention and skill in its careful preparation during the past twenty-five years, and not a bottle put up that is not worth many times its cost to the patient. It is perfectly safe for the most diseased and debilitated, and in all cases where the blood is not pure it should be used freely.

New Orleans Markets.

COTTON.—The following are the arrivals since the fourth instant:

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| Louisiana and Mississippi | bales... | 1,690 |
| Lake | " | 3 |
| Arkansas | " | 82 |
| Mobile | " | 85 |
| Texas | " | 1 |
| Total | | 1,861 |

On Saturday the market opened with only a moderate inquiry, and continued quiet throughout the day, seven buyers taking in the aggregate only 580 bales, at prices showing continued steadiness in the better qualities, but increased irregularity in the lower grades and all dusty lots, with a further tendency in favor of buyers. Low middling to strict low middling sold at 10¾c., and ordinary, with about the usual dust, at 11¼c. On Monday the demand continued limited and the sales embraced 670 bales at previous rates for low middling and the higher grades, but still easier prices for other descriptions. Ordinary, with an average amount of dust, sold at 11¼@11¾c., and good ordinary as low as 15c. On Tuesday the market opened with a more general inquiry, which was subsequently developed into a very fair demand, twelve buyers participating in the business, and the sales summed up 1,761 bales, at steady prices for the better qualities, while the medium and lower grades exhibited continued irregularity, and, if anything, ruled still more in favor of buyers. Strict ordinary was reported as low as 12¼c., and good ordinary at 15c., strict good ordinary to low middling, approximating the latter, at 17¼c., and a high style of low middling at 18c. We hear of some shipments by factors, to the extent of nearly 1,000 bales, within the past week, reducing so much the supply on sale.

The above makes an aggregate, in round numbers, for the past three days of 3,051 bales, against 2,980 for the corresponding time last week and 1,800 the week before.

The receipts proper at this port since the first of September, exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas, are 1,226,898 bales, against 950,576 bales to the same date last year, and the increase in the receipts at all the ports up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 821,433 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same date last year, there is an increase of 388,513 to Great Britain, of 66,987 to France, and of 178,750 to other foreign ports. ## Special Notices.

CAMP MEETING.—The camp meeting on Seashore camp ground will commence on Friday, the first day of August next.

The camp ground is beautifully situated upon the coast, two miles west of Biloxi, Mississippi, and lies open to and fronts directly upon the gulf, enjoying the delightful sea-breeze. Persons visiting the camp ground will leave the New Orleans and Mobile railroad at Seashore station, whence a walk of a few hundred feet brings them to the encampment.

The trustees have laid the grounds off in avenues and lots suitable for the erection of permanent tents. Several parties erected their own permanent tents last year, and the trustees are pleased to learn that a greater number intend doing the same this year—some as family tents, others by church association. Both these are desirable.

The trustees have made provision for good boarding and lodging accommodations to a limited extent, on reasonable prices.

Several small, plain tents will be erected, to rent to persons or families desiring to hire, either furnished plainly or entirely unfurnished. Unfurnished tents, nine by thirteen feet, at $5, and nine by twenty-five feet, at $10 for the encampment week. For the same plainly furnished with cots, pillows, sheets, etc., a reasonable additional charge will be made.

They recommend to all who desire to attend the meeting to address either of the undersigned, and make arrangements for their comfort before the date of the camp meeting.

Brethren of the Methodist Church and of other churches, and the communities of the adjacent cities and country, are invited to attend the camp meeting.

Ministers of talent and distinction, from far and near, are expected to be present and assist in conducting the exercises.

W. H. FOSTER, President.
PHILIP HALLAHAN, Secretary.

THE JACKSON DISTRICT SUNDAY SCHOOL CONVENTION, M. E. CHURCH SOUTH.—This convention, which embraces the ministers, traveling and local, the superintendents and teachers of this district, as well as others interested in this great cause, will be held in Canton, Mississippi, beginning on Wednesday, the twenty-seventh of August next.

The committee appointed by the Jackson District Conference to secure speakers for the above occasion, without attempting to prescribe a programme for the same, would respectfully suggest the examination and discussion of the following subjects: What is the great end of Sunday school instruction? Is our literature adapted to meet the end of the Sunday school? What is the best mode of securing attendance on Sunday schools? What are the true relations of children and of Sunday schools to the church? Are denominational schools important to success? Can our Sunday school music be improved?

THOS. F. HOBTON,
Chairman of Committee.

THE Enfaula District Conference will be held at Abbeville, commencing on Wednesday night, July 30. Introductory sermon by Rev. F. L. B. Shaver.

W. H. ELLISON, P. E.

THE District Conference of the Camden district, Alabama Conference, will be held at Pleasant Hill, Dallas county, Alabama, August 6-10. The opening sermon will be preached by the Rev. A. M. Jones, of Camden, Alabama, on Wednesday night, August 6. A full attendance is solicited. Ample accommodations for all.

J. W. SHORES, P. E.

News of the Week.

DOMESTIC.

WASHINGTON, July 10.—The Secretary of War has designated commissioners to locate a military prison at Rock Island.

CINCINNATI, July 10.—The delegates to the Jewish Conference reassembled this morning. Resolutions were adopted requesting the co-operation of all the Jewish congregations in the United States for the securing of a more perfect union, that the formation of a Jewish theological institution and other interests of the Jewish religion may be promoted thereby.

The conference adjourned to meet in Cleveland on the second Tuesday in July next year. The executive board met and organized to-night, and prepared for immediate work. It was resolved to invite the formation of co-operative auxiliary societies not members of the union.

NEW YORK, July 11.—Aaron Richardson, proprietor and manager of the Opera House, was placed on trial in the Court of Sessions yesterday afternoon, on an indictment charging him with a misdemeanor in violating the provisions of what is known as the civil rights bill. Anna Lawyer, Margaret Payne, John F. Payne and Michael Meehan were examined on the part of the people, their evidence mainly going to show that Payne's servant, Lawyer, had been sent by him, accompanied by his children, who are almost white, to the box office of the Opera House, and procured seats down stairs, representing that they were for the parents of the children, and that on Payne presenting the tickets at the door they were refused admission and told there was a place for them in the gallery.

The defense claimed that the tickets were procured by false representations. Mr. R. W. Pecham, Jr., appeared for the accused, and Mr. N. C. Mook for the people. The case was given to the jury. About six o'clock in the evening they came in, and, on representing that they were unable to agree, were discharged. They stood ten for acquittal and two for conviction. The latter, it is said, have always been noted as abolitionists.

SAN FRANCISCO, July 11.—The primary elections in this city resulted in favor of the railroad combination.

The trial of the Modocs has closed. Those who attended the trial have no doubt that the commission will find them guilty of the charges and specifications.

NEW YORK, July 12.—A Herald special says a marriage is to take place between the Duke of Edinburg and Maria, the Czar's only daughter. The duke thus foregoes his right of succession to the duchy of Saxe-Coburg, which fact involves important political considerations.

NEW YORK, July 12.—The parade of the loyal Orange lodges took place here this morning. The procession was a long one. The members were dressed in new and neat regalias and looked well. A heavy force of policemen were stationed along the route, but thus far there has not been the slightest disturbance.

The Orange parade was dismissed at one o'clock. There were but few persons assembled to witness it, and no disturbance occurred.

ST. LOUIS, July 12.—The number of deaths in this city during the past week was two hundred and forty-one, the same as last week. Of this number sixty-seven were reported as cholera morbus, and forty-three as cholera infantum and summer complaint. One hundred and thirty children under four years of age are included in the list.

NEW YORK, July 12.—Rebecca W. Eastbrook, the magazine writer, is dead.

NASHVILLE, July 13.—No deaths from any cause reported in the city to-day. The city papers have ceased their daily mortuary reports. It is thought that the cholora has disappeared from the city.

GRAND RAPIDS, July 13.—At three o'clock to-day this city was visited with another terrible and devastating fire.

About twenty acres of ground was burned over and two hundred buildings consumed. The loss, it is said, will not be less than $4,000,000. It is impossible at this time to give the amount of insurance, but it will approximate $2,000,000.

WASHINGTON, July 14.—Minister Sickles telegraphs to the State Department that the Spanish government has issued a decree rescinding all embargoes, and ordering the immediate restoration of all property heretofore seized for political offenses in Cuba.

WASHINGTON, D. C., July 15.—A fire at the Navy Department this morning damaged the navy building to the extent of $10,000 or $12,000. It is thought the greatest damage is by water.

The secretary's office is completely flooded and the entire department is unfit for occupancy. There were several valuable records burned, but most of them can be replaced.

SELMA, ALA., July 15.—The caterpillars are appearing generally in the prairie lands west of Selma. The third crop of worms will appear the first week in August, and may strip the plant of its leaves.

FOREIGN.

LONDON, July 9.—A special dispatch from Vienna to the Standard says: An attempt was made by an incendiary to fire the Exhibition building. Correspondents of London journals, and other persons who have returned here from Vienna, hint that the building will probably be burnt soon.

In the House of Commons a motion was made that the government should address the foreign powers with a view to establishing arbitration as a permanent resort for the settlement of differences between nations. The motion was supported by figures showing the cost of standing armies.

Mr. Gladstone opposed the motion. He argued that it would defeat its own object, because the continental nations held widely different views on the subject. He asked the gentleman to withdraw his motion. Mr. Richard declined to withdraw. The House was divided. The division resulted in a tie—98 yeas to 98 noes. The speaker gave the casting vote in favor of the motion, which was adopted.

BRESLAU, July 10.—Eighteen cases of cholera occurred here, whereof fourteen were fatal.

In Landsburg eight persons were stricken; four are dead.

Breslau is on the railway from Berlin to Vienna, one hundred and ninety miles southeast of Berlin.

MADRID, July 11.—The Imparcial says the Internationalists in Alcoy have risen against the authorities, shot the mayor, burned sixty houses, and are now besieging the civil guards and volunteers, who had taken refuge in the town hall. They hold a number of prominent citizens as hostages, and threaten to shoot them if the troops attack the town from the outside; that if their demands were not obeyed they must decline all responsibility for the preservation of order.

The minister of war has received intelligence of a battle at Santa Coloma, Province of Barcelona. Fifty insurgents were killed.

MADRID, July 12.—There was serious trouble in Malaga yesterday. While a bull-fight was in progress the people of the city rose against the municipality and many excesses occurred. Among the atrocious acts committed was the assassination of several councilors.

The government has received a telegraphic dispatch from the governor of Malaga, tendering his resignation.

Lieutenant General Sanchez Bregua has received orders to hasten to Navarre and take command of the Army of the North in person.

A report was in circulation this morning that a crisis in the ministry was imminent, but it was soon pronounced to be without foundation. The cabinet is thoroughly united, and determined to repress all disorders.

Upon the assembling of the Cortes to-day Senor Suver, minister of colonies, presented and read a bill applying to the Island of Porto Rico the constitutional clause of 1869 with reference to individual rights; also applying the same clause to the Island of Cuba, with the exception of the territory occupied by the insurgents.

A dispatch has been sent to the Captain General of Cuba authorizing him to adopt the same extraordinary measures against the insurgents in that island as have been resorted to by the government for the suppression of the Carlist insurrection in Spain.

The abolition of slavery in Cuba will be realized by special law.

LONDON, July 14.—In the Chamber of Peers this evening Lord Cranmore read the Archbishop's reply to the Church Association, showing a tendency in the Church of England toward Catholicism, and moved that a committee be appointed to consider what legislation is needed to check the evil. He supported the motion in a long speech, in the course of which he read passages from a petition of four hundred and eighty-three clergymen of the Established Church, asking for the appointment of confessors and the restoration of other papish practices. He wanted to know why it was that clergymen holding such doctrines retained their positions in the church.

The Archbishop of Canterbury said the noble earl had stated the question fairly, and it was no wonder that popular feeling was working upon this subject. There was good cause for alarm. The power of bishops to remedy the abuses should be increased.

The Bishop of Salisbury declared the position taken by Lord Cranmore unassailable, but he thought the motion inopportune. The confessional was contrary to his feelings; that the attempt to introduce it would be only considered wild and visionary.

The four hundred and eighty-three clergymen who signed the petition constituted only one-half of the clerical body of the church. The Archbishop of York expressed the opinion that whatever was done in this matter should come from the church, not from the legislature. He therefore was opposed to the motion, but he declared he would make every exertion to prevent the prayer-book from becoming Romanized. The motion was then negatived and their lordships rose.

LONDON, July 15.—Telegrams from the various points on the Continent where the cholera has been prevalent represent the disease everywhere abating. Dantzic, Breslau and Munich are said now to be entirely free from it.

AT ONE of the ragged schools in Ireland a clergyman asked the question: "What is holiness?" A pupil in dirty, tattered rags jumped up and said: "Plase, yer rivereuce, it is to be clane inside."

The Ultramontane Controversy in Canada.

MONTREAL, July 3.—One of the most remarkable instances—though not the first—of the intolerance of the ultramontane faction in Canada, whose leader is the Bishop of Montreal, has just transpired. A young French printer named Francois Chabot was drowned last week, and Bishop Bourget refused his body Christian sepulture, on the ground that he had been a member of a secret society, the Typographical Union, and so was without the pale of the church. The presidents of the Montreal and Jacques Cartier Unions, Messrs. Alty and Lacroix, then called on the bishop and endeavored to explain that the International Typographical Union had no connection with the Societe Internationale. A second interview resulted in the declaration by the bishop that the objects of the Typographical Society, like those of all other trades-unions, were inimical to the interests of the church, and that all the members were under the ban of excommunication till they chose to withdraw from the pernicious organizations. He took the constitution and by-laws of the Jacques Cartier Union, and promised to return them with certain amendments which would bring its members within the reach of salvation in the next world and sepulture in this, and said he would allow the body to be buried in that part of the cemetery set apart for the interment of unbaptized infants.

The "Guibord case," where the bishop was sued to accord Christian burial to the remains of a member of a literary society which was under excommunication, is now pending before the Privy Council in England. Correspondence New York World.

From the Work.

ST. JOSEPH CIRCUIT.—Mr. Editor: To-day we closed a meeting of a week's duration at Elizabeth chapel, which has resulted in fifteen accessions to the church. Of these nearly all profess to have found a deep and abiding peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ. Yours in Christ,

J. GORTON MILLER.

ELIZABETH CHAPEL, June 29, 1873.

ALEXANDRIA DISTRICT, LOUISIANA.—Mr. Editor: We have just closed a meeting of nine days at Evergreen. There have been twenty-two accessions to the church and a general interest in the community. Rev. Fred. White, presiding elder, was at his post all the time. Rev. E. B. Foust, S. H. Schroeder and William V. Taylor were present. The church at Evergreen is greatly revived and the prospect is very encouraging. S. H. COOPER.

JULY 7, 1873.

SHREVEPORT, LOUISIANA.—Mr. Editor: The first week in June we held our second quarterly meeting for the Shreveport station, and for several days had the pleasure of occupying the presiding elder's room in the new parsonage, and an elegant one it is too. This new parsonage has been brought to its completion by the untiring efforts of Bro. Wilkinson, and is a decided success and progress in that line of church development. It is a two-story octagon house, with an observatory which overlooks the city, and two verandas, one above and the other below, running five-eighths of the distance around it. It contains four bed-rooms, parlor, dining-room, library-room, closet for prayer, kitchen and servant's room, and all necessary outbuildings, even to a horse-stable, all of which is neatly inclosed with a substantial and appropriate fence. In shape and color this house differs from any other in the city, the shape being octagon and the color a green drab. It is carpeted and furnished with material of good order, and selected in good taste. We suppose that it would take at least $6,000 or $7,000 to cover the cost of this establishment—this preacher's home. We forgot to mention another and one of the most important appendages to any place, and that is a large underground cistern, which is under a room adjacent both to the kitchen and dining-room, a step from either, and a few jerks at an easy pump, and you have a dipper (which is chained fast to the pump) full of clear, fresh and cold water—the best beverage in the world. J. P.

MANSFIELD, LA., July 4, 1873.

FARMERVILLE CIRCUIT, LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.—Mr. Editor: It may be interesting to some of the readers of the ADVOCATE to hear from this circuit. When we arrived we found kind friends and a cordial welcome, but no parsonage and no house to rent in Farmerville. After a few days had passed we attended a sale and bought a house. We found seven appointments and took in four more. We have held two protracted meetings; several bright conversions and the addition of twenty members to the church; baptized, ten; infants, two; church-buildings commenced this year, one at Farmerville, the other at Shiloh. Four camp meetings are being arranged for. If the good Lord is with us we hope for success.

The devil and alcohol have been engaged in their work of death, and we have launched the ship of temperance reform in the organization of four councils in this circuit, with two hundred and thirty members. I belong to the order, and am zealously at work for the cause, which has accomplished a reformation for good in this country in getting some of the old drunkards to be sober, and in uniting the sober for protection, and in stopping and hedging in social drinking, that dreadful plague and curse that is hanging to the United States like a dreadful nightmare. We have interesting Sabbath schools, and separate appointments to preach to the children and catechise them. This is the most successful plan that we have ever tried.

We are having good singing in some of our congregations by inviting all who will try to sing to sit together in the middle block of seats, with one to lead. If the organ is used they manage it so that it does not destroy the sentiment expressed in the hymn.

R. PARVIN.

P. S.—The NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE is very much appreciated, and we are getting subscribers for it all the time where they can get the money. R. P.

ABBEVILLE, MISSISSIPPI.—Mr. Editor: We have never before attempted to write anything for publication, but have been a reader of the ADVOCATE for many years, and have sometimes seen notices of Sabbath schools in different portions of the work; and, if you will pardon the presumption, we would like to tell you and your many readers who feel an interest in the Sabbath school cause what we are doing up in the hills of north Mississippi, in the quiet little village of Abbeville. During the winter the school was suspended, but resumed again in the spring, and has been quietly but steadily increasing in interest ever since. We have a most excellent superintendent, who is always at his post, and more than one hundred members, besides the officers and teachers. We have had no convention or celebration, neither have we an organ (some of us would be glad if we had one) to make our school attractive; still the members, old and young, seem deeply interested, and some of the teachers say they have never heard better lessons. Even you, Mr. Editor, who have enjoyed the privilege of attending large Sabbath schools in the cities, would be delighted to hear some of our classes recite; one in particular—a class of young ladies, some of them school girls. On the fourth Sabbath in last month, after reciting their regular lesson, they repeated two hundred and forty-six verses from the Bible, and the next Sabbath they brought up five hundred verses. One of them had one hundred, another one hundred and five, and another one hundred and twenty. The others had not so many, but all recited well, and it is a very interesting class. Don't you think it will do to write about?

A LOVER OF SABBATH SCHOOLS.

ABBEVILLE, MISS., July 1, 1873.

BROOKHAVEN DISTRICT CONFERENCE.—Mr. Editor: The conference was held at Beauregard, Mississippi, commencing on Friday, June 13, 1873, at nine o'clock A. M., and adjourning on Saturday evening.—Bishop Kavanaugh was present at the opening, and remained with us to the edification and, I trust, eternal profit of all who attended.

The account of the spiritual condition of the church in the bounds of Brookhaven district is by no means cheering. There is a lamentable falling off from the ancient custom of family prayer and attendance upon the ordinances of the house of God. Class meetings have become obsolete. Still in many places other interests of the church seem to prosper. The reports concerning Sunday schools were specially gratifying. The number of schools and the number of children in attendance were both alike above our calculation. In one place (Raymond, Mississippi) glorious fruits had been gathered from this nursery of the church in a recent revival. There was some diversity of opinion as to the utility of the uniform lessons. The prevailing sentiment, however, was that, if teachers as well as scholars would study the lessons as they should, the system is the best ever used in the church. One brother said he had "been connected with Sunday schools for fifty years, and he believed the uniform lesson system the best that had ever been used in the church."

It is not worth while to say anything about the finances of the church. We are miserably behindhand.—Bishop Kavanaugh told us that the Mississippi Conference had the worst record financially of any in the connection. We are not prepared to controvert this humiliating statement. We did not venture a "financial plan." We only pray our people to follow some plan, for really there seems to be none in use. The Discipline furnishes plan sufficient. If the church will fall upon some plan to become truly spiritual, then other things will follow—the ministry will be supported, the missionary and other enterprises of the church will prosper; but not until then.

Our District Conference, I am persuaded, had a good effect. The devotional exercises were delightful. A handsome new church was dedicated by Bishop Kavanaugh on Sunday, the fifteenth, and our esteemed brother, Dr. John Sample, was ordained elder in the local ministry.

The following persons were elected delegates to the Annual Conference, viz.: John H. Thompson, John S. Beasley, W. C. Wilkinson and R. T. C. S. Hilliard. Alternates—W. H. Hartley, R. W. Millsaps, Josiah Hester and Isaac V. Enochs. The next District Conference is to be held at Brookhaven. Yours,

H. J. HARRIS, Secretary.

Columbus "Played Out."

Ole Bull, Prof. R. B. Anderson, of the Wisconsin University, Senator J. A. Johnson and other prominent Norwegians are raising money to build a monument to Leif Erickson. The first-named gentleman has already given some concerts, and will give a few more before leaving for Norway, the entire proceeds to be devoted to the monument fund. Prof. Anderson, a linguist, thoroughly versed in Scandinavian literature, is to lecture for the benefit of the fund.

The total amount to be raised is $10,000. The monument is to be built in Madison, and dedicated with great ceremony on the one hundredth anniversary of American independence. Ole Bull, Bjornson, the famous Norwegian author and poet, and other celebrities, will be present on the occasion, together with such a host of enthusiastic Norwegians, from this and adjoining States, as were never before seen together outside the borders of Norway.

Leif Erickson, whose name is to be inscribed upon the monument, was a bold navigator who discovered America in the year 1000. That is what the Sagas say, and circumstantial evidence tends to corroborate the Icelandic records. In Washington Irving's valuable Life of Columbus, published in 1827, he says: "If the legends of the Scandinavian voyages be correct, and their mysterious Vinland was the coast of Labrador or the shores of Newfoundland, they had but transient glimpses of the New World, leading to no certain knowledge, and in a little time lost again to mankind."

But at that time there were in Copenhagen untranslated Icelandic manuscripts (Sagas) giving an account of the early discoveries of America. These were translated by the celebrated Prof. Charles Rafn (the best authority on Northern antiquities that ever lived,) and published in 1837. Irving speaks of these Sagas in the appendix to his edition of 1853. But he derived his knowledge of them from Forester's works, and says he had not the means of tracing the story to its original sources. He adds, however: "There is no great improbability that such enterprising and roving voyagers as the Scandinavians may have wandered to the northern shores of America, and, if Icelandic manuscripts can be relied upon as genuine, free from modern interpolation and correctly quoted, they would appear to prove the fact."

We have seen these Sagas, printed in Icelandic, now in the possession of Prof. Anderson, and examined the similes from the original Icelandic manuscript, and can discover no evidences of interpolation. In fact the high character of Prof. Rafn precludes the idea that there is any attempt at imposition. We think the Sagas clearly entitled to be shown in evidence as historical records, and it appears from them that Bjarne Herjulfson, a Norwegian, owner and captain of a vessel, was on his way to Greenland to see his father in 986. The compass was not then invented, and a violent wind drifted him southward through the fog. When it cleared he was in sight of Vinland, but, finding himself too far south, he proceeded northward to Greenland. He subsequently returned to Norway, and was greatly blamed because he did not go ashore at Vinland.

The Norwegians who discovered Iceland in 861, and Greenland in 984, were anxiously looking forward to still more lands in the West. Leif Erickson, son of Erik the Red, who had discovered Greenland, bought Bjarne's ship and enlisted thirty-five men, and, guided by directions from Bjarne, and with the stars for his compass, sailed for America. In the year 1000 he landed at Vinland, and spent the winter at or near Fall river, Massachusetts, where, seven years afterward, Thorlin Karlsevne and his party left the famous "Dighton Writing Rock" inscription. In 1002 there was an expedition to Vinland by Thorwald Erickson, who was pierced by an arrow and died there, and, according to the description of the Saga, it seems that he was buried at Garnet Point. About forty years ago a skeleton in armor was dug up in that vicinity. Longfellow had written a poem about this, and the Archeological Society in Boston sent part of the armor to the celebrated chemist, Berzelius, who analyzed it, finding it to be of the precise composition of Norwegian armor during the tenth century, and it was the same style of manufacture.

The next expedition was under Thorlin, mentioned above, who left the writing on the rock which corresponds with the account in the Sagas. He had his wife and one hundred and fifty-one men, and stayed three years, and Snorre, his son, was born there in 1008. Thorwaldson, the famous sculptor, was a direct descendant of Snorre.

There were various expeditions after this until 1121, when Bishop Erik Upsi was sent to Vinland. The last expedition known was in 1347, when the black plague broke out and reduced the population of Norway from two million to three hundred thousand. This stopped further expeditions.

In addition to the Sagas, "The Dighton Writing Rock," the Newport Tower (which Indians say was built by giants,) and the Skeleton in Armor, we have, in support of the early discovery by Leif Erickson, the writings of Adam of Bremen, an old historian of high authority, who visited the Danish King, Svend-Esthidson, and afterward wrote in Latin an account of the northern nations. He says: "There is a land discovered by many in this ocean (Atlantic) which is called Wineland, because vine which produce very good wine grow there spontaneously; and there grow grain in abundance without being sown. Of this we have knowledge not by fabulous supposition, but by reliable statements of the Danes."

Columbus made a voyage to Iceland in February, 1477, and it is thought by some that he must have learned of Vinland then, as the clergy were Latin scholars, and that he probably knew of the writings of Adam of Bremen.

We understand that a literary gentleman of Minnesota is preparing a work in which he maintains that the three Pinzons, who were with Columbus, had a map of Vinland during the first voyage of Columbus. Leif, the bold Norwegian, deserves a monument. — Madison (Wisconsin) Journal.

To the Board of Trustees of Centenary Female College,

LOCATED AT SUMMERFIELD, ALA.

Your committee, to whom was referred the duty of inquiring into the cause and character of the disease which in June last resulted in suspending the Centenary Female College, at Summerfield, Alabama, beg leave to report that they have performed the duty assigned them, and that they are satisfied that, although several causes, as some suppose, may have contributed to the spread of the disease after it commenced, yet the main cause, together with the prevailing tendency to this disease throughout the country, was the too free use by the young ladies of unmatured fruits, and especially plums. As a precautionary measure, however, the old wooden buildings, which are supposed by some to have contributed to these causes, we have made arrangements to have removed at once, and before the opening of another session. We have also directed that the drainage from the premises be enlarged, and made sufficient to remove all accumulations which would likely infect the premises. The location of Summerfield is high and elevated, and there is no natural local cause of disease, and we feel free to assure the public that they can safely intrust their children to the care and attention of President McVoy, with the perfect assurance that their health and comfort will be as secure as at any other institution in the State. Other institutions were compelled to suspend from a like cause, and still others were greatly embarrassed in their operations; and, to put the matter beyond all contingency, the rooms of the buildings are undergoing thorough renovation and whitewashing at this time, and will be perfectly refitted and dry by the first of September next—a month before the next session opens.

All of which is respectfully submitted. A. H. MITCHELL,

THURSDAY, JULY 17, 1873.

THE MASTER'S CALL.

They tell me a solemn story, but it is not sad to me,
For in its sweet unfolding my Savior's love I see;
They say that at any moment the Lord of life may come
To lift me from this cloud-land into the light of home.

They say I may have no warnings; I may not even hear
The rustling of his garments as he softly draweth near;
Suddenly, in a moment, upon my ear may fall
The summons to leave our homestead, to answer the Master's call.

Perhaps he will come in the noontide of some bright and sunny day,
When, with dear ones all around me, my life seems bright and gay.
Pleasant must be the pathway, easy the shining road,
Up from this dimmer sunlight into the light of God.

Perhaps he will come in the stillness of the mild and quiet night,
When the earth is calmly sleeping 'neath the moon-beam's silvery light;
When the stars are softly shining o'er slumbering land and sea;
Perhaps in the holy stillness the Master will come for me.

I think I would rather hear it, that voice so low and sweet,
Calling me out from the shadows, my blessed Lord to meet;
Up through the glowing splendors of a starry, earthly night,
To "see the King in his beauty," in a land of purer light.

The Southern Review and the Temperance Cause.

MR. EDITOR: It is proposed to consider in the present communication somewhat in detail the grave accusations made by the writer of the ninth article of the last issue of the Southern Review against the adherents of the temperance reform. He first insinuates that they have "debauched" "the moral sense" of the country by "false teaching," and "that political corruption is but one of the consequences which flow from it," and then proceeds to prefer certain charges which, if sustained, would involve them in the contempt of all mankind.

He affirms of temperance teaching that it makes men put the practice of total abstinence from intoxicating liquors in the place of religion, and regard it as the only ground of salvation. Witness the following quotations from his article in relation to temperance men: "They have wisdom which is wiser than the wisdom of God;" "Religion is with them a myth;" "There is no royal road to learning, but they have discovered an easy one to heaven;" "There is but one way whereby we can be saved, and that is by drinking cold water." Now it may be asked: Where or what is the foundation of this stern impeachment? In the creed of what temperance society, in the address of what temperance speaker, or in the writings of what temperance author can it be found? Temperance men in their haste and enthusiasm, as have the ardent advocates of every enterprise, may have given utterance to things which had better remained unsaid; but it is scarcely possible that under any circumstances they could have uttered anything upon which a charge like the one in question could with any propriety be based. It does seem that, when a writer prefers a charge so serious and so damaging as the one in this case, against a large number of his fellow-citizens, justice would require that, however respectable and learned he may be, and however dignified the journal in which his criticisms may appear, he should sustain his assertions by quotations from those authorized by position to speak in their behalf, or from those standard works which have been written by men of culture and character, and which set forth with great force and distinctness the true aims of the reform. These allegations made against temperance men, if they were founded in fact, are sufficient to banish them from Christian society, to bring upon them the detestation of good men, and to demand a prompt and united effort to suppress a vile heresy; yet they rest simply and solely upon the writer's unsupported assertion. One disposed to retort upon him might say that in making this accusation he exhibited, perhaps, somewhat of that "uncharitableness" which, according to him, temperance men regard as mere "dust in the balance in weighing moral character." If he who prepares this communication were allowed to testify, he could say that he has belonged to many temperance societies, that he has heard many temperance speeches, that he has read many temperance publications, and perhaps most of the standard works on the subject, and that he has to hear it advanced for the first time that total abstinence is a substitute for religion, or its duties and requirements. So far from being a substitute for religion, its advocates claim that total abstinence is a real forerunner of religion, that it oftentimes prepares the way for the reception of divine truth, or prevents the obstruction thereof, and that its chief glory lies in this subordinate position. It is in this view that many of the best men in the world have given to it their conscientious and cordial support, and it cannot be shown that they were mistaken in their action. An English prelate of high distinction, Rev. Dr. Stanley, late Bishop of Norwich, made the following important statement on the matter before us: "Few can bear more impartial testimony to the merits of teetotal societies than myself, since for some time I was opposed to them on the supposition that they were visionary and impracticable. I have, however, long since been a convert from conviction, founded on experience and observation, that they are most instrumental in raising thousands and tens of thousands from a degraded profligacy to virtuous and industrious habits, and converting sinners from the ways of vice to those of religion."

Moreover, the writer, in speaking of the temperance movement, says: "It is of New England origin, is infidel in its tendencies, and is calculated to upset the whole Bible scheme for the reformation of mankind;" and of its followers: "The Bible, both in precept and example, they repudiate by acts always, and in their intemperate zeal by words often." Here we have a severe accusation—that the temperance movement is infidel in its tendencies and calculated to upset the Bible scheme of reformation, while temperance men repudiate the Bible, and are therefore practical infidels always in act, and often in word. Does the writer mean to affirm that total abstinence is contrary alike to the precept and example of Scripture, and that the practice of it makes a man outright an infidel, and that to show his belief and confidence in the word of God it is necessary that he should indulge in the use of alcoholic liquors? This seems to be an inference from his remarks far more legitimate than many he has made from the teachings of temperance men. Even he, however, would scarcely go as far as that, especially since he advises a man, if he cannot drink wine in moderation, to abstain from it as his own safety requires it. Then does he intend to teach that temperance men show their infidelity by urging upon others the adoption and practice of total abstinence principles? Perhaps he means to affirm that in his opinion the use of wine, at least as a beverage, is justified by the precept and example of Scripture, and that temperance men, in discountenancing such use so justified, repudiate Scripture teaching and place themselves in the ranks of infidelity. It will not, it is presumed, be declared that the Scriptures anywhere enjoin the moderate use of intoxicants, and that a man in declining to use them at all would be violating a divine command; then it can scarcely be construed into infidelity if it is advised that under the present condition of society, and amid its prevailing habits, entire abstinence should be observed.

It may be that, in the opinion of our writer, temperance men repudiate the Bible in that many of them hold that in the present circumstances of mankind, amid their perverted tastes and the means of gratification, it is a man's Christian duty to abstain from the use of all intoxicating drinks as a beverage. Even if this view were incorrect, and its advocates misconstrued and misapprehended the Scriptures in deriving it therefrom, yet in the judgment of charitable men this could scarcely be made infidelity. It would be a mere misinterpretation, and not in a hurtful direction either; and with this the various denominations charge each other every day, and yet regard each other as brethren and exchange Christian courtesy. But it is not at all certain that it is a misconstruction of the true spirit and intent of the New Testament to affirm that it requires total abstinence of those who profess to be guided by its teachings. The most eminent commentators of our country—Stuart, Barnes, Summers—have regarded it as a Christian duty that men should abstain from the use of alcoholic liquors as a beverage, since this course they practiced and advocated, and to this opinion a large body of evangelical divines subscribe. It is not pretended that the moderate use of these drinks is forbidden in so many words, or by any positive command of the Scriptures; but that is no reason that such use should not be inconsistent with them, for there are many notorious evils which are not specifically named and denounced. The plan of the sacred writers, while naming and forbidding a few evils, is rather to lay down great general principles, and to leave their application in the affairs of life to the conscience and judgment of those to whom they were addressed. Another thing may be said, and perhaps without successful contradiction: that a custom which was admissible in the apostolic day, in the land of Palestine and among the Jewish people, may become wrong in our day, in our land and among our people, with the discoveries which have been made and the new circumstances which invest us.

The charge of infidel tendencies in the temperance movement becomes extraordinary when it is considered that it numbers among its hosts very largely of Christian people; in fact in almost every community they constitute a controlling majority; that its main public advocates have been Christian ministers; that numerous Christian newspapers of high ability have cordially indorsed and promoted it through their columns; that benevolent enterprises designed for the dissemination of Christianity have given it their support, as, for example, the great American Tract Society, which has published a series of tracts designed to advance it; and that numerous official bodies, representing the various Christian denominations on both sides of the Atlantic, have publicly passed resolutions extending to it their sympathy and pledging to it their patronage. If it be true that the temperance movement is "infidel in its tendencies," and that its followers "repudiate" the Bible, then those to whom the oracles of God are specially committed, and who from their positions should always constitute its peculiar champions, have manifested an obtuseness and an infatuation which are truly wonderful. There is not another instance, perhaps, in the records of human society in which men of intellectual vigor, sound learning and high moral worth have so totally misapprehended the nature and bearing of a great movement among the people as, instead of detesting and striving to crush it, cordially to embrace it and energetically to labor in its behalf.

Our writer, in describing the temperance movement, may be regarded as giving the highest expression to his contempt when he declares it to be of "New England origin." Well, New England has been somewhat of a hot-bed for crude notions and fanatic schemes, yet its reputation is scarcely so bad that any enterprise originating there is to be regarded prima facie as infidel and pernicious. Many good things have doubtless originated in that "land of steady habits," and it were folly to reject them merely because of their source. In olden times it was asked: "Can any good thing come out of Nazareth?" and yet our Savior spent his youth and early manhood there, and came forth therefrom to bless and redeem mankind. But it is not so certain that the temperance movement can with propriety be said to have had its origin in New England. It is true that Lyman Beecher and other eminent citizens of the Eastern States rendered to it splendid assistance in its infancy, and therefor are entitled to the warm thanks of posterity; but men of other States were equally engaged, and the American Temperance Society, established in 1826, and the first important association of the kind, had its seat, it is believed, in the State of New York. But whatever section of our country or whatever State had the honor of being its birth-place, yet in its theory and in its practical workings it has been one of the most benign of schemes, and has tended largely to conserve and advance the highest interests of society.

In concluding this communication, I beg leave to introduce a quotation from another reviewer, the famous Thomas DeQuincey, whose views differ widely from those we have been called to combat. He says as follows: "The most remarkable instance of a combined movement in society, which history perhaps will be summoned to notice, is that which has applied itself to the abatement of intemperance. Two vast movements are hurrying into action by velocities continually accelerated—the great revolutionary movement from political causes, concurring with the great physical movement in locomotion and social intercourse from the gigantic power of steam. At the opening of such a crisis, had no third movement arisen of resistance to intemperate habits, there would have been ground of despondency as to the moralization of the human race." In another communication the subject will be resumed. S.

Prayer Universal.

When Adam, the first earthly monarch, awoke from the slumber of nonentity, and, gazing around him, realized the truth that he and his kingdom had just been hurled into existence by the omnific fiat of the eternal I Am, and was then suspended in the arena of entity by the same preserving Power, as the purity of his primeval nature demanded, he acknowledged his dependence upon his Creator, and displayed his gratitude to a kind Benefactor by clasping his hands in fervent prayer to the Elohim of the universe. And after earth's first wedding he, with his blooming bride—earth's first queen, beautiful Eve—"duly at morn and night," in their royal palaces, reared by nature's hand, kneeled and fervently supplicated the throne of their Father, imploring his protecting power—thus held sweet communion with their God. "But how do you know that?" says one. Well, I know they were probationers, which implies a need of preparation for heaven; and as probationers, they being weak, need the aid divine to fit themselves for glory celestial, and as creatures must do homage to the Creator (the angels do this,) if they expect aid they must do the homage of self-abasing supplication, or, it is reasonable to suppose, they would not get it. Since then all of their sons and daughters, save the graceless, thankless, godless ones, in every age and clime, have supplicated for blessings necessary to life the throne, shrine or image of some god, "Jehovah, Jove or Lord." If we pierce the oblivion-clouds that wrap the pathway of the past we see the ancient Syriah importunately imploring blessings of Baal and Ashtoreth; the Egyptians praying to Isis, Osiris and Orus; the Greeks and Romans supplicating the numerous gods of classic Olympus; the Persians or Ghebers prostrating themselves beseechingly at the appearance of the "king of day" in the portals of the orient; the Scandinavian pleading with Wodin, Frea or Thor; the Hindoo calling upon his triune Bramah; and men—the wild red men of Columbian forests—breathing orisons to the "Great Spirit." Thus there seems to be connected with the abstract idea of religion a self-abasing acknowledgment of a superior, supreme Power, to whom alone we must apply for all we have. And as Christianity is the sublimest of all religions, it should be characterized in a specially lofty degree by votaries who pray; in consideration of which St. Paul exhorts: "Pray without ceasing!" or, as we may paraphrase: Oftentimes, orally, oftener muttered, and always be found in a praying spirit.

How many glorious examples of prayer have we before us! All along the emblazoned pathway of revelation we see monuments which speak to us by the power of example across the wastes of ages. "Enoch walked with God" by prayer, and on the wings of prayer flew home, all-embodied, to the glory-land. Noah, on the flood-washed earth, rears an altar, and around its smoking sacrifice gathers his little family, and prays to that God whose guiding hand had carried them safely through that awful catastrophe. Abraham prayed, Moses prayed; David and Solomon, Ezekiel and Daniel—who of those worthies did not? In the thronged temple, at the family altar, in the silent grove, let us pray often! In the depths of earnest hearts, with breathings of fervent desire, let us pray always—"without ceasing." Let our hearts beat the measure, all-tireless, of "Nearer, my God, to Thee!"

Summerfield Schools.

MR. EDITOR: The exercises of the male department, under the control of Prof. Massey, came off on Monday, the twenty-third instant, with great credit to this able teacher and his well-trained pupils. Every one nearly acquitted himself well, but the original speeches possessed special merit—popular subjects, well written, well delivered. This department continues under the control of this very able professor and teacher. Massey is a disciplinarian, a scholar, and withal knows how to teach.

We were sadly disappointed in not having the commencement exercises of the Female College, under the management of its distinguished president, Prof. McVoy. About three weeks before the close of the session the college was visited with an attack of bloody flux (the cause of which cannot be accounted for, as it could not possibly have been local,) and it was thought advisable to send the girls home. Two of these beautiful and lovely girls died, however, and exhibited the influence of religious training and culture in their triumphant deaths. One of these belonged to the graduating class—was the first-honor pupil, a distinction that has been exchanged for honor that cometh not of man, at the right hand of God.

The graduating class was composed of fourteen young ladies, who would have reflected honor on any president and any institution. Never was Centenary College, with all of its prestige and glory, better prepared for a commencement than this year, and it would have placed its able, energetic and successful president in the very front rank of female educators, where he deserves to stand, though comparatively a young man. Upon the whole, this session has been one of the most successful, in all respects, that the institution has enjoyed in its long history of over thirty years; and no doubt, through the unabated efforts of President McVoy, its scores of alumni and many friends, its halls will be filled to overflowing at the beginning of its next session, on the twenty-third of September.

The commencement sermon was preached by Rev. M. S. Andrews, of the Alabama Conference. His subject was the fall and restoration of Peter. This he discussed under two propositions: 1. He showed that Peter enjoyed the favor of God. 2. That he lost that favor and was subsequently restored; each of which he "touched with the hand of a master." His method of treating his subject was simple and easy, his style argumentative, his reasoning direct and plain, his delivery a mixture of the conversational and oratorical, a little fanlty, but quite impressive; the whole sermon thoughtful and religious.

Summerfield possesses many superior advantages as a place to educate boys and girls, a few of which I will just mention, and that's all.

It is near Selma, one of the most flourishing inland towns in the State, and in the center of the State, where five or six railroads that traverse every section of the State concentrate, with eight miles of back line to Summerfield.

It is unsurpassed for health, and has a religious and well-cultivated Methodist population, that is in full sympathy with the schools, and is the residence of seven itinerant preachers.

Board is cheaper here, both in the college and private families, than elsewhere, and fewer temptations to vice and immorality.

The schools are out of debt, with good buildings, and under the management of the very ablest men the land affords, who devote their manhood and talents directly to their work.

It is the only point within the bounds of this Conference where we are fully prepared to educate denominationally and exert the exclusive influence of the Methodist Church.

As denominational education is now the grand idea, and for that purpose place is everything, may Summerfield not be the concentrated point of all our educational interests, both male and female, at no very distant day? The buildings are here.

Plain Thoughts on Plain Texts.

"Reckon yourselves, therefore, to be dead indeed unto sin, and alive unto God, through Jesus Christ our Lord." Fletcher says: "I obeyed the voice of God; I now obey it, and I tell you all, to the glory of his grace and praise of his love, 'I am free from all sin.' Yes, I rejoice to declare it, and to bear witness that I am dead unto sin, and alive unto God, through Jesus Christ, who is my Lord and King. As when you reckon with your creditor, or with your host, and as when you have paid all you reckon yourselves free, so now reckon with God. Jesus hath paid all, and he hath paid for thee—hath purchased thy pardon and holiness. Therefore it is now God's command, 'Reckon thyself dead unto sin,' and thou art alive unto God from this hour. O begin, begin to reckon now; fear not; believe, believe, believe, and continue to believe every moment. So shalt thou continue free; for it is retained, as it is received, by faith alone. And whosoever thou art that perseveringly believest, it will be as a fire in thy bosom, and constrain thee to confess with thy mouth the Lord and King Jesus; and in spreading the sacred flame of love thou shalt still be saved to the uttermost. 'Where sin abounded, grace did much more abound.' How did sin abound? Had it not overspread the whole soul? Were not all your passions, tempers, propensities and affections inordinate and evil? Did not pride, anger, self-will and unbelief all reign in you? And when the Spirit of God strove with you, did you not repel all his convictions and put him far from you? Well, my brethren, 'ye were then the servants of sin, and were free from righteousness; but now, being made free from sin, ye become servants to God,' and holiness shall overspread your whole soul, so that all your tempers and passions shall be henceforth regulated and governed by him who now sitteth upon the throne of your heart, making all things new. They shall therefore all be holy. And as you once resisted the Holy Spirit, so now you shall have power as easily to resist all the subtle frauds or fierce attacks of satan; yea, his suggestions to evil shall be like a ball thrown against a wall of brass—it shall rebound again, and ye shall know what that meaneth. 'The prince of this world cometh, and hath nothing in me.' Who will thus be saved? Who will believe the report? You are only in an improper sense called believers who reject this. Who is a believer? One that believes a few things which his God has spoken? Nay, but one that believes all. Here, then, is the word of the Lord: 'As sin abounded, grace shall much more abound.' As no good thing was in you by nature, so now no evil thing shall remain. Do you believe this, or are you a half believer only? Come; Jesus is offered to thee as a perfect Savior. Take him and he will make thee a perfect saint. O ye half believers, will ye still plead for the murderers of your Lord? Which of these will you hide as a serpent in your bosom? Shall it be anger, pride, self-will or accursed unbelief? O be no longer deceived! Bring these enemies to thy Lord, and let him slay them."

DIED, in Mansfield, Louisiana, June 19, 1873, at the residence of his son-in-law, Rev. John Pipes, Captain M. C. SHAFFER, in the eighty-first year of his age. Long and painful to himself and distressing to his friends was his last illness, but a longer rest hath succeeded. "The righteous hath hope in his death."

DIED, June 12, 1873, COSON GENARD, only child of N. C. and Roxie A. Gibbs, aged thirteen months and twenty-four days.

Thus one of earth's sweetest little buds has withered in disease, as a flower by the untimely frost. And though lost to earth, it blooms again on the shores of life's fair river.

PLEASANT HILL, La., June 24, 1873.

BRO. JOHN GARROWAY died in Perry county, Mississippi, on the twenty-third of March, 1873. He was a native of South Carolina, and emigrated to this country in its earliest settlement. For more than fifty years he was a member of the church. His house was the home of the itinerant preachers, many of whom, no doubt, will recollect the little house on Black creek, known as the Garroway church. His correct Christian walk elicited this remark from many of his acquaintances: "I never heard anybody say any harm of John Garroway." He lived for fifty years with the wife of his youth in harmony and affection. He was a little more than eighty years old when he died. Peaceful and serene were his last moments. E. J. TAYLOR.

BENJAMIN FRANKLIN PAMELL died in Summit on the second of May, 1873. He was born in Muscova county, Georgia, November 3, 1845; moved to Louisiana in 1867; thence to Texas, and thence to Mississippi, where he died.

In the early days of his life he united with the church. In after life he was driven from the path of piety, perhaps, by the bad influences of a soldier's life and frequent changes of residence. He suffered long from ulcerated sore throat; talked but little during his illness about religion; listened patiently to what his friends said to him on the subject of his soul's salvation; thanked them for their advice and prayers, and bore his suffering toward the last with marked patience. He has left a sad widow, mother and father, whom we pray God may bless and guide to a home of eternal rest. B. JONES.

GEORGIE CROOKS, infant son of Captain James and —— Crooks, died, June 16, after an illness of seventeen days. He was born January 30, 1871. Georgie was a very promising, winsome child—the joy of the household to which God had given him for a little season. How the mother that nursed him and watched over him, day-time and night-time, for the more than two years she was permitted to retain him—oh, how she will miss his waking smile and prattle in the morning, and how, in the evening, her arms will feel after him to nestle him to sleep! But be comforted, mother—it is well with the child. "Not lost, but gone before." Remember who it is that gathers the lambs with his arms and carries them in his bosom. Know you not that Jesus takes our little darlings to himself, that of such he may make a part of the society of heaven, and that where our treasure is there may our hearts be also? J. W.

SHREVEPORT, La., June 21, 1873.

FINAL RECORD.—M. D. KIMBROUGH.—The subject of this notice was born in Surry county, North Carolina, August 26, 1800; married Miss Elizabeth Dowtilt, in the State of South Carolina, December 28, 1826; moved to Macon county, North Carolina, and there resided three years; then removed to Anderson county, South Carolina; resided there five years, and then emigrated to Greene county, Alabama, and, after living here for thirty-nine years, he quietly and peacefully died, in the full triumphs of the Christian's faith, on the seventeenth of February, 1873, aged seventy-two years, five months and twenty-one days. The deceased was for many years the subject of sore and deep affliction; and although not until in the year 1848 a professer of the Christian religion, yet in the wise economy of God's grace, under the efficient ministry of Dennis B. Lyne, he embraced faith in Jesus, and attached himself to the Methodist Episcopal Church South, in which he lived a consistent member until the day of his death. He was most beloved by those who knew him best, and was unassuming, plain and practical in all his dealings with his fellow-men, and conscientious in the discharge of his duties toward God. So at last, when his race was run and his work was done, and his dissolution was inevitable, he said: "There is not an intervening cloud between me and home; my way is as clear as a sunbeam;" and thus he passed away from labor to his eternal home in heaven. J. G. S.

LEWIS R. DAVIS was born in Autauga county, Alabama, November 15, 1829, and died at his home in Issaquena county, Mississippi, May 13, 1873.

He belonged to the best class of our laymen within the bounds of the Alabama Conference. Before the late war he was rich, and held what belonged to him subject to the order of the church and her ministers. He was the brother-in-law of the lamented Robert A. Baker, and his equal in liberality and generous hospitality. In the year 1870 he removed, with the wreck of his broken fortune, to the State of Mississippi. The writer is informed that he changed the place of his location twice, and each time became superintendent of a Sabbath school, which grew and flourished under his management.

It does not need many words to embalm Lewis Davis in the memory of those who knew him. A scholarly Christian gentleman, he met good fortune and adversity with unvarying placidity and self-possession. Out of the deeps and through the darkness he has buffetted the billows to his permanent estate—to his ultimate rest. After a brief but very painful illness, he died in the forty-fourth year of his age, beloved and lamented by very many persons, to whom he was helper and friend and guide. How are the princes "fallen upon their high places!" Baker and Goodman and Pratt and Davis, and a host of others, has God taken lately from the bounds of the old Alabama Conference.

How poor they leave us! How they enrich our inheritance beyond the river! "Absent from the body, present with the Lord."

JOSIAH BARKER.

SARAH ANN PURSER was born in Pulaski county, Georgia, September 14, 1812; was married December 24, 1829; professed religion and joined the Methodist Church July, 1841; died at the residence of her husband, Charles Purser, near Gaston, Sumpter county, Alabama, February 6, 1873, aged sixty years, four months and twenty-two days.

In the life and death of Sister Purser the excellency and power of our holy religion was beautifully and forcibly exhibited. From childhood's tender years her heart desired and sought for "the more excellent way." In all the relations of life she was most exemplary. To her husband she was, in truth, "a helpmate"—"a price far above rubies;" to her children a firm, faithful and loving mother. They "call her blessed." As a neighbor she was scriptural. In brief, she "walked with God." Her life was a triumph, and so, pre-eminently, her death. Several years previous to her death she was a constant sufferer. All her afflictions she bore with Christian resignation. The approach of her dissolution was viewed serenely. No anxiety filled her soul, no trembling shook her feeble frame as she faced the last enemy. I made frequent visits to her sick-room. I asked her definitely of her prospects. She replied: "I am ready, waiting to go when the Master calls;" "The old ship of Zion has carried many thousands home, and, thank God, she will carry me." When she felt the hours of her life numbered she called to her bedside her family, and gave to each a parting word and blessing, beseeching them to be faithful to the end. She requested all present to sing The Old Ship of Zion, and during the singing she kept time with her hands. The last utterance which fell from her lips was: "Praise the Lord." Fit expression for this sacred and solemn hour. As requested, after the power of speech was gone she raised her hands in token that victory was still with her. C. B. DUBOSE.

MARTHA TINSLEY was born in Jones county, Georgia, January 16, 1803; married to John Tinsley September 9, 1817, and died of pneumonia, in Kemper county, Mississippi, March 19, 1873. Her maiden name was Bonner. She was brought up by pious Methodist parents. She was converted and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church. She was consecrated to God, and realized the fulfillment of the promise: "My grace is sufficient for you." She suffered many privations, having moved from Georgia to a new-settled part in Alabama, and from thence to Mississippi, during which time she heard but few sermons; but she was faithful, walking in the fear of the Lord, and lived to see husband, children and many grandchildren converted and on the way to heaven.

The memory of a character so consistent, a life so full of good works and godly counsel, ought to be cherished by the church. Religion controlled her whole life, as seen in the varied fortunes which befell her in domestic and social life, in her zeal for the church, in her kind offices to the poor, and in her hospitalities to those whose privilege it was to visit her—the gentle spirit which won the confidence and love of the young, and the meek remonstrance which checked the resentment of the old. In time of prosperity she indulged her benevolent nature in generous giving. When war and adversity came her lavish hand still bestowed as God gave her ability.

In her last illness, which lasted but five days, she suffered so much that she talked but little, but prayed often for a spirit of resignation, that she might unmurmuringly suffer his will in whose service she had spent upward of seventy years. After an acquaintance of six years in the relation of pastor, I think I risk nothing in saying that she was one of the most holy women I ever knew. I have been encouraged by her counsel, and blessed by her prayers and praises. In the brief sickness that terminated her existence the same expressions of faith in God, a spirit of resignation to his will, and her hope of heaven, were characterized by the same quiet modesty and calm firmness peculiar to her in health. She died in peace; yet, her last words were: "I am happy! I am happy!" JAMES M. GANN.

I KNOW of thousands of parents who have received from God a child, and then they turn the young immortal into a dressmaker's doll! As if God had not made the little creature beautiful enough, they must overload it with silks and laces, and then torture its freedom into the thongs and screws of arbitrary fashion. This overdressing of the body strikes through into the heart. How can a stop be put to the crop of fops and fashionists if children are to be trained into foppery and coxcombry from their cradles? How can our children be taught self-denial and spiritual-mindedness while under the artificial trappings of pride and extravagance?—Guyler.

Wesley and Episcopal Methodism.

Our Protestant Episcopal brethren are peculiarly unfortunate in construing Methodist history. For some years their leading men in England, and also in this country, have given up the old charge that Wesley did not design the separate and episcopal organization of American Methodism. The proofs that he did so design, and did actually "ordain" a presbyter of the Anglican church (Dr. Coke) to be Bishop in America, and to organize a Methodist episcopate here, are so overwhelming that no student of the facts can gainsay them without sacrificing his self-respect. The only course left to the prelatical critics was to attribute Wesley's conduct to the mental infirmity of his old age. This, however, is silenced by the citation of his own testimony, given years earlier, in favor of the very theory upon which he founded American Methodist episcopacy.

The elder critics stood dumbfounded before these facts, and the subject seemed generally dropped. But a new generation of "churchmen" have come up and have seized upon the old objections as new discoveries, and really seem to be unaware that they have been utterly refuted long ago. For some time Protestant Episcopal journalists and their correspondents have been boldly affirming that Wesley never designed the Methodist episcopate, and quoting his famous letter to Asbury against the title Bishop as proof. They appear not to know that, for some five years before this letter was written, American Methodism had borne the legal style of "The Methodist Episcopal Church," with Wesley's full sanction; that the "Minutes" or "Discipline" giving it this title was printed, under his own auspices, in London; that this Discipline contained the formula of the Anglican church for the ordination of Bishops (besides those for deacons and elders,) inserted by Wesley himself in the book, changing the personal title Bishop to the synonymous title, "Superintendent;" and that he did not write his objurgatory letter till (after three years) the personal title of Bishop was given to Coke and Asbury. His objections were not to the thing, but to the title, and he objected to this because of the adventitious and arrogant dignities and pretensions which were usually associated with it. Nothing is clearer in Methodist history than that this is the true, the only possible construction of the case. And yet never was this stale and often refuted error more reiterated than just now, mingled also with other and equally egregious blunders. The Church Journal says: "Like most other Methodists, Dr. Whedon has accepted the superstition of his denomination that Mr. Wesley 'founded' Methodist episcopacy. He will be a little bewildered, we doubt not, at the discovery in store for him, that the said episcopacy was founded in the city of Baltimore, by a number of preachers who voted Dr. Coke and Mr. Asbury Bishops, under the lead of Dr. Coke himself, and that their next proceeding was to cut the connection with Mr. Wesley altogether by leaving his name 'off the minutes.'"

Now this last alleged fact had nothing whatever to do with the question of Coke's and Asbury's title, or organization of the church. It occurred before Wesley wrote his famous letter, and before the personal title of Bishop was given to the superintendents. So far as it bears at all on the episcopal question, it tends to confirm our preceding statements. Wesley had just designated two new men to the episcopal office as associates with Coke and Asbury. The Conference suspected that this act was in view of Wesley's withdrawing Asbury for the work in England. They were not willing to lose so important a man, and for this reason they declined to confirm or ordain the new men, and rescinded a former declaration of submission to his advice. The following is the record of the case, given in the History of the Methodist Episcopal Church, volume 2, page 496:

"It was also in this year (1787) that Garrettson and Whatcoat were appointed to the episcopal office by Wesley, but not elected by the Conference. The reasons of Garrettson's failure have already been stated. The chief reason for declining the election of Whatcoat was the apprehension of the Conference that if he were elected Wesley would recall Asbury to England. Coke debated the matter, contending that the Conference was bound to obey Wesley by its pledge in 1784, that 'during Mr. Wesley's life we acknowledge ourselves his sons in the gospel, ready, in matters belonging to church government, to obey his commands.' The argument was logical, but the pledge was unfortunate, and the Conference pleaded that 'as they had made the engagement of their own accord, and among themselves, they had a right to depart therefrom when they pleased, seeing it was not a contract made with Mr. Wesley, or any other person, but an agreement among themselves.' It was also contended that Wesley's distance rendered him unable to judge of their wants and men. The Conference wrote him an affectionate letter, inviting him to visit America, but took the precaution to omit their former pledge from the printed minutes, and thereby displaced his name from them."

Here, then, it was not Coke or the Bishops that displaced Wesley's name on account of their antecedent episcopal proceedings. Coke, who is said by Protestant Episcopal critics to have been responsible for our episcopal organization, was actually opposed to the omission of Wesley's name; he favored the new nominations by Wesley; he was the bearer of them from England. We repeat, the Church Journal has egregiously blundered, and has made "confusion worse confounded" of the matter.

Wesley's name appeared in the old minutes only in the above pledge; by the elimination of the passage his name disappeared from the book. The fact hurt the good old man's feelings. But one Conference, however, intervened with the omission; at the second after it, the venerable name was reinserted, "though not with the original pledge of the ministry to abide by his authority in matters of church government."

We again appeal to the consciences of our Protestant Episcopal brethren against these continued misrepresentations. It certainly is not too much to demand that they study the recorded facts of such cases before assailing a large and devoted body of their fellow-Christians. If they study them they cannot mistake them. If it is a crime to slander an individual Christian, how much worse is it to falsely accuse a whole Christian communion! Yet for nearly a hundred years these old slanders have, ever and anon, been repeated. Methodist.

Literature and Dogma.*

The above is the title of what may well be regarded as an extraordinary book. We have in these days books written in vindication of the baldest skepticism. We have books the avowed purpose of which is to save men from the tyranny and even demoralization of scriptural text and religious creed. But the above is the first book wherein an attempt is made to save the Bible and religion for men by the denial of a personal God. It is the first time, we venture to say, that man ever thought of appealing to the Bible to vindicate his atheism. But this is just the position of Matthew Arnold in this amazing book of his. He starts out now with the statement that there is now a pretty general rejection of the Bible by the masses of the people. Mr. Arnold greatly regrets this, for with the rejection of the Bible there follows a rejection of religion and a general breaking down of virtue in the individual and the social life. The cause of this universal apostasy is in the current theology of churches and ministers. They start with the assumption "that there is 'a great personal First Cause, the moral and intelligent Governor of the universe,' and that from him the Bible derives its authority." This assumption the people, "rude and hard reasoners" as they are, will never accept. Ministers and churches persist in putting the Bible on this unverifiable basis, and the people reject both the assumption and the Bible itself. Now, to save the Bible, we must recast religion. We must put the Bible on a verifiable basis, and then "the new religion of the Bible the people will receive." Get rid of all dogma and idea looking toward a personal God. Start with the truth that God is simply "the eternal power that makes for righteousness," and you can then get on. "God is really, at bottom, a deeply-moved way of saying conduct or righteousness." "Trust in God" is trust in the law of conduct; "delight in the eternal" is, in a deeply-moved way of expression, "the happiness we all feel to spring from conduct." Here, according to Mr. Arnold, is something verifiable. There is no assumption about this. A man can make trial of it, and prove to himself its reality. And this God, as an abstract idea, as an eternal power that makes for righteousness, is just what the Bible teaches. Mr. Arnold says of it that it was "Israel's master-feeling," that it was "Israel's conception of God." And so through two hundred pages he makes use of the language of the Bible, which is "fluid, passing and literary," to give color to this idea. What Mr. Arnold has to say of righteousness, of delight in righteousness, of the reward of righteousness, is often impressive in the extreme, and his most felicitous use of Scripture language gives a mighty and often startling power to his appeals. We say "amen" to it all. "Righteousness tendeth to life." But Mr. Arnold overturns his whole theory of salvation when he adults, what all have to admit, that to know this truth, that righteousness tendeth to life, is easy enough, but to realize it in one's life is the hard, difficult thing.

That is the trouble. It was a difficulty which the Grecian master saw in his far-off day. He spoke of virtue as impressively as Mr. Arnold does. He saw that the mere knowledge of it was worthless. He longed for just that which Mr. Arnold rejects—"for a God who would come to earth and show men how to live it." Mr. Arnold throws aside all supernatural help, all divine interfering and saving grace. He has caught at the absurd idea, exploded long ago, and exploded a thousand times, that a knowledge of the good and true is all that is needed to redeem the race.

We doubt if this book is capable of doing any discriminating reader a bit of harm. It is learned, it is eloquent, it is in places solemn and impressive. It is marred, however, by exhibitions of bad spirit, and its assaults upon some of the most exalted and the most venerated doctrines of the church in the way of satirical witticisms is all unworthy of the son of such a believing, saintly father as this author can recall.—Watchman and Reflector.

A Temptation.

Rev. James Gwin, of the Tennessee Conference, and father of United States Senator Gwin, of California, was an able and eloquent preacher, and a man of strong religious convictions. Once, when at a camp meeting, where he was the presiding elder, he came to his wife on Monday morning, some two or three days before the meeting was expected to close, and said: "Wife, get ready; we must go home this morning."

Mrs. Gwin, greatly surprised, said: "Mr. Gwin, go home! Why must we?"

"Because the hogs are in our potato patch, and will soon destroy them, and, with our family, we are not in circumstances to lose our potatoes; we must go home and take care of them."

So, after the fashion of those days, they mounted their horses. Sister Gwin was manifestly reluctant to go; so she rode a little way behind her husband, in a hesitating state of mind. Thus in silence they rode on a mile or two, Sister Gwin still pondering the matter. At last she said: "Mr. Gwin, who told you the hogs were in the potato patch?"

The old gentleman raised up and paused, and pondered a moment, then, as the light seemed to dawn upon him, exclaimed: "The devil, I reckon. Let's go back," and back they went.

He says he does not know whether he ever did more good in any three days in his life than he did at that meeting. He dismissed hogs and potatoes entirely from his mind. When the meeting was over they returned home, and found that the hogs had not been in the potato patch at all. Nothing had gone wrong; nothing had been lost. It taught him a lesson of watchfulness, and increased his trust in the gracious care of God. Galveston Christian Advocate.

THE FOXES' TAILS.—A quaint Scotch minister was given somewhat to exaggerating in the pulpit. His clerk reminded him of its ill effects upon the congregation. He replied that he was not aware of it, and wished the clerk, the next time he did it, to give him a cough by way of a hint. Soon after he was describing Samson's tying the foxes' tails together. He said: "The foxes in those days were much larger than ours, and they had tails twenty fut long?" "Ahem!" came from the clerk's desk. "That is," continued the preacher, "according to their measurement; but by ours they were fifteen fut long." "Ahem!" louder than before. "But, as you may think this is extraordinary, we'll just say they were ten fut." "Ahem! ahem!" still more vigorously. The parson leaned over the pulpit, and, shaking his finger at the clerk, said: "You may cough there all the night lang, mon; I'll nae tak' off a fut more. Would ye hae the foxes wid nae tails at a'?"

Scientific.

THE PROBLEM OF THE DIAMOND. The chemistry and mineralogy of the diamond has for a long time been a subject of great and curious interest. It is one of the familiar facts of science that diamond is composed of the same kind of matter as charcoal, coke, and the substance known under the name of graphite, plumbago or black lead. In fact all of these bodies, when burned in oxygen gas, are converted into carbonic acid and are shown to be pure carbon. The conversion of one of these forms of carbon into the other, and especially of the commoner ones into the precious gem diamond, has long engaged the attention of chemists; but without success so far as the latter is concerned. It has, however, been found possible, by various processes in the laboratory, to convert ordinary charcoal into graphite, but only by indirect means. Thus, for example, when combined with nitrogen and an alkaline metal, to form a cyanid, the decomposition of the latter at a high temperature, in the presence of a fused alkali and an oxydizing agent like niter, liberates the carbon in the form of graphite. Again, molten cast iron holds in solution carbon, derived from the fuel in the furnace, a portion of which sometimes separates from the iron in cooling in the shape of crystalline plates of graphite. The elements boron and silicon, which are closely related to carbon, have been obtained in crystalline forms related to diamond by processes involving a very high temperature; but this, it has long been asserted, destroys diamond, transforming it into graphite or into a coal-like matter, so that the hopes of obtaining diamonds by any such process would seem to be negatived. Not long since, however, it was announced that the change of diamond by heat was only apparent. Diamonds which, by exposure to the prolonged heat of a gas blow-pipe, had apparently been converted into a black, coal-like substance were found to be only coated over with a deposit of carbon from the flame, and, the crust being removed, the gem was found to be still unchanged. Very lately, however, Gustaf Rose, of Berlin, has reinvestigated the matter. A diamond may be partially burned in oxygen gas without changing the remainder. The slow melting or dissolving of the gem which takes place in this process develops, however, on its surface regular depressions, which are related to the crystalline form of the mineral, and represent one of its secondary geometrical forms. If the air be excluded the diamond undergoes no change at the temperature of melting cast iron or in the greatest heat of a porcelain furnace. At a higher temperature, however—such as that produced in a Siemens gas-furnace, where pure wrought iron is molten—the diamond begins to suffer change and is converted into graphite. Rose, moreover, has found that crystalline graphite is a substance less combustible than diamonds. Its resistance to combustion, as is well known, is so great that melting-pots for the steel-maker are made of it. The origin of graphite in nature has been a subject of much speculation. The free carbon of the older crystalline rocks is in almost if not in all cases found in the form of graphite, and Dr. Sterry Hunt, in his studies of these oldest rocks—the so-called Laurentian series of the Adirondacks—has pointed out that the graphite not only occurs in beds, but crystallized in veins under such conditions as to lead to the conclusion that the carbon was taken into solution and deposited again, precisely like the various spars and minerals with which it is associated in the veinstones. The origin and mode of formation of the diamond is, however, a question still involved in doubt and obscurity, and this is increased by the singular fact that it has never yet been found in its original bed or native rix. The ruby, the sapphire, the emerald, the topaz, the hyacinth, and, in fact, every other crystalline mineral known, has been found imbedded in some veinstone or rock, where it was evidently formed; and if we find these gems in sand or gravel, as is the case in India or in Brazil, we have no doubt that they come from the wearing down of these rocks—a process in which the harder crystals have escaped, though often not without a partial abrasion of their surfaces. The most diligent search has, however, failed to detect the diamond in any such rock. The well-known desire of mineralogists and geologists to get some clew to the original associations of the diamond has even stimulated fraud, and diamonds have been ingeniously cemented into cavities among crystals of quartz in such manner as to suggest that the original matrix of the gem had been discovered. In a specimen of this kind from Brazil, which the writer saw, the application of a solvent showed that the diamonds were only held in their place by some artificial cement, and the precious specimen was at once deprived of its scientific value. A year or two since mineralogists were therefore greatly gratified to hear that a Russian mineralogist, Von Jeremejew, had solved the problem. It is well known that diamonds are found in the sands of the Urals, and this observer declared that he had found the matrix of the germ in the mineral known as xanthophyllite, a crystalline foliated mica-like silicate, which is found in that region, and which he declared to be full of microscopic diamonds. There was nothing at first sight improbable in this. Crystals of imbedded minerals are by no means uncommon. Thus the mica of Haddam, Connecticut, sometimes incloses small and beautiful crystals of garnet, and elsewhere tourmaline crystals are found similarly imbedded. Small specimens of the precious mineral were distributed among mineralogists, mounted on slides for the microscope, and the writer was permitted to feast his eyes upon what, under a high magnifying power, seemed to be numerous, well-defined and brilliant crystals of diamond, imbedded in the transparent xanthophyllite. But alas! for the delusions of the microscope when in unskilled hands or when looked into only by uncritical eyes. We have known minute air-bubbles to be mistaken for entozoa by too credulous physiologists, who anxiously sought the latter by the aid of the instrument; and we are now informed that the minute diamonds of Von Jeremejew are not more substantial. Prof. Knop, who has lately submitted the supposed diamond-bearing xanthophyllite of the Urals to a chemical and microscopical examination, asserts that they have no existence, and that the forms supposed to be diamonds are small empty cavities in the mineral, from which previously existing crystals of some other substance than diamond has been removed by solution; and he has, moreover, succeeded in producing the same appearance by submitting what seemed homogeneous portions of the mineral to the action of an acid, which removed the imbedded and soluble crystals. The diamonds of all parts of the world are, as is well known, found in gravel or sand, sometimes recemented into a rocky mass. But they are associated with various other crystalline minerals—such as tourmaline, etc.—evidently derived from the ruins of crystalline rocks; and we may confidently expect that sooner or later the true matrix of the diamond will be found in a crystalline rock. It should be said that, although diamonds have been found in Brazil imbedded in a micaceous sandstone, this is regarded as only a reformed and cemented rock.—Independent.

ONE rainy Sunday a number of strangers crowded into Surrey chapel for shelter, whereupon the eccentric Rowland Hill said: "Some people are blamed for making religion a cloak; but I don't think those are much better who make it an umbrella."

HE THAT is contented with just grace enough to get to heaven and escape hell, and desires no more, may be sure he hath none at all, and is far from being made partaker of the divine nature.

A MINISTER having remarked that "there would be a nave in the new edifice the society was erecting," an old lady said "she knew the person to whom he referred."

Religious Intelligence.

THERE are now nearly 600 children in the six Sunday schools of Cawnpore, India. Five of the schools are native, and the sixth is English.

THE first Young Men's Christian Association in this country was organized less than twenty-five years ago. There are now more than 800 similar organizations.

THE First Presbyterian church at Orange, New Jersey, is going to support a lady missionary in Canton, and the church at Bloomfield will also send one to some point in Africa. Which one of the Reformed churches shall we say are going to do as much for either of the missions of our church?

THE diminution of theological students in Germany has begun to attract serious attention. Berlin, which counted 370 students ten years ago, has only 214 now; the six evangelical faculties of the ancient kingdom, which then counted 1,062 students, now muster only 625.

BRAHMA TOPPLING.—"The Hindoos are learning everywhere that an idol is nothing, and that bathing in the Ganges cannot cleanse away sin. While the vested interests of idolatry are of enormous value, while Brahmin families may be counted by millions, while the Hindoo system dates back long before the coming of Christ, and is a most formidable antagonist; yet even Hindooism, so powerful, so rich, so ancient, is giving way at every point." A recent India statement places the number of communicants in the churches at 50,000, and puts their annual contributions for religious objects as high as $100,000. The number of missionaries in India is 580, and the native helpers more than 2,000.

THE forty-eighth annual meeting of the American Tract Society was held May 7. Reports showed the whole number of volumes issued during the year, 62; other publications, 130. Six periodicals are published regularly, two of which are in German. They are low in price, excellent in matter, and nearly all self-supporting. Receipts for the year, in donations and legacies, $116,873.01; sales, $426,887.55; making with balance in the treasury, and balance from rent fund and building loan, $566,629.42. Expended in manufacturing books and tracts, $234,469.69; manufacturing and issuing periodicals, $148,323.80; colporteurs, agencies and depositories, $107,382.82; district secretaries, $9,671.22; appropriations for foreign and pagan lands, $7,364.06; all other expenses, $57,508.34; total, $564,710.93; balance on the treasury, $1,918.49. Nearly 75,000,000 pages of printed matter have been distributed gratuitously, and 274 colporteurs have been employed.

THE eighteenth meeting of the Southern Baptist Convention was held at Mobile, Alabama, commencing May 8. The Rev. J. P. Boyce, D. D., of South Carolina, was elected president. The receipts of the Board of Foreign Missions were $52,023.82, of which $22,263 were for the chapel in Rome. These receipts were double the average of the last six years. Dr. Jeter had not yet succeeded in buying a mission-house at Rome. Dr. Coote had been dismissed from the mission. The Rev. Dr. G. B. Taylor had been appointed missionary to Italy, and was expecting to sail at an early day. The board have in that country seven missionary stations, with a membership of 277. They have also in China 15 missionaries, 20 native assistants, four churches and 256 members, and in Africa eight stations, ten preachers and teachers. The African missions are, however, suspended now, on account of difficulties among the native tribes.

THE report of the Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church gives the following summaries of missionaries and members:

Among these missions are 439 local preachers; 560 churches, worth $1,944,250; and 253½ parsonages, worth $66,705. The missionary collections were $23,733.47.

REV. JOHN P. WILLIAMSON, missionary of the Presbyterian Board laboring among the Dakotas, urges in his report (received March 2) the necessity for more extended missionary efforts among the Indians. The four largest Sioux agencies have neither missionary nor teacher. These are Whitstone (15,000 Indians,) Fort Peck (8,000 Indians,) Red Cloud (6,000 Indians,) and Grand River (6,000 Indians.) With Episcopal, Methodist and Catholic agents, Mr. Williamson writes that for awhile he quieted his conscience by saying that the denominations nominating the agents were called upon to preach the gospel in these agencies; but the fact that the Presbyterian, in connection with the American Board, is better prepared than other societies to labor among the Dakotas, because both of their books already issued and their greater experience in this particular field, seems to indicate that the work of evangelizing these heathen should be theirs. Two years ago the Catholics sent missionaries to Grand River agency, whose agent they nominate; but closed the mission at the end of a year, asserting that the Indians were too wild to receive the gospel, and that the missionaries must wait until they became more civilized. Mr. Williamson urges that in both Grand River and Fort Peck agencies missionary work should be entered on at once. The Dakotas number 40,000, being the largest Indian tribe in our country; and the Assiniboines, speaking the same language, number from 10,000 to 15,000. So that the advantage of numbers, which is not felt in laboring among other tribes, tells effectually upon the Dakota work.

WOMAN'S FOREIGN MISSIONARY SOCIETY.—Annual Meeting of the Executive Committee.—The committee met in St. Paul's church, Cincinnati, on Wednesday, May 14, and was called to order by Mrs. G. E. Dougherty, of Cincinnati. After appropriate religious services by Mrs. Linville, of Washington city, Mrs. L. D. McCabe, of Delaware, Ohio, was elected permanent president. Twenty-one delegates from seven branch societies, the full number allowed, were present. Mrs. R. R. Meredith, of Cincinnati, was chosen secretary, and Miss Belle Leonard, of St. Louis, assistant. The anniversary of the Trinity branch was held in the evening, and Mrs. A. Lowrey, of Cincinnati, Miss Fannie Hillman, of Troy, New York, and Mrs. Skidmore, of New York city, delivered addresses, at the conclusion of which Rev. D. H. Moore, the pastor, asked for a collection, which very soon amounted to $550. Mrs. R. R. Meredith read the report, in substance as follows: "Our society's existence dates only four years back. The first year nearly 100 auxiliaries were organized. The second the number increased to 614. The third 1,083. This year we report 1,307, with an aggregate membership of 38,452. The first year our receipts were $7,000, the second year $22,000, the third year $48,500, and this year $54,920.32. We have six missionaries in India—Misses Thoburn and Tinsley in Lucknow; Misses Swain, Sparkles and Putz in Bareilly; and Miss Blackmer in Moradabad. We support 150 girls at the Bareilly Orphanage, and have erected a hospital building at Bareilly, and sustained schools and Zenana work in 24 stations. In China we have six missionaries. The Misses Woolston at Foochow, Mrs. Porter and Brown at Pekin, and Mrs. Hong and Howe at Kin Kray. We have also supported a large amount of school work in these three cities, and have sent forward money for a new school building at Foochow, and for a missionaries' home and school at Pekin." The following estimates were made for the coming year: New England branch, $10,018; New York, $12,288; Northwestern, $12,850; St. Louis, $4,084; Central, $5,940; Cincinnati, $8,600; Baltimore, $3,280. Total, $57,060.

THE correspondent of the London Times who went post-haste to Rome, says the Independent, expecting to be present at the election of a new Pope, writes an interesting letter with reference to affairs in that city, both at the Vatican and in the Parliament houses. The Pope's malady is epilepsy, and, though he has recovered from his present danger, his health is evidently precarious. The Times correspondent says that his successor will surely be an Italian, and inclines to the opinion that Cardinal Rinio Sforza, Archbishop of Naples, is the coming pontiff. From other sources we get the rumor that the Pope has recommended Cardinal Bonaparte. The religious corporations bill, which has passed the Italian Parliament by a small majority, provides for the secularization of the property of 52 monastic orders in Rome. The government takes possession of the buildings which these orders have occupied hitherto, and compromises by consenting that the "generals" of the orders shall receive a pension from the state, amounting for the whole of them to $80,000 yearly. It is also agreed, by way of courtesy, that these "generals" shall continue to occupy part of their present residences; but this latter provision was only made in favor of the present heads during their lifetime and their continuance in office. The correspondent says: "The 52 monastic orders in Rome are as fully and absolutely suppressed as if all their members had been put to death and their houses burnt to the ground. As one after another the few feeble old men who are now their 'generals' disappear from the world's stage, the orders will have no fixed or known habitation outside the Vatican; and, if they continue to exist, it will only be as part of the Pope's spiritual household. With respect to their pensions, the clause very adroitly provides that the amount is not to be paid to them singly; but that it is to be handed to the Holy See, as an increase of the Pope's own endowment. As, however, the Pope has hitherto consistently refused to receive any endowment at the hands of the Italian government, it has been enacted that the 400,000 francs voted for the support of the generals and other heads of orders shall be intrusted to a board, charged to administer the fund for their benefit till such time as a better understanding with the Court of the Vatican may become practicable."

A MAN once took a piece of white cloth to a dyer to have it dyed black. He was so pleased with the result that after a time he went to him with a piece of black cloth and asked to have it made white. But the dyer answered: "A piece of white cloth is like a man's reputation: it can be dyed black, but you cannot make it white again."

COMMAND thy temper, lest it command thee.

Centenary College Commencement.

The annual sermon was preached by Rev. Dr. Winfield, of Arkansas, in the chapel of the college, on Sunday, July 6, at eleven A. M. As we did not reach Jackson until Monday morning we are unable to speak of the sermon from our own knowledge, but we were informed that it was good, and delivered to a large congregation. On Monday night the exercises of the preparatory department took place. The boys acquitted themselves well in speeches and dialogues, and, although the exercises were long, they grew better and better to the last. An excellent band from Clinton enlivened and varied the exercises on this and on the subsequent occasions.

On Tuesday night we had original speeches from the members of the literary societies. The addresses of the young men evinced considerable thought and cultivation, and their declamation was creditable to all concerned. We reserve our opinion as to which society bore off the palm. On Wednesday, the great day of the feast, the only graduate, Eugene G. Miller, son of our esteemed brother, Rev. A. G. Miller, of Jackson, Louisiana, delivered an address on "The Men the Times Demand," and also the valedictory, performing his rather trying and double duties most handsomely and satisfactorily. We were gratified to learn that this young man, the first fruits of the reuascent college, proposes to enter the traveling ministry at the coming session of the Louisiana Conference. The baccalaureate by President Andrews was a finished production, practical, discriminative and convincing. The last item in the programme was the address to the literary societies, by Rev. C. K. Marshall, D. D., of Vicksburg, Mississippi. Mauger his own protest to the contrary, we thought the doctor came well up to the demands of the hour. The address was characterized by the humor, pathos and wealth of thought and illustration for which he is so widely celebrated. And then when all was done, as we supposed, Dr. Winfield came to the front with a speech, and Dr. Tudor also with another, and Bishop Keener was up for a brief space, and then all dissolved and went out like an aurora that had been growing more bewilderingly bright up to the very point where it fades and melts into the common sky.

There were two sessions daily of the board of trustees. Twelve members, we believe, were present, and the business affairs were carefully attended to. Bishop Keener is president of the board, and he rarely nods when presiding. The condition of the college is every way improving, and, although much remains to be done, it is manifest that a great deal has been accomplished during the past few years toward the restoration of the college to its ancient prosperity. Much is due to Colonel D. C. Hardee, of Clinton, Louisiana, for the vigorous manner in which the repairs on the center building have been carried forward, and, although he retires from the committee on repairs, Bishop Keener and President Andrews will continue to have his valuable counsels and assistance. It is indeed a vast and most valuable property that the church has here, and we cannot afford to throw away what has been gathered not only in material, but in the historical prestige and associations of a long and useful career. The site of the college is beautiful to behold, with the surroundings of rolling surfaces and fine forest-trees: and the lofty center building bursts upon us with a surprise almost startling. Tadmor in the wilderness, and the temple of Jupiter Ammon in the desert, were scarcely more of an astonishment to the ancient traveler. How such a massive building ever got there is the wonder, and its interior capacity is marvelous. The society rooms, the library, the museum, the laboratory and other apartments, for spaciousness and adaptation, are hardly to be found anywhere else. Think, further, of the chapel, with a capacity to seat three thousand persons, whose vaulted and heavily-corniced ceilings are supported by columns the pediments and capitals of which are more than fifty feet asunder. It is the most beautiful and imposing audience-room that we remember to have seen. The best audiences at this commencement nearly filled the body of the hall, and we have no doubt that in a few years the immense galleries will be needed.

The attendance of students during the academical year just closed has been over one hundred and twenty, and if the same ratio of increase should continue we may look for two hundred and fifty during the next session. The faculty needs strengthening by additional members: but the instruction, as reported by the examining committee, has been thorough, and the students have made good progress. It was a most happy and providential thing that President Andrews was sought out and induced to accept the important and onerous position which he fills.—Young men whose characters are formed under the influence of his example and instructions will be Christian gentlemen. Profs. Holcombe and Wiley have a large experience, and are most competent, painstaking and conscientious teachers, who recognize their call to this great work, and who honor and magnify their calling. Rev. R. D. Nor-worthy, principal of the preparatory department, is a graduate of the college, and has labored faithfully. These four men have done the work of six—not as well, it may be, as six could have done it, but as well as any other four men could. It is probable that at least one more professor will be employed during the coming year, and that there will be a general improvement in every respect.

The moral and religious influences which surround a student at Centenary are of the best, and we believe that in point of health and good society Jackson is excelled by few localities in Louisiana or Mississippi. We had intended to say something of the almost boundless hospitality, the generous abandon exhibited by the people in the entertainment of visitors during the recent commencement, but all this is well known, and, besides, we should fail in doing justice to the subject.

Religious Inconsistencies.

The New Orleans Times of Sunday, the sixth instant, noticing the letters of Bishop Keener and of Dr. Lovick Pierce, indulges in some rather severe strictures. We notice and quote the article of the Times more for the purpose of exhibiting to our readers the animus of that paper, and the principles which control it, than with any intention to refute the gratuitous and unfounded charges of inconsistency, prejudice and persecution. The Bishop certainly stands upon Bible ground in his views of necromancy, and, if God himself has denounced it as one of the greatest of crimes, the warrant of the church to expel those who are guilty of it would seem to be clear. As to the prompt dealing with Swedenborgians, it is a right and duty which any church may exercise with reference to those whom it regards as enemies to its avowed doctrines, and as inimical to its welfare. We cannot understand how anybody but a Jesuit could get his own consent to remain in a church whose doctrines he does not believe. If not destitute of common honesty and consistency, he would be bound to withdraw and go to his own company, and by so doing he would maintain his self-respect and the respect of those with whom he was formerly associated. It is, in fact, the church and the Bishop who are consistent.

That the Times has undertaken to vindicate an indelicacy, an inconsistency and a false profession which Bishop Keener rebukes, only proves that the warning was timely, and that there is reason for vigilance. Some weeks ago we took occasion to call attention to the "strong delusion" which, in the shape of spiritism and the doctrines of the New Church, is pervading the religious thought of the day. That the mischievous error should find an advocate in one of our leading secular journals only shows how fearfully this mystery of iniquity is working. The comments and quotation of the Times on that part of Bishop Keener's letter which refers to the Swedenborgians and the necromancers are as follows:

Religious papers, so called, do not always exhibit the spirit of true and undefiled religion. Indeed they not unfrequently show quite as much of carnal-mindedness as the most carnal of the secular press. In the late letters of Bishop Keener to the Methodist CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE of this city we find outcroppings of prejudice which are by no means creditable to the position the Bishop occupies, or to the paper of which he is an editorial correspondent. After speaking of a healthy determination in a certain town of Texas to get rid of "the incubus of drunkard- and dram-sellers," the Bishop says:

"Another growing trouble in the land is in the Swedenborgians, who have been directed by their General Assembly to stick to every orthodox church so long as the church will allow them. Our preachers ought to feel no delicacy in dealing promptly with such indelicate people, who, denying the Trinity and the atonement, persist in afflicting their books, their views and themselves upon the unwary. Then we have a dreadful race of spirit-rappers, who are on the high road to infidelity and mania, scattered about, who should be warned, visited and expelled unless the reformation be immediate and complete. That, too, claims to be a species of religion, and as such, not to say worse things of it, should be expelled from our church. The preacher should take steps, according to the Discipline, for unchristian conduct. Necromancy—the consulting the dead is set forth as a vice throughout the Scriptures, from Exodus to Revelation. Saul was slain for it. The question as to the truth or the falsehood of the vision did not save the King from the sentence of death. The sin was in the consulting."

This, instead of being the voice of enlightened Christianity, has the true favor of the Pharisee about it. "Stand off, I am holier than thou," is the spirit which it breathes; and the persecution it suggests is of kin with that of the Salem Puritans who persecuted old women as witches, and, with the name of the Father on their lips, drowned and burned them.

If all nominal members of the Methodist Church who believe in spiritual influences and communications from the departed were to be expelled therefrom, as practicers of necromancy, little save dry bones and worthless forms would be left.

But then our contemporary takes exceptions to another item—the manner in which the Bishop would deal with the covetous timidity of certain officers in the church. The course indicated commends itself to the generous and reasonable as just and expedient, but the Times writer must have a fling at something, and so he vents his spleen on a matter with which he is evidently unacquainted, and with which he has no business. Here it is:

But others beside necromancers—to wit: "official members"—are suggested as worthy of being resigned on compulsion. The Bishop thus effulges concerning them:

"I never expected to see what I have seen both in Tennessee and Texas—that is, official members getting out of the way upon the announcement of a missionary meeting; in several instances scarcely one to be seen. How can the church of Christ prosper with such a timid race in the van? The poor little paltry sum of $100, which, with some of them, would feebly express their individual obligation to send into the dark places of earth the gospel of God, is swollen by the mist of the atmosphere of the enemy into proportions the most appalling, and all sense of duty is forgotten in the general alarm. Now such men ought either to resign or be resigned as standard-bearers of the church militant."

The venom and gall of the Times are not yet expended, and the trembling CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE must be cudgeled yet more severely in the person of one of the most venerable and honored of the ministers of Southern Methodism. We are willing that this record shall stand. Considering that the aged preacher intended his words for the children of a Sunday school, they were appropriate, impressive, and their application most obvious and profitable. It was on his part a suitable and happy acknowledgment of a tribute of affection which the children bestowed upon one of the most eminent and venerated men of the church. This criticism upon Dr. Pierce, clarum et venerabile nomen, is a fitting conclusion to the article of the Times, in which the temper and taste of the whole reaches a most brilliant climax. Says the Times:

In the same number of the ADVOCATE which contains the Bishop's letter we find one from Rev. Lovick Pierce, D. D., to his dear brethren of Felicity Street Church Sunday School and Missionary Society. The writer is a very old man, who ought to know the worthlessness of self-righteousness. His letter acknowledges satisfaction on being elected a life member of the society to which it is addressed. In it he thus "vaunteth himself:"

"Ask your children whether they voted me this life membership because I am in my eighty-sixth year or because I am living in the way of righteousness? Reflections of this kind become a germ of religious life in many children. Tell them I have been in the church seventy-two years; been preaching sixty-seven years, and so far into the sixty-eighth. Therefore my hoary head is now a crown of righteousness. But suppose I had lived in sin all this time—how abhorred must my name have been! I should have been now one of the miserable old sinners Solomon alludes to, who have lived on until too old to enjoy natural life, and too wicked to have any moral and spiritual comfort."

In secular life this would be regarded as indelicate; in religious life it should be considered presumptuous. Instead of praising himself the venerable doctor should let his works praise him. If he were to study over this letter he would discover, as saith the preacher, that "all is vanity."

Millwood.

On Tuesday morning the commencement occasion at Jackson, Louisiana, was varied, and we had nearly said disturbed by the commencement exercises of the Millwood Institute, a school for young ladies. The exhibition took place in the college chapel. It was a sweet and beautiful interlude, but we trust that in future the Millwood commencement will be arranged differently both as to time and place. We doubt the expediency of mixing up any other interests or institutions with the commencement occasion of the college. It was, however, apart from this exception now taken, a most interesting affair. Experts in music pronounced the playing of the young ladies very fine, and we are sure the essays were good as to matter and style, and very well read. The grand central attraction, after the beauty and grace of the young ladies, was the address of Rev. Dr. Tudor, of New Orleans. After a patient sitting of five hours the address came with the refreshing and electrifying effects of a rain in the midst of a languishing drought. A single passage in the address, on the character and achievements of science, will shine as a gem in the memory of those that heard it for long, if not forever. We should have mentioned that the annual sermon of the institute was preached on Sunday night, in the Methodist church, by Rev. A. E. Goodwyn, of Baton Rouge. We heard the sermon spoken of as one of the best of a man who never makes a failure. We may mention, in passing, that this well-known school has passed into the hands of Rev. J. C. Miller, formerly president of Centenary College, and we do not doubt that it will have a prosperous career.

Superannuated Preachers.

Under this head Bishop McTyeire writes a strong and pointed article for the Pacific Methodist. We copy the most of it:

Let us take care of them. And one way to do this is to guard the list of superannuated preachers. Don't put those on it who have no claim, in justice or equity, to be there. The amount annually contributed by the church for their support must not be diverted. A large divisor makes a small dividend; and right here supernnuates, who are superannuates indeed, have cause of complaint.

Men who have not weeded out a short row in the itinerant field are sometimes placed on the superannuated roll, and from that date share equally with laborers who have borne the heat and burden of the day. Is this right?

Perhaps some one will think the reference to the laborers in the vineyard unfortunate, for they who came in at the eleventh hour received a penny also, full as much as those who entered early in the morning and bore the heat and burden of the day.

Verily; but the Master used his own money to indulge his bounty. The case is different when a board of distribution, with money contributed by the congregations for superannuated preachers in their hands, give it to those who have not been "worn out in the itinerant service." Moreover, that generous Lord did not allow his bounty to the late comers to hinder the fulfillment of his engagement with the first comers. He did not pay the former at the expense of the latter. How is it when a superannuated preacher, who comes fully under that description, receives a $200 dividend from the collection, instead of a $500 dividend, because there are two or three other claimants on the fund who really have no claim?

This inequality has more than once occurred. A. and B. set out in the morning of life as itinerants. They travel from seaboard and mountains, and the Lord works with them. Hardships and sacrifices befall, but they bravely bear them for the kingdom of Christ. B. sees an opening to do better for himself and family—in a worldly sense. His ardor abates and he locates. Tries the law or medicine or merchandise. For years things go on swimmingly with B. By and by he breaks. An old man now, and disappointed, he sees the vanity of earthly treasures and the deceitfulness of riches. His itinerant fire revives. He is readmitted; makes a few turns and superannuates.

Faithful A. stuck to the track. He relied on the promise that his bread and water would be sure, and sometimes had not much else. On the whole, however, he got along better than he feared, and is a wonder to many. Under his persevering, self-denying ministry the church has grown up. Missions have become self-supporting circuits, feeble stations have grown to strength, the membership has multiplied on every hand, and the resources of the church have been developed. In good time, as the evening shadows fall, A. is retired on the superannuated list. Thenceforth he draws a little sum annually from a collection that ought to yield him a comfortable support in old age. Why is this? Is the church at large to blame? Not always, for the congregations have perhaps contributed enough to meet the case of A., and all like him. But the Conference have voted B. a superannuate, and two or three others like him, and A. must share with them. The Annual Conferences must remedy this: the people cannot.

For years I have been revolving this matter to propose a plan. I have not succeeded to my own satisfaction in working out any plan, and hope others may be more successful. Require so many years of labor in the itinerancy before any preacher can be superannuated. Put it at a certain age. Demand a three-fourths or four-fifths vote. These thoughts have come up; but there are difficulties. This suggestion is ventured: the Annual Conferences, in granting the superannuated relation, must vote with more discrimination and firmness. Personal friendship and sympathy for a needy or unacceptable preacher must not be allowed to work a grievous wrong upon an old and worn out soldier.

The Methodist Church never promised to pay any man for preaching. The engagement is for a support, which is sometimes, commercially speaking, full pay; oftener very small and inadequate pay. Support him while he is preaching. But the thought arises in the preacher's mind: "What will become of me when I cannot take the charge of districts and circuits—when I am old and gray-headed? I must begin to lay up something against a rainy day."

"No," says the church, which is being blessed with his labors, "No, don't stop. Go on; and when you are worn out you shall be retired honorably on the superannuated roll and your wants cared for." That is a good promise and reasonable. Accordingly the church arranges to meet this obligation. Besides, the amount assessed to be raised for current expenses and for the support of the pastor who may then be serving, a special collection is ordered, called the "fifth collection" or the "Conference collection." Let no pastor omit that collection. It is a debt incurred before the debt for his own support. It is a sacred claim, antedating his own.

And let not pastor or people regard this collection as a charity, a gift. Who planted this fruitful vineyard? Who first gathered and fed this fat flock? Who blazed the path that is now a highway? Who felled the forest where now is a fruitful field? The superannuated preacher represents those of that class now living.

The list of superannuates ought to be a roll of honor. It ought to be counted a privilege to get on it and a security. But I have seen men who had wrought thirty, forty and fifty full years in the itinerancy—men really worn out in it, and by every token entitled to rest. I have seen these worthy men shrink back from it. Why? The outside world talked about "pluck," and the insuperable habit of activity, superinduced by past achievements, etc., but one better acquainted could see that they often shrunk back from want, from poverty. To be superannuated was to be laid on the shelf, to be forgotten, to be neglected. Better than this any little agency or charge that would keep them before the people, and give them a claim to a support from any quarter. My heart has been sorely grieved at this.

What is here said of the superannuated preacher bears with equal force upon the allowance made to the widows and orphans of preachers who die in the work. This list must be better guarded, and can be, I need not say how, in order that the church may keep its engagements to those who really have a claim.

The retroactive aspect of this subject is not to be lost sight of. If we would keep valuable men in the itinerancy, keep them there steadily and cheerfully, and so long as they can do good work, we must look to the care of superannuates and widows and orphans. Let the workers of to-day see us doing this thing. I have known a superannuate to draw $700—his annual dividend—equal to an investment for his benefit of $10,000 at seven per cent. He deserved it all. A large number of the members of the Conference to which he belonged had been converted or licensed to preach or trained under his ministry. I have known a preacher's widow draw $500. Well, that looks something like redeeming obligations. It encouraged the heart of every itinerant who saw it. It was calculated to make men stand to their work who had begun to waver. There is no life insurance so reliable as our church economy when faithfully worked. Companies may break, assets be squandered and policies fail; but the church lives and her resources are always increasing. And there is no claim that appeals more strongly to every sense of gratitude and justice than the claim of the superannuated preacher who is a superannuate indeed.

Cheap Education.

In an article on this topic the New York Christian Advocate contends that, with all the liberal gifts and endowments of the present day, the cost of education is greater than ever. We quote as follows:

We have made diligent inquiry of students who are still undergraduates in our own and other colleges and universities as to their personal expenses during the scholastic year; and we have also interrogated their parents as to the amount of their remittances; and the answer has uniformly led us to the conclusion that the expense of an education is not less now than it used to be before these great benefactions were made. We know what an average student has needed for quite a number of years, and we know what he now needs, or, at any rate, what he spends, and we see an increase rather than a decrease in the outlay.

A few of the causes are patent to every one who is at all conversant with the inside working of our colleges. When a new building is erected in connection with any one of our educational institutions by a single individual it furnishes a pretext for soliciting money for another of equally fine appearance and expensive materials, as a match for it. Of course the old buildings must all undergo repairs and enlargement, either out of the treasury of the school or by unseemly begging for funds from the alumni and friends. The old laboratory is a miserably dark and dirty place, and there must be a new one. The chapel is puritanical, and that must give place to a light and airy one. The library must be doubled at one breath, instead of made to grow gradually and therefore normally. The magnificent buildings are erected. There is, at last, harmony, and old things have become new. But everybody has been overtaxed. The meeting of the old alumni has been anything but sentimental—it has been only a grand begging occasion. Crushing debts rest on the immense piles of stone and brick, with their imposing turrets and—gingerbread. Then the students get loftier ideas. They must have club-houses and society halls and gay boats and all manner of expensive things.

Their tuition does not cost them much; but still their connection with the school costs them a sum far in excess of propriety. The sweet old simplicity of student life thus takes on a smack of artificiality and hollowness. Luxuries become necessities, and no wonder the bills reach alarming aggregates. A student of meager means does not like to be wanting in gentlemanly liberality, and so he says nothing to the extravagant devisings of his fellows. Or for students who dare to stand alone when they know and feel that they are in the right! Where is the gentlemanliness of a senior at college spending $50 or $100 for non-essentials, when his mother's path would be smoothed, and her table better supplied, by a wiser and more Christian-like application of the same sum?

We hold that the rage for grand educational edifices is in the wrong direction. The universities of Germany were never built up by the masons, but by piling the modest halls with princely minds. Let the money go to getting and exciting brains. The University of Berlin, as a building, is more unattractive than one of our city storage-houses; but what splendid minds are among the two hundred teachers that impart knowledge to the two thousand young men from all the continent and islands! Why care for the brown-stone palaces if only intellectual wealth and royalty be found? Many of the university buildings in Europe are hardly equal to some of our barns; but they have a splendid history behind them, and their foundations are as firm as Ehrenbreitstein or Gibraltar. Let education be cheap, we repeat, and let it be education.

CHANGE OF TIME.—Rev. John Pipes, presiding elder of the Shreveport district, writes suggesting a change of time in the Louisiana Conference from the seventh of January to some time in December. We do not propose to open the columns of the ADVOCATE for a discussion of the subject. The brethren can make their representations direct to the Bishop who is to preside, and he will act as his judgment may dictate. As a rule, we doubt the expediency, however, of disturbing the arrangements made as to time or place. As far as the ADVOCATE and publishing interests are concerned, the time appointed suits better than any other.

BY A CARD in another column it will be seen that the next session of the Southern University, Greensboro, Alabama, opens October 1. There is no better place to send our boys than this—an able faculty, the location healthful and accessible, and the social influences refining and religious. It is a Methodist institution, and especially under the control of the Alabama Conference; but it is entitled to our patronage on the ground of its superior merits. Think about it, and get the boys ready and send them. The terms are, if anything, unreasonably low.

WE ONCE MORE call attention to the notice, on our eighth page, of the Lakeshore camp meeting, which opens on Friday, August 1. Be sure and arrange for tents or board beforehand. Meals can be obtained at the public boarding tent on reasonable terms, say $1.50 per day, but lodgings will be more difficult to obtain unless special arrangements are made in advance of the meeting. Abundant provision will be made for the free entertainment of ministers of the gospel, and we hope to see a large company of them there.

WE HAVE RECEIVED the programme of commencement exercises of Chappell Hill Female College, Chappell Hill, Texas. The president is our old friend, Rev. E. D. Pitts, well known in Louisiana and Alabama as an experienced and competent teacher.

WE ARE glad to learn that the commencement exercises of the Wesleyan Female Institute, Staunton, Virginia, were of a very interesting character. Bishop Doggett preached the annual sermon. We believe there were ten graduates.

THE honorary degree of doctor of divinity was conferred upon the Rev. J. B. Cottrell, of the North Mississippi Conference, at the recent commencement of the Washington and Lee University, Virginia. He is worthy of the honor.

NO ONE is so entirely surrounded by labor but that he can talk to God at the same time in his heart.—Thomas a' Kempis.

Morals in Austria.

From "Austrian Notes," by Round, in the Independent, we make the following extract:

I have wondered how the Austrians have come to regard life so composedly, and have sought to see cause and effect in the accident of climate and modes of life, in ethnological peculiarities or religious training. I have come to the conclusion that, while all these have affected the character of the people, they have all combined to influence them not to think. The peculiar admixture of races has developed a people of great physical beauty, at the expense of mental deterioration. The mode of life, full of excitement, characterized by existence in crowds, has been precisely of the nature to stifle serious thought, and the prevailing religion has had a similar tendency. The animal part of the man has fed upon the spiritual; and the result is a people of wonderful physical development, with dwarfed understandings—weak in morals, irresponsible, aimless. The system of government seems rather an effect than a cause.

It is surprising what a low state of morals exists here. One sees it in every relation of life, but it is most manifest in the utter disregard of truth and chastity. The Vienna shopman would lie a Yankee peddler out of countenance; which is saying a great deal. Your bootmaker promises you a pair of shoes on Wednesday, and knows all the while he can't get them done till Wednesday week. You remonstrate with him; and he swears that his youngest child has been at the point of death, when it turns out that he is a forlorn and solitary bachelor. Even the superstitions of the church have lost power to make the people truthful. I know of a lad who was bribed with a gold watch to make his first confession; and he openly avows that, to be rid of the trouble of reviewing his whole life, he told the priest that he had been confessed three months before. This with the horrid pains of purgatory sounded in his ears. My servant goes out to buy me cigars, and is furnished with money at the rate of twenty kreutzers each. I find the cigars vile beyond description, and learn that she has never paid more than five kreutzers for them. Wherever you turn you are met with this disregard for truth. Vows are made at the altar in marriage, and forgotten in less than a twelve-month. Adultery is openly and shamelessly practiced. Prostitution is licensed and regarded among the trifling misdemeanors. There are, of course, many noble, chaste women; but their lives only make the general impurity the more conspicuous. The percentage of illegitimate children is enormous—I think only equaled by Rome.

Southern University—Alabama Conference.

MR. EDITOR: At our last session the Conference pledged itself by vote to raise, during the year, at least $1,000 for the Southern University, referring the matter to the presiding elders for collection, without dividing the amount to the several districts. At the late commencement at Greensboro the board of trustees called attention to the above facts, and requested the presiding elders, several of whom were present, to act as a committee to divide the amount equitably among the several districts, and urge the collection of the same according to the design of the Conference. The following is the assessment to each district:

| | |
|---|---|
| Mobile | $150 00 |
| Demopolis | 120 00 |
| Selma | 150 00 |
| Greensboro | 120 00 |
| Montgomery | 140 00 |
| Union Springs | 120 00 |
| Eufaula | 130 00 |
| Camden | 60 00 |
| Marion | 60 00 |

This amount, the Conference judged, was needed to keep the university in successful operation and further the ends of education within our bounds. The Alabama Conference has now under its patronage no other male college, and surely we have here, as a church and Conference, a very dear interest at stake; yea, I look upon the Southern University as almost essential to our existence and success as a church and Conference in this section of country. If the members of the Conference and membership of the church could have been present at the late commencement exercises, and beheld the array of young men gathered there, pious and promising, twenty-four of whom are either ministers or preparing for the ministry, surely they would rally to the support of this institution with a unanimity and zeal hitherto unknown. We have here a worthy and able faculty, some of whom are actually making sacrifices to serve the church in their present positions, for they are not only in labors abundant, but they are really receiving less compensation than many of us who are in the regular work, and to my certain knowledge they would prefer the ranks of the regular pastorate. Let the church everywhere rally to their support and sympathy; and it is to be hoped that the presiding elders will take hold of this matter with zeal and see to it that the amount is raised, and let us have a university in fact, and one of which the church will be proud. We want next year at least two hundred pupils, and it is only for the church and the preachers of the Conference to will it and the work is done.

A. H. MITCHELL.

DURING the winter the Germans of Cincinnati formed an association called the Acclimatization Society. They contributed money and sent a man to Europe, who has just returned with a cargo of fifteen hundred birds. The cost of importation is a little over $2 for each bird. The finches are the most numerous in the importation. Besides these there are green birds, quails that sing, starlings, larks, blackbirds, thrushes and redbreasts. Nearly all the birds are better singers than our native birds, and they are equally fine in plumage. The society proposes to make a still larger importation this year, with a view of getting enough birds to make them all feel at home.

Mansfield Female College.

COMMENCEMENT.

MR. EDITOR: The annual examination of Mansfield Female College closed its exercises on Wednesday, the twenty-fifth day of June. The Rev. Robert Randle and the writer of this notice were present from the first day of the exercises until the close; and we feel that it is due the president, Rev. C. B. Stuart, A. M., and his splendid faculty, to say that never did we witness so candid and thorough an examination anywhere. The name of each young lady is drawn by the teachers; and the pupil is required to draw from another box a slip of paper upon which is designated any part of the study upon which she is to be examined. Entirely removed from her class, she is put upon the stand and subjected to a thorough test. It is no superficial work. Each pupil stands wholly upon her acquaintance with the subject. The training and instruction in this institution is so uniform and practical that the pupils familiarize themselves with the principles of science. They evinced great proficiency in various branches of natural science, mathematics, and also in the Latin and French languages.

Poetic recitation, on the part of the undergraduates, was a complete success. The concert, conducted by Madam Poythress, was more than simply an entertainment—it was a fair exhibit of musical training and culture; and it clearly showed that Madam Poythress is not only possessed of a very high order of musical attainments herself, but she possesses the happy art of imparting instruction and training others in the science of music. The audience was large and respectful, and the young ladies acquitted themselves with a great deal of honor.

On Wednesday (commencement day,) long before the hour arrived for the exercises to commence, a stream, as it were, of living human beings was seen moving in the direction of the spacious hall, where there was to be a feast of "fat things." The gray-headed sire and noble matron, manhood, youth and beauty mingled in one vast throng. Five essays from the alumni were delivered, which showed vast and varied research, and for elegance of style and diction each one was complete in itself.

The scene closed by an appropriate address, delivered by Captain T. F. Bell, of Shreveport, Louisiana. His speech was dignified and manly. In the outset he referred to the political condition of the country—its Gethsemane-like suffering, reeling under the weight of exhaustive oppression, its heavy cross, and crown of lacerating thorns. He then turned upon female education, consisting not only in high mental culture, but mental culture itself refined, and completed in imitation of the sublimity of the life and teachings of Christ.

And now, Mr. Editor, from my personal acquaintance with President Stuart and his corps of teachers, the location, situation and character of the institution, permit me to commend it to a generous, patronizing public. No one need send their daughters out of our own State to secure for them a finished education. Mansfield is a home institution—it is our college, under the auspices of the Methodist Episcopal Church South and the Annual Conference of the State of Louisiana. It is the head and center of female education for the State. It affords every facility for a thorough education. The discipline is firm, but mild and generous. The course of instruction is thorough and varied. The moral influence is decidedly wholesome, but not sectarian.

Respectfully submitted.

N. M. SKIPWORTH.

DR. WALKER, of Galveston, attended the recent commencement of Marvin College, Waxahachie, Texas, and writes of it to the Galveston Advocate. We congratulate President Pugh. Among other things Dr. Walker says:

Marvin College is a mixed college of boys and girls; but there is no association except in recitation, and no visiting allowed during college terms. The students, male and female, compose a fine-looking and healthy body of young people.

President Pugh is ably assisted by a corps of some five professors. The college numbers over one hundred students. Waxahachie, the site of the college, is in the rich county of Ellis—a most healthy and beautiful location. The college is well located, is ably officered; is judiciously conducted, has a most hopeful future. It may be most safely recommended to the patronage of the good people of Texas.

Our friend, President Pugh, is a ripe scholar and an experienced teacher—the right man in the right place. On the evening of the commencement day we had the pleasure of uniting him in marriage to a most estimable lady, who, we take for granted, is a Methodist and a member of the church; we know, at least, she took a Pugh. Long may they flourish, and may their shadows never grow less.

THE Rev. C. C. Goss, says the Methodist, threw a flood of light, last Monday, on the question of the decline of Methodism in New York, which has been debated for some time in the Preachers' Meeting of this city. Taking the number of Methodist churches as an index of our position, it appears that we had not in 1870 as many as we had in 1850. The number in 1870 stood at thirty-nine; in 1850 it stood at forty. In 1870 the Protestant Episcopalians reported seventy churches in New York; the Presbyterians fifty-two; the Methodists thirty-nine; the Baptists thirty-eight, and the Catholics thirty-nine. Relatively to population we have certainly declined since 1850, for the city is far more populous now than it was then. The presumption is that we have declined absolutely (a thousand or so) since 1855, but this point must be settled by further examination.

REV. LOVICK PIERCE, D. D.—We were deeply pained a few days ago, says the Southern Christian Advocate, by a paragraph from one of the Columbus papers, mentioning the dangerous illness, in that city, of this loved and venerated man. We have anxiously awaited later and more definite information, but up to the time of going to press none has reached us. The wonderful power of resistance to the assaults of disease hitherto displayed by Dr. Pierce's physical frame, and his marvelously rapid recuperation, lead us to hope that we may soon hear of his recovery from the illness which now causes us the deepest solicitude. Our readers will join us in earnest prayer that the grand old man may still be spared many years to bless the church with his presence and pulpit ministrations.

DEATH OF REV. DR. DAWSON.—The Southern Christian Advocate announces the death of Rev. Dr. Thomas H. Dawson, at Glennville, Alabama, on the nineteenth of June. He was a local preacher of eminent usefulness, and his death will bring sadness to many hearts.

A LITTLE GIRL, who had great kindness of heart for all the animal creation, saw a hen preparing to gather her chickens under her sheltering wings, and shouted earnestly: "O! don't sit down on those beautiful little birds, you great ugly, old rooster!"

THE North Carolina Advocate reports the death, on the eighth ultimo, of Rev. William Holmes, who is said to have been the oldest Methodist minister in North Carolina, having been a Methodist preacher for fifty years.

SOME QUESTIONS very naturally suggest themselves to an inquiring mind. An amateur farmer wonders "why, on all this fair earth, the ground is bottom side up, so that it must be turned over with a plow before corn can be raised?"

AMONG the extraordinary animal remains discovered by Prof. Marsh in the eocene beds of the Rocky mountains are those of an animal nearly the size of an elephant, and furnished with enormous hoofs.

REV. ROBERT FOX, of the Western Virginia Conference, died July 1.

TRAVELERS for the East and North will find the route via the Illinois Central railroad to be one of the best. Colonel J. T. Tucker, at the office of the company, 26 Carondelet street, will furnish all information.

THE GRAND CENTRAL HOTEL, Broadway, New York.

BOSTON AND MAINE RAILROAD.—Travelers going East this season will find an especial attraction in the accommodations of the above-named road. Improved springs for wheel and bolster to annihilate the jolting and thumping of the cars when rolling along at forty miles an hour; patent couplings to prevent the jerking, neck-breaking sensation which used to afflict the passenger when the train started, as well as to insure greater safety; luxurious cushions and easy arm-rests, improved and approved ventilators. The object of the managers has been to attain the greatest amount of comfort possible by the use of modern appliances, and to render the cars cheerful and pleasant. Their elegant parlor cars, built for the present season, are run on eight wheels. They are supplied with the vacuum or air brake, and the Miller platform and coupler. With the latter there is also a double chain coupler to prevent the cars being separated while going around curves at a high rate of speed. The wheel springs are double elliptic, while the bolster springs are a new pattern of spiral-coiled steel. The interior is separated into four apartments for passenger seats—the main saloon, which has twelve chairs, of a most easy pattern, and six small seats; while the three state-rooms have sofas for two, four and six passengers respectively. The windows are of French plate glass, four feet wide and thirty-eight inches high. Howard's patent ventilators are used in the elevated roof and at the ends, and in these is inserted a fine wire netting to keep the apartments free from cinders, and the sides are of ornamented glass. They have built nineteen new passenger cars, four of which are these superb parlor cars, besides which they are adding five hundred freight cars and ten engines to their rolling stock this season.

WESLEYAN FEMALE INSTITUTE, STAUNTON, VIRGINIA.—We take pleasure in directing attention to the advertisement of this popular seminary for the education of young ladies. Located at the city of Staunton, in the center of the far-famed Shenandoah valley, and commanding many facilities that contribute to the mental and physical health of its pupils, it presents great attractions. The buildings are spacious, and situated on an eminence from which can be taken in at a glance the grand and picturesque scenery of mountain and vale on either side, and the beautiful valley stretching out north and south. The grounds are laid off into walks, and ornamented with shrubbery, flowers and trees, constituting a delightful and healthful promenade and pleasure resort for the pupils. We learn that the board of teachers and officers is composed of over twenty, each competent for the position he or she holds. The list of students comprises over one hundred young ladies from fifteen Southern States, who enjoyed the advantages of this institute during the past year. We commend it to the favorable attention of our readers.

THE Practical Pocket Commentary and Bible Dictionary, a reprint in full of the great work of Rev. Robert Jamieson, D. D., Rev. A. R. Fausset, A. M., and the Rev. David Brown, D. D., professor of theology, Aberdeen, is recommended by Bible critics of all denominations, both in Great Britain and this country. A copy of the above work has not been received at this office, but we clip the following commendatory notices:

"The commentary brings together the result of a good deal of modern scholarship, and English readers of moderate means will probably find this the best commentary of the whole Bible within their reach."—Christian Intelligencer, New York.

"The authors' names are a pledge for the learning, ability and evangelical orthodoxy of the work."—Christian Advocate, New York.

THE WAUKESHA BETHESDA MINERAL WATER.—We call attention to a change in the agency of the Bethesda mineral water. Mr. J. C. McAllister has succeeded Mr. Hull, and is now the sole agent for Louisiana, Mississippi, Alabama, Georgia, South Carolina, Florida, Texas, Arkansas, Mexico and Cuba. Mr. McAllister will supply parties in any of the above-named States with the Bethesda, on liberal terms, at wholesale.

OVER the Iron Mountain and Chicago and Alton railroads passengers can reach Chicago, and the North and East, in as quick time and by as comfortable a route as may now before the public. Tickets for sale at the office in this city, corner of Camp and Common streets.

WE SEE that Procter & Gamble's EXTRA OLIVE SOAP is becoming very popular in our city. Its quality, we know, is superior, and being nicely perfumed, we are not surprised that consumers prefer it, and that it has a large sale.

COLGATE & CO.'s new perfume for the handkerchief, "CASHMERE BOUQUET," will be appreciated by all who have enjoyed the delicate and peculiar fragrance of their toilet soaps of the same name, which is so universally popular. je21 1y

WESLEYAN FEMALE INSTITUTE, STAUNTON, VIRGINIA,

will begin its Twenty-fourth Annual Session SEPTEMBER 25, 1873.

REV. WILLIAM A. HARRIS, President, with an able corps of twenty-three Teachers and Officers. Thus this no college for young ladies ranks higher. Science and Literature are taught by graduates of our first universities and colleges. Modern Languages taught and spoken by European teachers. Music by seven professors and teachers, among whom are two of the most cultivated teachers of vocal music in the South.

This is one of the healthiest climates in the world. Those who come here from the South, with feeble constitutions, chills and climatic diseases, are entirely restored.

Buildings elegant—fanned by the purest breezes, and commanding the most magnificent rural and mountain scenery, making it one of the most delightful college homes in the Union.

The last session One Hundred and Eleven young ladies attended this school as boarding pupils, from fifteen Southern States.

Extracts from Testimonials.

The Wesleyan Female Institute, located in Staunton, Virginia, under the presidency of Rev. W. A. Harris, is, in my judgment, one of the best institutions for young ladies in the South. I have occasion to know and appreciate its value by the advantages enjoyed by one of my daughters, now a pupil there. Its course of study is ample, its faculty accomplished, and its instruction both solid and elegant. Its personal accommodations are all that can be desired for health and comfort or taste. No location could be more eligible, no scenery more magnificent, no atmosphere more salubrious. Not the least of its merits is that sacred regard for religious training, without which no female college especially would be a blessing.

D. S. DOGGETT.

From Bishop E. M. Marvin, D. D.

The Wesleyan Female Institute is an honor to the church. Instruction is thorough. All classes stand high. In music advantages are offered of a very high order. The most talented professors are employed, and neither pains nor expense are spared to make this department eminent.

E. M. MARVIN.

From Prof. F. H. Smith, M. A., L. L. D., University of Virginia.

The Wesleyan Female Institute, at Staunton, deserves the brilliant success it enjoys. It has a good corps of teachers, a beautiful situation and excellent management. Having had a daughter under Mr. Harris' care during the present session, my observation leads me to believe this school to be one of the best of the female seminaries which adorn our State. The halls of the Wesleyan Female Institute should be filled to overflowing with pupils from all our Southern States.

FRANCIS H. SMITH.

THE GOAT AND THE SWING.

BY J. T. TROWBRIDGE.

A little story, with a moral
For young folks who are prone to quarrel.
Old folks are wise, and do not need it;
Of course they therefore will not read it.

A widow goat one day had found
His way into her neighborhood.
There, coming to the garden swing,
He spied a most prodigious thing—
A ram, a monster to his mind,
With head before and head behind.

In shape was odd—as heads were most
But without legs it stood between
Two uprights, lofty posts of pine
With footboard ready for a stride.

Though but a harmless ornament
Carved on the seat, it seemed intent
On barring the intruder's way.
While he, advancing, seemed to say
"Who is this early fellow here?
Two heads, no tail—it's ugly, sure!
A most insulting countenance!"
With stamp of foot and angry glance
He curled his threatening neck and stood
Before the pawed-at thing of wood.
"You wriggled as I was going by!
You did not? What? Tell me I lie?
Take that!" And at the swing he sprung
A sounding thump! It looked and swung
And, as he mounted by the blow,
He eyed menacingly to and fro.

"Ha! you will fight?" A quarrelsome chap,
I know you were! You'll get a rap.
I'll crack your skull!" A headlong jump
Another and a louder bump.

The swing, as if with lifelike wrath,
Came running back along the path.
The goat, astonished, shook his head,
Winked hard, turned round, grew mad, and said
Or seemed to say: "You rascal ram,
To pick a fight with me, when I
Do quietly am passing by!
You'll know it soon!" A thundering stroke.
The crashing horns met crashing oak.
Then came a dull and muffled sound.
And something rolled along the ground.
Get up, looked and—appeared to me)
"Your head's too hard!"—and limped away
Quite humbly, in a rumpled coat,
A dunster and a wiser goat.

Our Young Folks.

THINGS I WANT TO KNOW.—A boy borrowed his mother's scissors, and left them on the floor when he had done with them, although charged to put them back in their place. He didn't mean to disobey; he merely forgot. He went out to spin his top, and when he tired of the sport he put the top in his pocket and ran off. He remembered to pick up the top—I wonder why?

This boy was charged to call at the grocery, on his way to school, and leave an order; but the family waited in vain for their dinner, because the order was not left. The boy was very sorry, but he forgot. He remembered, however, to stop on his way home and see about the new skates that were expected at the hardware store. I wonder why that errand was more easily remembered than the other?

I want to know why it is so hard to remember some things and so easy to remember others? I've noticed that the things we remember are the ones we enjoy most, and I wonder if the liking has not something to do with the remembering? And if this is so, are we not to blame for the forgetting? because if we wanted to do right, and meet all our duties, just as much as we want to have a good time, we should not be apt to forget.

Your memory is a sentinel that should be always on duty, and it is a poor excuse for a sentinel to say: "Oh, I was asleep!" He has no business to be asleep, and you should teach him better.—Little Corporal.

THE FOOLISH FRIENDS.—In the depths of a forest there lived two foxes who never had a cross word with each other. One of them said one day, in the politest fox language: "Let's quarrel." "Very well," said the other, "as you please, dear friend. But how shall we set about it?" "Oh! It cannot be difficult," said fox number one; "two-legged people fall out; why should not we?" So they tried all sorts of ways, but it could not be done, because each one would give way. At last number one fetched two stones. "There!" said he, "you say they're yours, and I'll say they're mine, and we will quarrel and fight and scratch. Now I'll begin. Those stones are mine!" "Very well," answered the other gently, "you are welcome to them." "But we shall never quarrel at this rate!" cried the other, jumping up and licking his face. "You old simpleton, don't you know that it takes two to make a quarrel any day?" So they gave it up as a bad job, and never tried to play at this silly game again. I often think of this fable when I feel more inclined to be sulky than sweet.—Children's Hour.

A CURIOUS WAY OF COUNTING.—Before the missionaries went to Labrador and taught the Esquimaux to use our figures they had a curious way of counting. They only had words for the figures up to 5. Higher figures they expressed in different ways. For the number 6 they would say 2 times 3; for the number 9, 2 times 4 and 1, etc. If a man had caught 20 seals he would say that he had caught a whole man, meaning the 10 fingers and 10 toes, making 20 together. The number 40 would therefore be 2 men, the number 70 would be 3 and a half men.

"FOR THE SAKE OF MY MOTHER." Hooker used to say: "If I had no other motive for being religious I would most earnestly strive to be so for the sake of my mother, that I might requite her care of me, and cause her widow's heart to sing for joy."

ONE of the prettiest of Christmas customs is the Norwegian practice of giving, on Christmas day, a dinner to the birds. On Christmas morning every gable, gateway or barn door is decorated with a sheaf of corn fixed on the top of a long pole, wherefrom it is intended that the birds shall make their Christmas dinner. Even the peasants will contrive to have a handful set for this purpose, and what the birds do not eat on Christmas day remains for them to finish at their leisure through the winter.

IT WAS wittily said that by some Time was thus pictured of old: Time to come had the head of a fawning dog; Time present, the head of a stirring lion; Time past, the head of a biting wolf; so teaching that though silly souls fancy still their best days are to come, yet if they bestir not well themselves in their present ones they will be very miserable, torn and bitten in their future.—Burgess.

Farm, Garden and Household.

Grafting the Pear on the Hawthorn.

From my earliest advent to the propagating department of the nursery business I have had every facility to discover the reliability of stocks of nearly all kinds. And I would say in regard to the hawthorn Crataegus Oxyacantha and buckthorn Rhamnus Catharticus, I have worked a few varieties of the pear on both of the above-named stocks with a fair success. But the same varieties worked on the true Angers quince do better, and the trees are far more durable than on either of the thorns named.

The use of the thorn by English nurserymen at one time was more a matter of convenience or economy than for the establishing of a healthy and lasting tree, which it has not the capacity to do. But English nurserymen soon abandoned this practice, and turned their attention to the Angers quince, the only reliable stock for the pear except the pear seedlings themselves. We find many foolish ideas among our brother gardeners on the other side of the big pond, and when they bring these ideas on this side and try to put them into practical operation they themselves become disgusted at their own ridiculous mode of working. This I have seen, and many times laughed heartily when some old brother chip would tell me how he both duped himself and others. I have known a Scotch gardener who persuaded his employer to send to Scotland for one thousand mountain ash (Pyrus aucuparia) to graft the pear on. He said that they do it in Scotland to make their pear-trees last forever. The hawthorn and the buckthorn were also tried by this same brother chip. He failed in all. I knew him well, and shall not hesitate to call his name. He was one of the best plantsmen I have ever seen, and practical in almost all the departments of horticulture. His name was Bell. And he often laughed at his own absurdities when he first came to this country. This question of thorn was brought up years ago in the North and West by the most able horticulturists in America; it was discussed at horticultural meetings in Kentucky and elsewhere, and wherever I saw it introduced it was treated lightly. Outside the pear and quince there is no stock adapted to the pear either for vigor or durability.—James Parker, in Rural Alabamian.

Height of Australian Gum-Trees.

The tallest trees growing in the United States east of the Rocky mountains are only about one hundred and fifty feet high. These are some of the pines, among which the white pine (Pinus strobus) is conspicuous. The big trees of California (Sequoia) are from two hundred to three hundred feet high. None, we believe, exceed three hundred feet, and most of the large trees only have a height of about two hundred and fifty feet.

The Australian gum-trees are still higher, being the highest trees known. The highest of some of these is given by Prof. Mueller, of Victoria, in Leeman's Journal of Botany. An Eucalyptus (gum-tree) measured by Mr. Pemberton Walcott is about four hundred feet high. This tree is in one of the delightful glens of the Warren river, in western Australia. It is hollow at the base, and it is said that three riders, with an additional pack-horse, could enter and turn in it without dismounting. Mr. D. Boyle measured a fallen gum-tree whose height was four hundred and twenty feet. Mr. G. Klein ascertained the height of an Eucalyptus on the Black Spur, ten miles distant from Healesville, to be four hundred and eighty feet. Mr. E. B. Heyne, at Dandenong, found the length of stem of one to the first limb to be two hundred and ninety-five feet, and its diameter at the first branch to be four feet; length of stem from the first branch to where the top was broken off, seventy feet; diameter of the stem where broken off, three feet; total length of stem to where the top portion was broken off, three hundred and sixty-five feet; girth of stem, three feet; from the surface, forty-one feet. Another tree, not far distant, has a circumference of fifty-three feet. Mr. George W. Robinson found one in the back ridges of Berwick with a circumference of eighty-one feet at the distance of four feet from the ground, and he supposes its height to be five hundred feet. This is near the sources of the Yarra and Latrobe rivers.

The Australian gum-trees are of rapid growth, with very valuable wood. A few years ago the French government caused them to be planted largely in Algiers, in northern Africa. Quite recently thousands of them have been planted in California, where, we are informed by Governor Throckmorton, of Texas, they succeed remarkably well. The Governor has lately caused a large number of the seeds of these trees to be sown in Texas, where we shall watch their growth with great interest. The seeds are about the size of a mustard seed, which they resemble. Prof. S. B. Buckley, in Rural Alabamian.

SHEEP.—When raised in large flocks they are subject to more diseases than most other kinds of stock, and, when they once become diseased, are harder to cure. We may safely calculate on losing ten per cent. by dogs. Sheep should be kept on dry or upland pasture; they will not do well where the ground is wet. They are hard on grass, eating it down close; should be kept on short pasture, unless it be blue grass. I think every farmer should keep sheep, for I believe in mixed farming. Sheep are now selling at a good price, but five years ago they were hardly worth what the pelts now bring. We must not rush into the business too heavy, and run the thing so far into the ground that all together cannot pull it out. My experience does not agree with the Rural Sun in its figures, for my experience proves that they are not re[mu]nerable. I do not believe their dropp[ing] will pay for their feed, unless fed on chips. I would like him to keep a few hundred for us on those terms. I think that keeping sheep on briers and brush is a dear way; they may eat them down if there is nothing else to eat, but to thrive they must have something more substantial. I rather think that the figures in that article are incorrect, unless I am mistaken in my own figures. I say keep sheep, and good ones—but not on brush.—O. W. W., in Colman's Rural World.

ROOSTING OUT OF DOOR.—Whether we shall allow our fowls to roost on trees or not depends on the season and also on the bird. In mild, warm weather there can be no objection to allowing those which are healthy and full-feathered to remain out of doors, but they should go in at cold and stormy times. Wet predisposes fowls to various diseases, roup particularly, and exposure to cold requires more animal heat, which must be obtained by additional food. Probably the difference in the amount of aliment required to carry in good condition through a cool autumn two large broods, one of which roosted in the coop and the other in the open air, would be considerable. Again, fowls are creatures of habit, and those permitted to remain out during the favorable weather must be driven in in bad season, entailing much trouble on the breeder. But arrange your houses so that you may throw them all open in the hot nights. This is much less trouble, and, by having buildings that can be made warm in winter and very airy indeed in summer, all the advantages of an out-of-door roost may be secured without its disadvantages.

RENOVATING QUINCE-TREES.—I had in my garden several trees which, for a number of years, had never borne the value of one peck of fair quinces, and I had about made up in my mind to destroy them, when a neighbor called on me and stated that his had been in a similar condition until he took them in hand. First, he trimmed out all dead and useless wood. He then hoed and cleaned away all grass, etc., which tended to retard their growth, giving to them clean cultivation. He then gave them a thorough manuring with fresh horse manure, and from that time his trees had never failed to produce a good crop. I accordingly adopted his course to the letter, and so long as I continued this course I had an abundant supply, and of the finest quality. As mentioned above, it is a very good idea if they would worm them good first before the manure is applied.—Small Fruit Recorder.

THINNING FLOWER-BEDS.—As it is an established fact that a thorough thinning out of fruit on a tree causes that remaining to grow to greater perfection, so the same process will apply to plants producing flowers. When the rose-buds are beginning to form, go over the bushes and remove fully one-half, leaving only the largest and best; cut off the bloom as fast as it fades, and you will have finer and larger roses, and the season of bloom be prolonged.

Balsams, started early in heat and planted out when the weather get settled, will begin to bloom in a few weeks. These will bear an unmerciful amount of pruning of their branches, and bloom abundantly for it. When the flowers begin to fade they should be removed, if it is desired to keep up the yield. This process of thinning will apply equally to many other plants.—Iowa Homestead.

HOW DUCKS ARE PRODUCED IN ENGLAND.—We find the following statement in an exchange: "The early ducklings that realize such high prices in the London markets are the Aylesbury variety, distinguished by their great size, white plumage and flesh-colored bills. If fed with an unlimited supply of oats, placed in a vessel of water and not allowed much room to swim, the old birds will lay freely in winter; then the eggs should be hatched under hens, and the ducklings liberally fed with slacked oat-meal and fine middlings, and afterward with oats in water. Under this treatment they may be ready for the table in less than two months.

SWEET PEAS.—A skillful cultivator of sweet peas says that if properly grown they will bloom for months; that failure arises from poor soil, sowing too thickly, and not allowing a well-developed and luxuriant growth. The soil should be very rich, and, for a hedge or screen, the peas sown in a row. To keep up the bloom the seed-pods must be promptly removed, as the growth and ripening of seeds will exhaust the strength of the plant. By this process they will bloom all summer and until frost.—Iowa Homestead.

CABBAGE WORMS.—Put ten cents' worth of copperas into a sprinkling-pot; put on warm water; let it stand till cold, and sprinkle the cabbage at night before the dew falls. This will do for one hundred or one hundred and fifty heads. Sprinkle the same as you would a floor to lay the dust. The dew at night will wash off the sprinkling water. Sprinkle the cabbages twice or three times a week. Mr. Soudard raised a hundred in this way last year, and I have eaten some of his cabbage, which was nice.

DELICATE CAKE.—One pound of sugar, fourteen ounces of flour, seven ounces of butter, the whites of sixteen eggs, beaten well, two tablespoonfuls of sweet milk, one teaspoonful of cream of tartar rubbed into the flour, one-half teaspoonful of soda dissolved in the milk. Bake in two pans. Put citron in one side if you like. Flavor with bitter almond, or to suit the taste.

KIDNEY WORMS.—Remedy.—A correspondent of the American Farm Journal says: "Put the diseased hog in a pen by itself. The pen should be warm and furnished with plenty of good, dry straw. Give a dram of pulverized indigo in a bran mash each day until it affords relief. It generally effects a cure in a week or ten days."

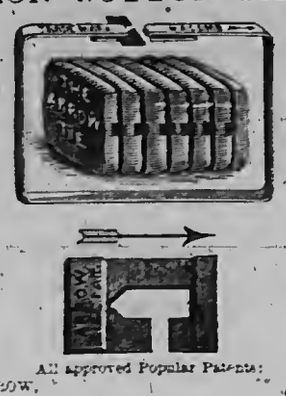
THE DUBOIS FLANGE COTTON GIN.

By the Flange the Cotton is kept in contact with the teeth on each side, until the fiber is taken from the seed without allowing them to be taken up by the return flange of the roll, as in other Gins.

The Flange prevents little seeds, sticks and hard substances from being cut, consequently making a better sample out of roughly-picked cotton than other Gins.



We have sold more from this point than any agency of any other Gin for the crop of 1872-73; consequently we can furnish more and better references, and they are warranted to come up to all that is said of them.

We keep constantly on hand stocks, from 40 to 80-SAW STANDS, both of them. Price $1 per Saw.

IMPROVED

EAGLE COTTON GINS.

The great popularity of the EAGLE COTTON GINS is established from the well-known fact that they are the most reliable, strongest and best built Cotton Gins ever made. The Eagle Cotton Gin runs lighter than any other gin, thus having a great advantage for planters who wish to run by horse power. All the numerous planters who use the Eagle Cotton Gin will certify to the fact that when their cotton is sent to market it always brings the highest market price, as no other gin can produce a finer or better sample of cotton than the Eagle Cotton Gins. Over seventeen thousand of the Eagle Cotton Gins have been made and sold. During a period of twenty years the undersigned has had the agency of the Eagle Cotton Gin in New Orleans. He has never had a gin returned or rejected out of the immense number sold. The saw cylinders of all the Eagle Cotton Gins are twelve inches in diameter which is two inches larger than most other kinds of gins, thus giving our forty-saw gin more teeth, and they are more than equal to the fifty-saw gins of other makers, who use only a ten-inch cylinder and the same great advantage of the twelve-inch cylinder in larger-sized gins can be easily estimated. Planters who wish a reliable cotton gin, with an established reputation, can purchase an Eagle Cotton Gin with a certainty that they are not making an untried experiment, but will obtain a cotton gin which is indorsed by the oldest and largest planters in the country as the best in use. A large stock of the Eagle Cotton Gins are always kept on sale in New Orleans, ready for immediate shipment. Planters should be particular to state if they want right or left-hand motion gins.

OCEAN SPRINGS HOTEL,
SITUATED AT THE
CELEBRATED OCEAN SPRINGS, MISS.
This house is now open and in complete order for the reception of guests. The bathing and fishing is the best of any place on the coast, and persons seeking either health or pleasure cannot do better than to visit the Ocean Springs Hotel, where they will receive every attention during their stay at the hotel. The table will always be supplied with the delicacies of the season.
I would refer invalids seeking health to the pamphlets (to be had at the Hotel, or at Messrs Schmidt & Zeigler's, New Orleans, Louisiana,) containing an analysis of the waters of the Springs and their wonderful cures, which are certified to by some of the most eminent physicians of our country.
Terms are more reasonable than at any of the other watering-places on the coast for the same accommodations. Liberal arrangements made with families and those wishing to remain during the season.
There are also connected with the house a Ten-Pin Alley and Billiard Saloon; also the Croquet grounds for the guests of the house.
The proprietor has made arrangements for a Band of Music, which will be in attendance during every evening of the week, besides a fine Piano for the use of the guests of the Hotel.

THE CONVERSATION FAN.

THE LAST AND MOST ABSORBING SENSATION OF THE DAY IS, TO USE A theatrical phrase, "a great hake." Everybody, to be en regle for the season, and to avoid the proscription of imperious fashion, must have

A CONVERSATION FAN.

No family circle is complete in social diversions and entertainments without one, and in order to enjoy the pastime it should be distinctly understood that the answers do not numerically follow the questions, but to spice the amusement an answer must be looked for that will afford a fitting response to an interrogatory.

Where a direct answer is not to be found in a direct question, it will be discovered that it furnishes the sequel to a sustained conversation, so that couples can carry on a tete-a-tete, which they may not wish to make audible, by silent indications of numbers.

THE CONVERSATION FAN

is an infallible remedy against dullness, breaking the spell of silence by a suggestive inquiry, furnishing congenial pleasures for an evening's entertainment, and opening up a novel and ingenious method of whiling away agreeable hours at home, in the promenade, at a party or private gathering.

MEDICAL.

SWAIM'S CELEBRATED PANACEA

HAS LONG ATTRACTED THE NO-tice of the most eminent physicians by its great efficacy in curing what were considered incurable cases of disease, where the patients have been almost destroyed by SCROFULA, etc., and Prof. Valentine Mott, of the New York University, Profs. Gibson, Dewees and Chapman, of Philadelphia, and many other physicians of celebrity, gave, over their own signatures, letters certifying to its great merits. It has been occasionally advertised, and thousands of families recommend and use it. The Laboratory is under the direction of Dr. FRANKLIN STEWART, who has devoted his attention and skill in its careful preparation during the past twenty-five years, and not a bottle put up that is not worth many times its cost to the patient. It is perfectly safe for the most diseased and debilitated, and in all cases where the Blood is not pure it should be used freely.
Prepared only at SWAIM'S LABORATORY, 113 South Seventh street, below Chestnut, Philadelphia.

New Orleans Markets.

From the New Orleans Price Current.

The accounts from the interior continue favorable. Good progress has been made in cultivating, and the prospect has improved.

The river is 5 feet 7 inches below high-water mark.

COTTON.—The following are the arrivals since the eleventh instant:

| | |
|---|---|
| Louisiana and Mississippi | bales 1,076 |
| Mobile | 287 |
| Total | 1,363 |

On Saturday the market opened with only a limited inquiry, but the demand subsequently showed more spirit, and the sales summed up 923 bales, at steady prices for the better qualities, while the lower grades continued irregular and easy, without either indicating any quotable variation. A considerable part of the business consisted of low cottons at 10½c. Strict ordinary, clean and otherwise desirable, sold at 14c., strict good ordinary as low as 13c., and strict middling at 16@16¼c. On Monday buyers came forward with more spirit and although operations were restricted by the scarcity of the higher grades, which were in good request, yet the business summed up 1,[illegible] bales at previous rates for the poorer qualities, but an advance of ⅛c. and in some cases ¼c. in strict good ordinary and the higher grades. Low ordinary sold at 10¾c., good ordinary as low as 14¼c., strict good ordinary as high as 17c., low middling at 17⅛, 16@16¼c., strict low middling at 18⅛@18¾c., strict middling at 19¼c., and good middling at 19¾c. On Tuesday the market opened with a fair inquiry, but operations being restricted by light supplies of the kinds wanted the business did not exceed 654 bales, at prices showing increased irregularity. Good ordinary, good style, sold at 15c., and high style at 15¾c., but average lots could have been bought as low as 14¾c., if not at 14c., indicating a continued downward tendency in such descriptions, while strict good ordinary sold at 17@17⅛c. Any, in fact, that could be fully expected, to class good ordinary at New York was in demand for contracts, and commanded disproportionably high prices compared with Liverpool classification.

The above makes an aggregate, in round numbers, for the past three days of 2,900 bales, against 2,950 for the corresponding time last week and 2,560 the week before.

The receipts proper at this port since the first of September, exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas, are 1,228,814 bales, against 942,499 bales to the same date last year, and the increase in the receipts at all the ports up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 831,153 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same date last year, there is an increase of 257,192 to Great Britain, of 57,250 to France, and of 179,596 to other foreign ports. We quote:

|---|---|
| Inferior | 7½ @ 8¾ |
| Low ordinary | 9¾ @ 10¾ |
| Ordinary | 11¾ @ 14 |
| Good ordinary | 14¾ @ 17 |

Special Notices.

CAMP MEETING.—The camp meeting on Seashore camp ground will commence on Friday, the first day of August next.

The camp ground is beautifully situated upon the coast, two miles west of Biloxi, Mississippi, and lies open to and fronts directly upon the gulf, enjoying the delightful sea-breeze. Persons visiting the camp ground will leave the New Orleans and Mobile railroad at Seashore station, whence a walk of a few hundred feet brings them to the encampment.

The trustees have laid the grounds off in avenues and lots suitable for the erection of permanent tents. Several parties erected their own permanent tents last year, and the trustees are pleased to learn that a greater number intend doing the same this year—some as family tents, others by church association. Both these are desirable.

The trustees have made provision for good boarding, and lodging accommodations to a limited extent, at reasonable prices.

Several small, plain tents will be erected, to rent to persons or families desiring to hire, either furnished plainly or entirely unfurnished. Unfurnished tents, nine by thirteen feet, at $5, and nine by twenty-five feet, at $10 for the encampment week. For the same plainly furnished with cots, pillows, sheets, etc., a reasonable additional charge will be made.

Arrangements have been made with the railroad companies for the conveyance of passengers to the camp ground and back at half the usual price of fare.

Taking the New Orleans, Mobile and Texas railroad, Morgan's Louisiana and Texas railroad, and the Attakapas Mail Transportation Company, at any of their stations, parties will pay full fare and receive return tickets free. By the New Orleans, Jackson and Great Northern railroad parties will pay full fare and retain their tickets, which, indorsed at the camp meeting by the secretary, will be good for return fare. Beyond New Iberia, by the stage routes, a liberal deduction on usual fares will be made by the proprietors.

From this city tickets can be purchased at the office, upper corner of Camp and Common streets, or at ticket office at the depot, at the head of Canal street.

The trains from this city will leave the Canal street depot at 8 o'clock A. M., 3.45 P. M. and 5 P. M., the first two trains stopping at all the way-stations, the 5 P. M. train stopping only at the principal stations, but all stopping at camp meeting station during the continuance of the encampment. The freight trains leave the depot, corner of Levee and Girod street, at 8.30 A. M. and 6.30 P. M.

The trustees recommend to all who desire to attend the meeting to address either of the undersigned, and make arrangements for their comfort before the date of the camp meeting.

Brethren of the Methodist Church and of other churches, and the communities of the adjacent cities and country, are invited to attend the camp meeting.

Ministers of talent and distinction, from far and near, are expected to be present and assist in conducting the exercises.

W. H. FOSTER, President.
PHILIP HALLARAN, Secretary.

Church South.—This convention, which embraces the ministers, traveling and local, the superintendents and teachers of this district, as well as others interested in this great cause, will be held in Canton, Mississippi, beginning on Wednesday, the twenty-seventh of August next.

The committee appointed by the Jackson District Conference to secure speakers for the above occasion, without attempting to prescribe a programme for the same, would respectfully suggest the examination and discussion of the following subjects: What is the great end of Sunday school instruction? Is our literature adapted to meet the end of the Sunday school? What is the best mode of securing attendance on Sunday schools? What are the true relations of children and of Sunday schools to the church? Are denominational schools important to success? Can our Sunday school music be improved?

News of the Week.

DOMESTIC.

NEW YORK, July 16.—The engineer and steward of the Meridian died of yellow fever, and were buried at quarantine. Several passengers are sick in the quarantine hospital.

BOSTON, July 16.—Vice President Wilson is partially paralyzed. His face is disfigured and his speech somewhat affected. It is probable that Senator Carpenter, who was elected pro tem., will preside at the opening of the Senate.

JEFFERSON, July 16.—A fire here, last night, consumed three brick buildings fronting on the levee, occupied by Russell, Rainey & Co., Gilham & Chew and Mabry & Aiken. Loss estimated at $165,000; insurance, $60,000.

PHILADELPHIA, July 17.—There was a full meeting of the Peabody trustees. The fund now amounts to $3,000,000.

NEW YORK, July 17.—Alluding to the financial condition of the Peabody educational fund, yesterday, Mr. Winthrop states that about $130,000 from the fund had been expended in co-operation with six or seven times that amount contributed by the Southern people in the cause of education since the last meeting of the board, this making but little more than a million dollars expended during the year for the free common school tariff.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 17.—There have been eight deaths in the penitentiary from cholera since last night. Average time of sickness of patients, eight hours. The guards and outside attendants, who are not shut up in cells at night, have been entirely free from the disease.

EVANSVILLE, IND., July 18.—A special dispatch from Mount Vernon, Indiana, states that a panic prevails there on account of the cholera. Forty deaths have occurred within the past week, and eight or ten yesterday. The people are fleeing from the city.

EVANSVILLE, IND., July 18.—Advices from Mount Vernon, Indiana, report that the cholera is believed to be abating in that place.

It almost depopulated the town.

All the people who could get away have left. The banks and business houses are closed, and the town seems without inhabitants.

Rosin, pine, tar and coal have been burned in the streets, and in every house disinfectants have been placed.

The people who cannot leave are removing to the healthier parts of the city. Families are dwelling in warehouses, etc. Every person in the place has had cholera symptoms, and in some large families only two members are left.

There seems no apparent cause for the ravages of the epidemic, as the city is a clean one, and on the highest points between Evansville and Cairo.

LOUISVILLE, July 18.—Advices to the Courier-Journal state that the cholera is prevalent in Elizabethtown, Owensboro, Millersburg and several other Kentucky towns.

NEW YORK, July 19.—General Quesada, brother-in-law of President Cespedes, appointed confidential agent of the Cuban republic, arrived here yesterday, bearing dispatches to the Columbian minister at Washington concerning Cuban independence. He states that fifteen hundred troops have been promised from Mexico, and that Peru will soon render assistance. Arrangements are being made for holding at Washington a conference of representatives from all the South American republics to promote Cuban independence.

Deaths for the week, 895. The mortuary report for the week shows an increase of over twenty-nine per cent. in deaths as compared with the last week.

NEW YORK, July 21.—Rev. Charles F. Deems, of the Church of the Strangers, will assume editorial control of a new religious, unsectarian paper, the Christian Age, the first number of which appears next week.

Ex-Governor Colby, of New Hampshire, died at Concord last night, aged eighty years.

MEMPHIS, July 21.—An Appeal special says the larger part of the business portion of Jackson, Tennessee, including the Whig and Tribune office, burned yesterday.

ST. LOUIS, July 21.—A dispatch from Louisiana, in northeastern Missouri, says that eight deaths from cholera occurred there between eight and twelve o'clock last night, and great excitement prevails. Hundreds of citizens are preparing to leave the place.

The disease is also said to prevail at Troy, Hannibal and other places in that part of the State.

ST. LOUIS, July 22.—Further advices from Louisiana, Missouri, say the cholera has abated there, but some fifty persons altogether have died with it since it first broke out, including some of the most prominent citizens.

In Prairieville and Troy the scourge raged fearfully, the towns being almost depopulated, either by the disease or by the people fleeing from their homes. Out of one family of nine persons in the former place, all of whom were well last Friday, only two remain to bury their dead. The disease also prevails in the other neighboring towns. Business is almost suspended, and most of those who are able are fleeing from the infected places.

FOREIGN.

BAYONNE, July 16.—Don Carlos entered Spain on Tuesday night. He issued a proclamation, invoking the help of God to the armies, declaring that, listening to the voice of suffering Spain, he comes to fight for God and his country, and concluding: "Volunteers, forward and save dying Spain."

There was great enthusiasm among his followers when Don Carlos joined Valdespina and Lizzarno on Spanish soil.

CITY OF MEXICO, July 16.—The yellow fever is spreading on the gulf coast.

The cholera is reported at Vera Cruz.

The elections are progressing quietly. The Liberals claim the judges of the supreme court and the attorney general.

LONDON, July 17.—In the House of Commons, this evening, Right Hon. Lord Otto Fitzgerald, member from Kildare county, produced and had read the Queen's reply to the address of the Commons on the subject of international arbitration, as follows:

"I have received the address of my faithful Commons praying that I would be graciously pleased to instruct my principal secretary to enter into communication with foreign powers with a view to further improve international amity, and establish a general and permanent system of arbitration. I am sensible of the force of the philanthropy of the movement dictating that address, and I have at all times desired to extend the practice of closing international controversies by their submission to impartial friends, and encourage the establishment of rules intended for the equal benefit of all. I shall continue to pursue a similar course, with due regard to time and opportunity, whenever it is likely to be attended with advantage."

The House received the document with hearty cheers.

LONDON, July 18.—In the House of Commons, to-day, Mr. Rylands gave notice that when the civil service estimates came up for consideration he would move to throw out the appropriation for building a house for the British legation at Washington.

The Gazette announces that the Queen has given her consent to the marriage of Prince Alfred with the Grand Duchess Maria Alexandrina Christiana.

The coronation of Oscar and Sophia as King and Queen of Norway took place to-day at Drontheim, the ancient capital of the Norwegian Kings. There was a brilliant procession to the cathedral. Prince Arthur represented the Queen of England and Prince Waldemar the King of Denmark. The ceremony of the coronation was performed by the Bishop of Drontheim.

BAYONNE, July 19.—Don Carlos, with ten thousand men, is marching on the city of Bilboa. He has ordered his agents to purchase torpedoes with which to close the port when captured.

LONDON, July 20.—It is positively announced that Parliament will be prorogued the first week in August.

Samuel Wilberforce, Bishop of Winchester, fell from his horse yesterday and was killed. He was riding with Earl Granville, from Leatherhead to Lord Gower's country seat, where Gladstone awaited him. The horse was going at full speed at the time he fell. His neck was broken and death was instantaneous.

VERSAILLES, July 21.—In the Assembly, this afternoon, Jules Favre attacked the home policy of the government. He wanted to know why the government which punished with severity the insulters of the Assembly permitted the journals to insult ex-President Thiers with impunity. He also exposed and denounced the alliance between the Monarchists and Bonapartists.

After a scene of great disorder a vote of confidence in the government was adopted by a vote of 400 ayes to 270 nays.

This large majority on the eve of the recess is regarded as significant, and is contrasted with the vote by which the present government was called into being on the twenty-fourth of May, when President Thiers was defeated by only fourteen majority.

BAYONNE, July 22.—News has been received here, through Carlist sources, concerning the insurrection at Carthagena, which throws additional light on the defection of the Spanish squadron in that port, and which was made the subject of a government decree and a vote in the Cortes yesterday.

The insurgents, after gaining control of the city, seized the Castello de las Galeras, a strong fort on the side of the harbor, less than a thousand yards from the entrance, which it commands completely. This gave them control of the two lower batteries on the shore at the mouth of the harbor. They hoisted the red flag of the Commune over these fortifications, and summoned the squadron lying in the harbor to surrender.

The crews were in sympathy with the insurgents, and the vessels fell into their hands without opposition. The chief command of the squadron is now intrusted to Pasas, who led the insurrection in the naval arsenal at Ferrol, in the province of Corunna, some months ago. The vessels thus taken by the insurgents are the Vittoria, an iron-clad of twenty-four guns; Numancia, an iron-clad of twenty-five guns; Petnan, an iron-clad of forty guns; Almanza, a screw frigate of forty-eight guns; and the steamers Fernando el Catalizo, Ferrolana and Blasco Garay, not classified. The four vessels first named are among the finest in the Spanish navy.

From the Work.

COPENHAGEN, LOUISIANA.—Mr. Editor: On the twenty-eighth of June I commenced a two-days' meeting at Sardis church, Caldwell circuit, Louisiana Conference. Preached three times, received thirteen into the church and baptized eight. The membership was powerfully and graciously revived. With one or two exceptions the churches on this circuit are in a living condition, and we are expecting a better spiritual and financial condition before the close of the year. C. R. GODFREY.

ST. STEPHEN'S AND WASHINGTON MISSION, ALABAMA CONFERENCE.—Mrs. Editor: Allow me, through your paper, to send a greeting to my predecessors on this work, and particularly to Bros. A. M. Jones and R. F. Perdue, and to say to them: "Rejoice with me." Our third Quarterly Conference convened July 12, at New Hope. The presiding elder, Bro. H. Urquhart, was at his post, and did some preaching and lecturing which has made a deep and, I trust, lasting impression upon the minds and hearts of almost the entire community. A revival has resulted. The meeting was continued until Tuesday night. On Sunday morning the love-feast was largely attended. A great many made brief statements of their religious experience, and this "feast of charity" deeply affected some who at first were present only as spectators. Our Baptist brethren and sisters participated freely in the meeting, excepting when we commemorated the broken body and shed blood of our Savior, and the meeting was denominated "our meeting" in all the neighborhood. On Monday a profitable and very interesting church conference was held, and the brethren resolved to have more of them. Steps were taken looking to the erecting of a church-building (we held the meeting in a school-house,) and I am confident the house will be ready for dedication before I start for the next Annual Conference. The meeting was in many respects the best I ever attended. For instance, I did not observe any one indulge in a single impropriety. The people generally were punctual in attendance upon and very attentive to the preaching of the word. Nine precious souls, if not more, were converted. Four were received into the church, and there are three other applicants. Many more were refreshed and strengthened; in fact nearly the whole community has been made to rejoice in God. In this community, a few years ago, but three or four participated in the sacrament of the Lord's Supper; now nearly everybody in the neighborhood belongs to the church. I can but say, in conclusion: "Bless the Lord, O my soul!"

JULY 16, 1873.

BRANDON (MISSISSIPPI) DISTRICT CONFERENCE.—Mr. Editor: The District Conference for Brandon district was held at Morton, July 10-12. Rev. F. M. Williams, presiding elder, presided in the absence of a Bishop. W. M. Thornton was elected secretary, assisted by L. T. Fitzhugh. The district was not fully represented as to numbers, not more than half the delegates being present. The various interests of the church, as laid down in the Discipline, were searchingly and rigidly inquired into, particularly as regards pastoral duty, family worship, etc. The spiritual state of the church was considered encouraging. Sabbath schools were generally in a flourishing condition. Our Sabbath school literature has an increasing circulation. Financially the district is not in a prosperous condition. The old plan of deferring payment till the end of the year bears heavily upon the preacher. When will the church adopt the plan of paying monthly? This is the easiest and best for all concerned.

The following brethren were elected delegates to the next Annual Conference: L. M. Horton, T. J. Feazell, W. M. Thornton and W. A. Ray. Alternates—W. D. Wormack, T. C. Tibbs, L. F. Fitzhugh and Benjamin Thompson.

The following report was received and adopted: "Your committee on education beg leave to report as follows: Inasmuch as this District Conference has no school under its immediate care, and as there is a first-class school at Dowdyille, Neshoba county, Mississippi, under the efficient superintendence of Rev. D. W. Dominick; And whereas, The children of itinerant ministers and young men preparing for the ministry are gratuitously taught at that institution; And whereas, The school is offered to this conference; therefore,

"Resolved, That this conference accept the offer and adopt the Scotland Male and Female School as a district school, and give it our earnest support.

"Resolved, That we pledge ourselves to use our best efforts to raise means in our respective charges for the support of young men studying for the ministry at said institution."

Revs. F. M. Williams, George W. Chatfield and C. McDonald were elected trustees to act in concert with the trustees of said school.

A plan was submitted for the erection of suitable buildings on the lot secured for a camp ground near Morton. A standing committee of arrangements was appointed, with the view of holding a district camp meeting next October, with a fair prospect of success.

The brethren present were highly edified by the preaching, and much gratified with the cordial and fraternal hospitality extended them by the citizens of Morton. Scotland chapel was the place selected for holding the next District Conference.

W. M. THORNTON, Sec.

VICKSBURG DISTRICT CONFERENCE.—Mr. Editor: This body held its session for 1873 in the city of Port Gibson, June 26-29, Rev. John A. B. Jones, presiding elder, presiding; W. E. Holloman, secretary.

Of seventy-five members, only twenty-eight were present; three charges were unrepresented, and one unreported. The brethren present manifested interest in the work before them, and the session was a busy one.

The reports from the work blend sunshine and shade. The spiritual condition of the church is certainly improved, though our social and business meetings are not so generally held nor attended as our law and Methodistic usage require. This remark applies especially to class meetings. The eucharistic sacrament is well and eagerly and gratefully attended. The baptism of children is neglected by many; and on this point there seems to be increasing carelessness.

Our Sunday school interest is prosperous. One place—a very important one—which last year reported "no Sunday school," this year (so boasts a delegate) has the best one in the conference. One union school was reported.

The committee on missions recommended the establishment of three new missions; and "as young men, active and willing, are necessary to the carrying out of this recommendation," it was resolved "that we pray the Lord of the harvest to send forth laborers into this part of the harvest." The conference ordered a special day of humiliation and prayer for this purpose. Friday, August 1, is the appointed day.

In this connection it was also resolved "that this District Conference respectfully but most earnestly disapprove of the proposition, suggested recently by the board of managers at Nashville, namely, that of having all our mission money sent to Nashville, to the treasurer of the parent board, to be by them distributed to the various missions, domestic and foreign."

The conference commended the "system, scope and general teaching" of our uniform lessons, but asked for greater simplicity and brevity in the lessons for the very young, especially in the catechetical department.

The members present organized a society, to be called "The Historical Association of the Vicksburg District of the Mississippi Conference." The object is "to procure interesting historical information as to the origin and progress of Methodism within this district."

The delegates elect to the ensuing Annual Conference are: T. R. Holloman, S. L. Gaice, G. L. Record and Thomas Reed. Alternates—E. R. Jones, R. D. Howe, E. S. Drake and W. E. Holloman.

The conference adjourned late on Saturday night, having made a complete and harmonious traverse of all the business brought before it.

The next conference is to meet at Natchez.

East Tennessee Correspondence.

MR. EDITOR: Among the many readable articles in your issue of July 10 is one copied from the Southern Christian Advocate, from the pen of Bro. Campbell, in relation to Los Angeles. Well does he put the pros and cons of that remarkable land. There is no gainsaying the following sentences: "All countries possess their advantages and disadvantages. The universal law of compensation must operate in all localities."

So have I found, in looking upon some dozen States and upon Canada. The All-Father has made the estates of his children much nearer an equality than most persons imagine. Down your way you have staples that must ever command money; but then the heat and malaria are drawbacks. Here in this "Switzerland of America" we have gushing fountains and a pure atmosphere, but money is hard to obtain—here is our drawback. We cultivate grain and grasses, but the nature of our lands, rolling and often rocky, forbids the general use of the improved labor-saving machines of the prairie region. And then we cannot compete with the Northwest in water transportation, the cheapest in the world. Hence our products sell at little profit after deducting the cost of production. This, on the other hand, makes living cheap. Excellent boarding can here be obtained at from twenty-eight to thirty-five cents a day! That is what the students pay at Hiwassee College. So you see our bad markets make good boarding—and good schools.

From these mountains go down streams to help on the commerce of the great valley; and from these mountains go streams of emigration to help the great West. Holston people are found scattered far and wide. Sam. Houston and Davy Crocket, and scores of others whose names are familiar as household words, in Texas. At St. Louis you have our McAnally; at San Francisco, our E. E. Hoss. Your Prices, of Missouri, and your Clays, of Alabama, are of Holston blood. The late Admiral Farragut was born among us. Yes, you may raise bales of cotton and hogsheads of saccharine, but we rear men. New England and East Tennessee are much alike in this regard; but the former produces colder natures, cool calculators of dollars and cents; the latter warmer hearts, full of sympathy, and ready to do or die—ft. descendants of the patriotic band that in the darkest hour of the American Revolution kindled a light on King's mountain which shed the light of hope over all the colonies—rather over all the earth.

Come up, Mr. Editor, to the session of the Holston Conference. You will here see as devoted a set of preachers as your eyes ever rested on—Methodistic to the core; self-sacrificing as were Methodist preachers in the days of Asbury. Come with the Bishop.

Plymouth Church Scandal.

During many months past rumors have been in circulation to the injury of the private character of the Rev. Henry Ward Beecher, and it has been felt that the cause of religion, represented by this distinguished teacher, should be vindicated by a thorough investigation. The silence of Mr. Beecher when his own church-members were named as his accusers was regarded as very unfavorable, and the demand to know the truth was at last too loud to be resisted. Although hundreds of newspapers have made the charges public, we have not deemed it proper to speak of them in these columns heretofore; but as Mr. Beecher himself has now come before the world over his own name, we give his card:

"To the Editor of the Brooklyn Eagle:

"In a long and active life in Brooklyn it has rarely happened that the Eagle and myself have been in accord on questions of common concern to our fellow-citizens. I am for this reason impelled to acknowledge the unsolicited confidence and regard of which the columns of the Eagle of late bear testimony. I have just returned to the city to learn that application has been made to Mrs. Victoria Woodhull for letters of mine supposed to contain information respecting certain infamous stories against me. I have no objection to have the Eagle state in any way it deems fit that Mrs. Woodhull, or any other person or persons who may have letters of mine in their possession, have my cordial consent to publish them. In this connection, and at this time, I will only add that the stories and rumors which have for some time past been circulated about me are grossly untrue, and I stamp them in general and in particular as utterly false. Respectfully,

"HENRY WARD BEECHER."

Mr. Henry C. Bowen, editor of the Independent, is the responsible party now referred to as having made the allegations of gross immoralities against Mr. Beecher. We learn from the papers that the Plymouth church, of which Mr. Beecher is the pastor and Mr. Bowen a prominent member, has appointed a committee of investigation, and that this committee consists of Elmer H. Garbut, D. H. Hawkins, H. B. White, Lysander W. Manchester, George H. Day, Daniel W. Talmage, R. W. Ropes, J. T. Howard, C. C. Duncan, M. K. Moody, R. D. Benedict, Samuel E. Belcher, C. H. Morton, Thomas J. Tilney and George W. Brush.

Mr. Beecher and his assistant, Mr. Halliday, are associated with the committee, who proceed in the form of investigating charges against Mr. Bowen of slandering Mr. Beecher by bringing false accusations against him. This is an awkward way of getting at it, and will not be satisfactory to the public mind unless all the evidence is submitted to the people, that they may judge for themselves whether or not there is any cause for the scandal that has been so rife for two or three years past.—N. Y. Observer.

Historical Convention.

As will be seen by the subjoined notice, an important movement has been inaugurated by the Southern Historical Society, through whose instance a historical convention has been called, to meet on the fourteenth proximo, at the Montgomery White Sulphur Springs, Virginia.

It is due to the noble men who fell martyrs to the "lost cause" that a faithful history of the events of the four years of bloody war be truthfully recorded, and an impartial view of the motives that actuated them be handed down to posterity with the seal of an impartial and unbiased history.

The country has been flooded with partisan histories, in many of which the pretended historian has wandered as far from truth as if he had been writing a work of fiction, and in all of these every incident favorable to Southern character has been suppressed, and the plainest facts so warped that the actors themselves would not recognize them. It is high time steps were taken to record the incidents of those eventful years as they occurred, and we are glad that the Southern Historical Society has taken the initiative in the matter. The convention will be opened with an address by General Jubal A. Early, and will be, we are sure, a most interesting and important meeting.

"A historical convention has been called at the instance of the Southern Historical Society, to meet on the fourteenth of August next, at the Montgomery White Sulphur Springs, Virginia. Arrangements have been made with the proprietors of these springs, and every facility will be afforded. The convention will be opened, by request, with an address from General Jubal A. Early.

"Newspapers throughout the Southern States will further an important and patriotic movement by giving this notice an extended circulation.

The Cholera.

We have good reason to believe that the cholera is subsiding in Nashville and vicinity. The number of deaths reported on Sunday, June 29, was thirty-seven; of these twenty-four were said to be from cholera—eight white and sixteen colored. On Monday, June 30, there were thirty-three deaths reported; ten by cholera—four white and six colored; but three of the cholera cases were in the country. There is a good deal of dysentery and kindred sickness in the community. But July opened bright and fair, giving promise of better times. We are sorry to say that Bishop McTyeire has been annoyed with the chills and fevers he contracted in the malarial regions, but he is better. He is about taking a tour among the high, healthful hills of Holston. We will let our friends use him up there, but they must not abuse him. Several members of his family have been attacked with cholerine, but they are better now. Dr. Kelley has been disabled from work for a week or two. A trip to the country, we hope, will bring him up. Bishop McTyeire preached for him on Sunday, and the editor at night, to a good congregation, despite the cholera. Dr. Merrill and Bro. Sowell are absent; being quite indisposed. Dr. Young, Bro. Brown, and we believe the other preachers, are at their post, preaching to the well and visiting the sick and burying the dead. Our superintendent, Mr. Spillers, is down with a bilious attack; and our stereotyper, Mr. Kelsea, with cholera, or something of the sort. Only one of our printers has died. He was taken with cholera at Shelbyville, whither he went to escape it. A grandson of Bro. Allsey was attacked with it; but it yielded to prompt and vigorous remedies. The papers report the disease all over the country. It is generally attributed to the excessive wet weather and disregard of sanitary regulations, especially in regard to food and cleanliness. We hope, by God's blessing on the means employed, to be able soon to report the return of rosy health on balmy wings to cheer and revive the community. We may say, in conclusion, that though severe affliction has been in the families of the book agent and editor, no death has occurred, and health is returning to their homes, for which God be praised.—Nashville Christian Advocate, July 5.

Hennington Camp Ground, Crystal Springs, Mississippi.

MR. EDITOR: I have to-day closed up the contract with an experienced caterer for the restaurant and sleeping tents at Hennington camp ground, Crystal Springs, Mississippi, one hundred and sixty miles from your city, on the New Orleans, Jackson and Great Northern railroad. Our specifications itemize that good, plain meals shall be furnished at fifty cents, and that two hundred and eighty running feet of comfortable beds shall be furnished to the public, in two substantial sleeping-tents; fare, fifty cents. The committee on improvements have under contract an extension of the shed, embracing one thousand five hundred and sixty surface feet. We begin our camp meeting on the third of September. The present prospects are very encouraging. Many tents are being built.

We expect this camp ground to bring us in much nearer social relations with the church in New Orleans. We are one mile from the depot, in a picturesque country. More than a score of cool and pure springs of crystal water break out upon our lots, and we feel sure that when your people have prospected them they will come up and build tents, even on a scale that will tempt them to bring their families to them for the two or three hottest summer months in the year, instead of running off to the fashionable watering-places. Send, up your prospectors and bring up your Tudor and Walker and Parker, etc., to preach for us. We trust that we will do you good and receive strength from you.

Yours, J. V. ENOCHS,
Chairman Committee on Tents.

THE IRISH WESLEYAN CONFERENCE.—The one hundred and fourth annual session of the Wesleyan Methodist Conference of Ireland was held this year in Cork. This is a Roman Catholic city, with a population of seventy-eight thousand three hundred and eighty-two, of whom the Protestants number only twelve thousand.

The first committee, that for stationing the ministers, met on Thursday, June 12. The first draft of the appointments was readily made, as there are in Ireland only about one hundred circuits.

The missionary committee met the next evening. Rev. Luke Wiseman, Dr. James and Rev. Prof. W. B. Pope, of the British Conference, were present and participated.

The meeting was a very gratifying one. The treasurer's account was not quite closed, but the income for the year will probably be a little over £3,000, a cheering amount for the Methodists of Ireland to raise on behalf of one department of the Lord's work. Fresh and most encouraging statements were given as to the progress of Christian light and life in various lands; and now, as the parent society has realized a larger income than ever before, and is completely freed from the incubus of debt which for years impeded its efforts, it is hoped the committee in London may see its way to some new extension of the gospel in foreign lands as yet lying in the shadow of death.

THURSDAY, JULY 24, 1873.

HOLY SCRIPTURE.

I have a Garden fair,
With heavenly breezes fanned,
And every morning finds me there—
It is the Lord's command—
To gather fruits and blossoms sweet
Before the dusty world I meet.

I have a Fountain pure,
And of its waters drink,
Morn after morn, for health and cure,
And sit upon the brink
To catch its murmurs, soft and low,
Ere to the noisy crowd I go.

I have a faithful Friend,
Accustomed to advise,
With whom each morn some time I spend,
That I may be made wise
To find and keep the only way
Which leads to eternal day.

I have an Armory bright,
With shield and helm hung round;
Where, duly as the morning light,
The Spirit's sword is found,
With which to overcome the foe
Who harasses the way I go.

I have a Mirror keen,
Which shows me all I am;
But lo! behind me there is seen
One like a dying Lamb;
And as I view his imaged face
My sins are lost in shining grace.

O send thy Spirit, Lord,
To make me wholly thine,
That I may love thy blessed word,
And feel its power divine,
And walk on calmly in its light
Till faith is turned to glorious sight.

Ministerial Support.

MR. EDITOR: I am very much diverted at the variety of communications on this subject. There must be something of a "Slellian fruitfulness" about it. As every man has a peculiar mental conformation, so every man has his own way of looking at this absorbing question of ministerial support. Some of the articles on this subject sound like dirges, and make us feel as if we were listening to a requiem sung over the grave of Hope. Others have the shriek of a gusty wind of wluter, and, like it, blte and wither everything in their pathway. Then there streams forth a flame of sarcasm about the meanness of church people; and then we have a formal, scholarly, statesman-like protest against ministerial starvation!

These articles form a complete study—a unique study in themselves—and to a man who has a vein of humor in him they afford food for many an hour of pleasing and profitable meditation. The last article on this subject which has come under my notice is in the ADVOCATE of May 22, from the pen of Bro. Corbin. Bro. Corbin begins with several quotations from Scripture, and tells us that he begins in this way "in order to convince church-members that it is as much their duty to pay the minister they employ as it is his duty to preach." Now these quotations may convince people of their duty in this matter, but they will also convince them of another thing, which will completely neutralize the effect intended. These quotations will convince people that the ministers are no worse off now than they have been at other times. This reference to priests and Levites don't have the designed effect, because in these latter days people have learned something in regard to them of which they used to be ignorant. They have learned that the rich support, which the priests and Levites are supposed to have received, was like the support of ministers in the present day—the most of it was on paper! Provision was made in the law for it—heavy denunciations were uttered against those who failed to bring up their quota; but, after all, it frequently happened that the priest and Levite had to hunt bread beyond the precincts of the sanctuary. We have a memorable case in the seventeenth chapter of Judges. The history of the Levites proves that people will dare God's displeasure rather than give a liberal support to his ministers. It won't do, then, to point the present generation to the Levites in order to make it contribute liberally to the support of the gospel. The reference may have the opposite effect.

Bro. Corbin says: "If they will not pay him, it is his right and duty to labor at tent-making, farming, etc." In this every delinquent in this matter will fully agree. We hear it frequently said of a minister: "Let him go to work." And this will be said as long as the example of Paul's tent-making stands on the record. People will say: "You are no better than Paul. Go to work if you want a better support than the church gives." And so this reference to "tent-making," etc., has an effect opposite to that which was intended.

Bro. Corbin's zeal has run away with his rhetoric, and in the flight his figures have got very much tangled. What a sad picture he draws of the "old ship of Zion" going to pieces on the rocks of covetousness and stinginess and meanness! But then the people, who are invited to "look on this picture," that it may produce shame for the past and a resolution to do better in the future, have looked at a thousand just such pictures, and they see that the "old ship" has not yet been wrecked. They have a secret notion, hid away somewhere in their minds, that this is merely the fancy sketch of an excited mind. And so this terrible picture of the church-wreck will not produce the desired result. In this connection people have the memory of an old saying flitting about in their minds: "The gates of hell shall not prevail against it."

Bro. Corbin closes with a burst of self-denying enthusiasm: "Who would not rather a thousand times proclaim the gospel from the seven hills of Rome, unthanked though he was; to the red man, like John Elliot, though threatened for his message; or even cross the ocean, and amidst desert sands and burning heat declare the goodness of God to the Arabs, and have wild dates for his food—the best the poor Arab could give him—and heaven, a glorious heaven at last for his home, than to have no thanks and no reward from a church." Now this will not make people pay the preacher. The effect of such a strain of eloquence on the delinquents will simply make them say: "If the preacher would rather preach to the Indians or Arabs for nothing, then let the Missionary Board lay hold on him and send him out there. A few such preachers, who can live on dates, will soon do away with the necessity of raising missionary money at all." And so this reference has a very decided effect upon the minds and purses of the people.

When will writers on this subject learn to look at it from all sides? When will they learn that many facts have more than one phase and more than one bearing? The facts which some writers on this subject produce act more like an Australian boomerang than anything else with which they may be compared. We wait with interest for the next communication on this important subject.

OTTIS.

Woman's Influence.

MR. EDITOR: Much has been written about woman's influence, and thoughtful minds in all ages have perceived the power she wields, and the great importance of its being used in the right direction. In our age, where man has made such rapid strides in scientific and psychological development; when all feel the need of a higher state of society, a fuller demonstration of the Christ-life; when the speculations of scientists and philosophers, the difficulty of reconciling the many inexplicable mysteries in this knotty problem of life renders the realization of Christian profession a seemingly hopeless task, now, as much if not more than at any past age in our republican history, do we feel the need of woman's influence—women with mature judgment, firm principles, high moral rectitude; not the loud, brazen woman as some of the advocates for female suffrage would press upon us, nor the cowed slave of the East, but women willing to do and dare anything to promote the well-being of humanity, yet preserving all the delicate refinement, the domestic capabilities which shine forth in that most endearing of all relationships—the wife and mother.

We want energetic, self-reliant women, ready and willing to guide their own life-bark, should Providence will it so; and, above all, of conscientious, practical Christianity. With such women shedding the genial rays of bright, pure example into the inmost core of society, though some should not extend beyond the hearts of the home circle, our age may yet be the Augustan age of America.

Much is expected, much is being realized from the lives of our women. In the present crisis, when corruption, weak morality permeates high places, how difficult to guide the ship of State through the dangerous shoals everywhere presented! It requires individual effort to send forth characters imbued with moral heroism, justice, firmness—actuated by a desire for the general good, not for personal aggrandizement. And how can those characters be molded if not under the influence of woman? If our women are gay, frivolous, spending all their time and strength in pleasure and fashionable adornment, then our men will be careless, dissipated, profligate. Pleasure being the highest good, money, as the all-potent sesame to power and luxury, will be the goal of every struggle; and, every one striving for self, the weal of humanity must inevitably sink into insignificance, power vesting itself in the most wealthy, no matter how low the sense of moral obligation, how debased the intellect.

We all shudder at such a picture of society; but are we striving to avert it from us? Women of America, are you living up to your fullest capabilities? Are you endeavoring to elevate as well as adorn the society in which you move and wield such a powerful influence? Does your desire to attract crush out the far nobler one to improve? Draw aside the defacing mantle of frivolity from the warm, generous souls God has given you, and let them speak. Ah! rapid is the tide sweeping past you, but potent is that little word or act it bears upon its bosom; not germinating, perhaps, until it reaches the shore this side of the eternal, yet leaving behind an echo loud enough to reverberate to the stream so eagerly pressing toward it! The black, fearful tide of intemperance is rushing past you, daily receiving more impetus. Can you not lay a barrier athwart its downward rush? Can you, seeing the evils arising from its indulgence, countenance, much less stimulate, its progress? Know you not that every encouraging smile, every glass you proffer, every time you place the fatal beverage to your lips, you swell the rapid stream? Remove all intoxicating liquor from the social board, the New Year's calls, the evening's entertainment, discountenance the man who persists in its indulgence, sever the dearest hopes that ever blossomed in the human heart if they are centered upon one who prefers a drunkard's ignominy to your love. Set the example, follow uncompromisingly by precept, firm resistance. And in laying the ax at this powerful root of evil you will have strength to exert those other influences which can be used with such incalculable benefit to mankind, and, beginning with an earnest desire to work, with a firm reliance in a higher Power, you will gain a clearer insight into society's needs; and show to the world the power of woman's influence.

LITTLE BEVERLY.

Herod and John the Baptist.

To behold a man dressed in camel's hair, encircled with a leathern girdle, traversing the solitary desert, with the locusts and wild honey for his food, and nature's sparkling spring for his drink, the star-decked heaven his canopy and the green earth his couch, is a remarkable sight. Still more wonderful is it to behold the crowds swarming in the desert to hear his burning words; while the formalist and infidel forsake the road to death, and journey forth to heaven under the mighty preaching of this effective teacher. Nor could artificial life change him for being transferred from the solitary desert to Herod's thronged, voluptuous court; he will not bow before vice, nor kiss the hand of immorality, though it be a king who offers it, but boldly exclaims: "It is not lawful." And here let me say that so long as John the Baptist made the desert ring with his mighty eloquence, so long as the mighty crowds followed him from afar, so long as the warning shout of repentance was thundered at Pharisees and Sadducees, but did not reach Herod on his sinful coach, so long was John admired, yea, almost worshiped by Herod. "For Herod feared John, knowing that he was a just man and an holy, and observed him; and when he heard him he did many things, and heard him gladly." But strike the flint and sparks are emitted—strike the tyrant and he trembles and becomes enraged. Martin Luther, in ancient times, may thunder from the pulpit; but when he thunders against popery he is summoned for trial to Worms. Pere Hyacinthe may speak the word of God, but woe be to him when he speaks against the Pope. Tyranny, clothing herself as a lamb, but really a wolf, enters the church of God, hypocritically telling us, in the noble words of Scripture, "to obey the powers that be;" while she turns off an old servant of God, leaves him to die like a dog, while the church trembles, totters and may be falls as a consequence. Just so with Herod in his selfishness and depravity. He wishes to do an unlawful thing—he wishes to marry Herodias' (his brother Philip's) wife. But John, as a true Christian, boldly tells him: "It is not lawful for thee to have her." For this cause "Herod had laid hold on John, and bound him and put him in prison. And when he would have put him to death he feared the multitude, because they counted him as a prophet." But when Herod's birthday was kept, the daughter of Herodias danced before them "and pleased Herod;" "whereupon he promised with an oath to give her whatsoever she would ask. And she, being before instructed of her mother, said: 'Give me here John the Baptist's head in a charger.' And the king was sorry; nevertheless, for the oath's sake, and them which sat with him at meat, he commanded it to be given her. And he sent and beheaded John in the prison. And his head was brought in a charger and given to the damsel, and she brought it to her mother. And his disciples came and took up the body and buried it, and went and told Jesus."

Herod was a tyrant; he thought only of himself and his sinful pleasures. The voluptuous beauty of Herodias was more dazzling to his sight than the manly eloquence of John. The dancing of her daughter was more fascinating to him, than the pathway of righteousness. Let the floor shake to the dancers' feet; let the merry bowl pass round; let Herod's golden crown sparkle, and fools and sycophants admire; let them shout as madmen when he speaks, saying: "It is the voice of God." Does this make it so? Does this prevent the gory head of one who had once spoken for God, looming in sight as a bloody, terrible evidence of the rule of tyrants? Does it prevent the disciples of John telling of this terrible murder to the blessed Jesus? Does it prevent the worms from consuming his sinful body?

Rather, far, would I cross the rolling ocean or the waving prairie—trust myself to God for support, like Mungoe Park, among savages in the woods or desert—than to persecute one of the least of God's children. Far sooner would I be clothed in camel's hair and live upon locusts and wild honey than I would exalt myself above all my Christian brethren for piety, and then enrich myself with sordid gold, even at the expense of the life-blood of God's saints.

Herod and John—the first is as a wrecker's crew, that puts out from land when they hear the minute-gun, not to save the lives of the passengers—oh, no!—but, like pirates, to destroy them, and, returning laden with their spoils, make night hideous with their bacchanalian revels, and by to-morrow's sun build a fresh bonfire on shore to allure another vessel on a hidden rock. Thus was Herod, and thus to-day are many of his followers; while John the Baptist was like a noble vessel that put to sea when thunders rolled, lightning flashed, winds whistled through sail and cordage, and the great sea-billows dashed with overwhelming force upon her oaken sides. Nobly she rode the billows, nobly she saved the lives of yonder crew; but the shock was too great, her timbers were warped, and the noble vessel went to pieces after reaching yon blessed shore. So fell the noble head of the martyred saint when his earthly voyage was done, his day was over and his sun had set. The light of his example, shining as a brilliant pathway from earth to heaven, caused Jesus, the greatest and best of all judges, to exclaim: "Among them that are born of woman there hath not risen a greater than John."

Commencement of Centenary Male Institute,

SUMMERFIELD, ALA., JUNE 23, 1873.

MR. EDITOR: The exercises of this institution were of great interest. Some thirty young gentlemen were selected to make speeches, a part with selected extracts and a part with original orations. They seemed, as a class, to possess readiness of speech; grace of movement, animation, clearness of expression and forcibleness of delivery. They had evidently been well trained in the school of oratory.

There was quite a striking variety in the music of the occasion. Some of the songs were sung by the boys, and sung with expression, showing how well boys can be trained to sing. Other pieces were rendered by some of the resident pupils of the college.

It was a pleasant ending of another successful year for the institute, adding to the laurels already won by Prof. Massey. He does not make much parade, but moves on steadily and surely, governing his school with an ease and a success that shows a master hand; advancing his pupils as rapidly as necessary, but compelling them to go over the ground thoroughly. If any have not learned this year to meet expectation it has not been the fault of the teacher. He is a safe instructor in whose hands to intrust the training and education of youth, for they are sure to be impressed by his teaching, counsel and example. He will always have a good school and will always do good by teaching. In such a healthy location as this, free from the contaminating influences of larger places, and with such a teacher, those who have sons to educate have all that they can desire. The church ought to feel proud of such a school, and show the right kind of appreciation by patronizing it more liberally.

The exercises of this school closed the festivities of commencement, and there was a feeling of sadness that mingled with the scene that could not be averted. The happy throng that filled these halls two weeks ago were gone, and two of the brightest spirits of that throng had bid adieu to the scenes of earth. President McVoy had looked forward, through one of the most successful years of his life, to the triumphs of what he anticipated would be one of the most brilliant commencements of Centenary. All preparations were far advanced to completion. A large graduating class, that had been well trained and thoroughly taught, would have added to his already growing reputation. The music, selected with care and judgment, had been assigned to the pupils, and Centenary would have shown again that she is unexcelled in this department. The finest display of art this institution has ever had would have been made, showing remarkable success in this line; but unexpectedly the same disease that was prevailing at that time throughout the country, and that was more or less embarrassing other institutions, broke out among the pupils, proving serious only in three cases, and fatal in two. The panic occasioned by it became uncontrollable, and prudence and judgment required immediate suspension, which was promptly done. This disease cannot be attributable to any local cause. It is now as healthy here as it has ever been, and no local cause for any disease exists. Nothing of this character ever manifested itself here before, during more than thirty years this institution has been in existence.

The success of last year shows what can be done by this institution; and now provision having been made by which the daughters of ministers can have the benefit of the Thompson fund, this institution affords advantages to the ministers of the Alabama Conference that no other Conference institution can afford.

Mount Sterling High School.

MR. EDITOR: It was enjoined upon me by the examining committee to send you a report of the commencement exercises of the Mount Sterling High School, Choctaw county, Alabama.

This institution, during the last four years, has been under the care of Prof. S. S. Mellen, and numbered during the last term about ninety pupils. Prof. Mellen is well known as one of the best and most distinguished educators of our land.

The commencement exercises were interesting from the beginning. The annual sermon was preached by the Rev. T. F. Mangum, of Tuskegee, Alabama. For profound thought and appropriateness it was in every way worthy of the occasion.

The examination evinced both the ability, energy, fidelity and skill of the teachers, and the proficiency, application and success of the entire school. I was perfectly delighted with the marked order and beautiful system exhibited in its government. The school is kept under strict moral and religious training. In the examination the entire course of study was reviewed, and the student thrown upon his actual attainments, before an intelligent and appreciative audience. Through this examination the students gained much credit for themselves, as well as praise for their laborious and faithful teachers, who had so diligently instructed them, not in the mere verbiage of the text-books, but in the true principles of the studies pursued. On Tuesday night the Rev. T. F. Mangum gave an address on "The Mission of Education," with which all who heard it were greatly delighted. On the last day of the examination we had excellent speaking from the young men, who delivered original orations, and some very amusing speeches from the little boys, with beautiful compositions from the young ladies, all interspersed with delightful music by Mrs. Armstrong, to whom we feel very grateful for the interest manifested in her department.

At the close Prof. Mellen addressed his pupils with most earnest, pathetic and affectionate words of counsel and admonition. At the close of the literary exercises the school and the audience were invited out into the grove, where was spread a most excellent dinner, to which ample justice was done by all.

THE man who has begun to live and work by artificial stimulant never knows where he stands, and can never count upon himself with any certainty. He gets into his castle a servant who becomes the most tyrannical of masters. He may resolve to turn him out, but will find himself reduced to the condition in which he can neither do with nor without him. The use of stimulant to the brain-power brings on disease in whose paroxysms a man is no more his own master than in the raving of a fever—a disease that few have the knowledge to understand, and for whose manifestations the world has no pity.

A MEDICAL JOURNAL estimates that the people of the United States pay $125,000,000 yearly for physicians' services and for medicines. They spend a good deal more than that for liquors and other things to make them sick.

Obituaries.

EFFIE ELOISE, daughter of Rev. H. O. and E. N. White, was born September 17, 1871, and died at Minden, Louisiana, June 20, 1873.

Like Samuel of old she was consecrated to the Lord, and he who is too wise to err and too good to do wrong has seen proper to take her to himself.

ENOCH TYLER was born in Washington county, Georgia, July 10, 1805. He moved to Alabama in 1843, obtained an evidence of the fact that his Redeemer lived, in 1848, and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church South, and died in a triumphant faith, March 18, 1873. Bro. Tyler was a useful member of the church, a kind husband, father and neighbor. He held the mantle of charity ever ready to throw around the erring conduct of human nature. During his illness, which was long and painful, he talked a great deal about our holy religion, and said many good and cheering things. For his faith God gave him a dying grace. When he found himself on the Nebo of death, and looked back and saw what he had been by nature, and what he now was by grace, he involuntarily sang and breathed the sentiment of that old favorite song:

"Amazing grace, how sweet the sound."

And, while stepping from the shores of time to eternity, he repeated back: "All is well."

MRS. FRANCES ELIZABETH BAGGETT, daughter of Garrison and Mehali Helms, and wife of J. M. Baggett, was born in Talbot county, Georgia, June 9, 1841, and died in Montgomery, Alabama, June 22, 1873. She joined the Baptist Church at fifteen years of age, and several years afterward she connected herself with the Methodist Church.

Sister Baggett was a lady of exemplary piety. There was more sunshine in her life than is found in the lives of many who profess faith in Christ; not because she was more prosperous than others, or had less cause to become "discouraged because of the way," for she knew fully the import of "to pass through the waters" and to "walk through the fires;" but her faith enabled her to say: "Yet the Lord will command his loving kindness in the day-time, and in the night his song shall be with me, and my prayer unto the God of my life." On Sunday morning, a few hours before she died, a lady friend approached her and said: "It is daylight, and we are permitted to see another Sabbath morning." Sister Baggett asked: "Where will we be before another Sabbath?" Expecting to answer her own question, she did not wait for a response, but remarked: "I will be in heaven."

MRS. SYNTHIA MASTERS, whose maiden name was Ralls, was born March 29, 1824, in Hinds county, Mississippi, and departed this life April 12, 1873, at her residence in Caldwell parish, Louisiana, exemplifying the power and reality of religion and of our holy Christianity. On the seventeenth of April, 1853, while residing in Arkansas, under the ministry of Rev. W. G. Guice, a local preacher, she united with the Methodist Episcopal Church South, and in the fall of the same year made a public profession of religion, and continued to make that profession until her tongue was silenced in death.

One month before she died it was her privilege, with many others, to commemorate the suffering and dying love of her risen and exalted Savior; and while the presiding elder, Fred. White, and her pastor, C. R. Godfrey, were administering the emblems of the broken body and shed blood of our Lord Jesus Christ to her, she shouted praises to God aloud, her face all radiant with the love of God. On Thursday night before her death she had her husband and children around her, and told them that she would not recover; that death had no terrors to her; that it would be sweet to die, exhorting them to meet her in that better world.

MISS ELIZA J. JOHNSON was born in Anson county, North Carolina, May, 1834, and died of consumption, February 2, 1873, at the residence of Mr. James Gowen, her brother-in-law, near West station, Holmes county, Mississippi. She was the daughter of Colonel William P. and Eliza Johnson. In 1855 she professed religion and joined the Methodist Church. She took great delight in the services of the sanctuary, and as long as her health permitted her seat was never vacant at the house of God. With her it was not only a duty to profess, but also to practice the duties of religion. In the capacity of Sunday school teacher she labored zealously and efficiently. One of our best members is gone from earth. Like the mellow fruit of summer, her spirit under affliction ripened for heaven. She had been anxiously waiting for the Master's call for several weeks before her death. At ten o'clock on Sunday night, February 2, the summons came. In great peace and in full confidence in God she gladly obeyed the call, and her spirit quietly left earth, and in a moment was with the angels around the throne in the land of eternal Sabbath. A large concourse of serious persons attended her remains to their last resting-place. We most earnestly pray almighty God to sanctify her death to the good of the community.

GEORGE W. BROWN.

TRIBUTE OF RESPECT.

At our quarterly meeting, held on Saturday, the fourteenth instant, the following preamble and resolutions were adopted:

Whereas, It hath pleased almighty God to remove from our midst and take to himself one of our worthy and much-esteemed members, Bro. SETH WAGONER; therefore, be it

Resolved, By the Quarterly Conference of Toomsuba circuit, Mississippi Conference, convened at Lockhart on the fourteenth day of June, 1873, That though our hearts are much saddened by the absence of our good brother, yet we will bow in meek submission to the sovereign will of our heavenly Father, who, as we are assured, doeth all things well.

Resolved, That in the death of Bro. Wagoner this conference has lost one of its most worthy members, the church one of her purest and most faithful children, and his bereaved wife and children a kind and beneficent husband and father.

Resolved, That the family of our brother have our sincere condolence in their sad bereavement, and that we commend them to him who is able to comfort his children in their saddest hour.

Resolved, That we will endeavor to follow the worthy example of our dear brother by living consistently with our Christian profession, like as he died—in Christian triumph—and go home to heaven.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be spread upon the minutes of this conference, a copy furnished the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE for publication, and also that a copy be sent the bereaved family.

OAKSDALE STATION, MISS., June 10, 1873.

EDWIN HAMBLIN was born in Rogersville, Hawkins county, East Tennessee, July 11, 1795; married to Louisiana Smith in 1826; moved to Madison county, Mississippi, in 1835, where he lived till June 8, 1873, when he "was not, for God took him!"

The deceased, being no ordinary man in many particulars, deserves more than a passing notice. In many of the attributes of a noble and dignified manhood he stood peerless among his fellows. Having a highly cultivated appreciation of strict justice, "Do unto others as you would have them do to you" formed the basis of all the social and business relations of his life.

In August, 1854, Edwin Hamblin, with almost his entire family, embraced Christianity and united with the Methodist Episcopal Church South, of which he remained a devoted member till his death. Though advanced in years before uniting with the people of God, he "fought a good fight," and won the crown of life. His Christian character was exemplary rather than demonstrative, marked by beauty and symmetry rather than by paroxysmal ebullitions—not found in the passing storm, but in the still, small voice; not vociferous, like Simon Peter, but patient and confiding as "the beloved disciple." In his latter years he gave much time and study to the word of God, and took great delight in discussing its heaven-appointed problems.

When interrogated in his last moments he gave satisfactory assurances that "over the river" there would be administered unto him an abundant entrance into a higher and holier spiritual life—a life void of sorrows, tears, separations. The mellowness of his Christian character was especially marked around the family hearth. His paternal love and tenderness, his great solicitude and anxiety for the future of his smitten family, his earnest counsel and faithful prayers in their behalf, constitute a moral legacy inestimable in value.

A FRIEND.

MRS. MARY A. POWELL, wife of Colonel R. H. Powell, died at Union Springs, Alabama, June 18, 1873, in the forty-seventh year of her age. She was the daughter of Colonel John P. and Mrs. Mary A. Blackman, and was born in Walton county, Georgia. She was married to her now bereaved husband on the ninth of April, 1844, and for twenty-eight years was the light of his home, the joy and comfort of his heart. She was converted and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church South in 1845, under the ministry of Rev. James Peeler.

The above announcement, already made, in part, through the secular papers of Alabama, tells of an elegant home made desolate. Colonel Powell is just such a man as to have sympathy in such an hour; and the devoted daughter upon whom have devolved the duties of the household for years past, because of the extreme feebleness of the mother, and the manly sons who have so nobly addressed themselves to work and business since the disaster of the war, all claim, in this dark hour, the sympathy of friends. The frail wife and mother, so devoted to those of her home, has regarded the matter of death a mere question of time for years past. As her pastor for two years (1868 and 1870) it was my privilege often to enjoy her society. She was ever simply to be nursed, after she became known to me. Too feeble to be often at church, how she regretted it. But through suffering and weakness God was bringing her fully to realize her dependence, and at the last "quietude! quietude!" was the desire of her heart, expressed with her latest breath. "Del Rosa," the elegant home, was ever open to the itinerant; and the pastor of Union Springs church knew where he would ever find a welcome greeting. Personal friendship prompts me to say more of the affectionate, ardent woman who has at last found her rest, but I forbear. Truly our friends are flitting away as shadows. A faithful, affectionate wife and mother, a generous neighbor and a true friend, her memory is embalmed.

How brief is any season of life and love allotted us below! I drop these lines hurriedly, down by the sea, at the instance of my bereaved brother—heartily, indeed, for he and all of his were my friends unswervingly; and I mingle my sorrows with theirs again, now that another has been called away from the loving throng.

(A flower that bears a little urn of bronze.)

As half-shamed, yet wishing us to see,
The Meadow Beauty stepped h o'er the lea,
An Eastern maiden she in costume seems,
Like those that figure in Arabian dreams:
With purple turban and with jetty braid,
With gems and gold, and mantle of brocade.

Upon her head she bears a brazen urn;
Her little footsteps press the tender fern;
And as she pauses at the crystal springs
Her joyous laughter through the forest rings;
For in the mirror of the brook she spies
An image like her own, with pleased surprise.

How can she sing, within a foreign land,
The words the Gentiles fail to understand?
How comes the merry exile here, in truth?
Is she a sister of the gentle Ruth?
And in our meadows musing but to glean
Some precious herb in Judah yet unseen?

Her silent harp upon the willows hung,
The piteous song of home that she has sung,
Her rippling laughter and her girlish glee,
Speak much of sadness and of fear to me.
And I would gladly soothe the exile's pain,
Or lead her to the Hebrew fount again.

The Transit of Venus,

OR THE INITIAL STEP TOWARD THE MEASUREMENT OF THE UNIVERSE.

BY JACOB ABBOTT.

We hear, and we see in the papers, a great deal in these days about the approaching transit of Venus, and of the preparations which different governments and learned societies are making for observing the phenomenon in various parts of the world. We have a few words to say in respect to the nature and significance of this phenomenon, and of those results depending upon it, which make it an event of so much interest to scientific men among all nations.

The planet Venus, as is well known, is one of the two which lie between the earth and the sun, Mercury, the planet nearest the sun, being the other. The planes in which these planets revolve are different from that in which the earth moves, and thus they very seldom come so directly between the earth and the sun, when passing round on the hither side of their orbits, as to appear to us to pass across his disk. Whenever one of them does thus pass it appears like a small black spot, entering upon one side on the margin of the disk, and passing across the disk to the other side. Such an occurrence forms one of those distinct, exact and precisely defined phenomena, determinable, as to time, within a small fraction of a second, which are the delight of the astronomical observer.

The main purpose for which the transits of Mercury and Venus are available is to determine the parallax of the sun.

And what is the parallax of the sun?

One evening a gentleman, standing on the piazza of his house, observed a bright light, like that of a fire, at the side of a house situated on rising ground about a mile away to the eastward. At a little distance from him was another house, where he observed a group of ladies standing on the lawn, whose attention was apparently attracted by the same light. Presently, observing that the gentleman was also looking at it, one of the ladies called out to him—for the distance at which she was standing, though considerable, was not too great for a voice to be heard in the still evening air—"Is that a fire?"

"Where does it appear to be—to you?" asked the gentleman.

"At the corner of the roof of the church," said the lady; "and it is increasing."

There was a church a little way from the distant house where the light was seen, and to the right of it, as seen by these parties.

"To me it seems to be at the house," said the gentleman; "and if it appears to you to be at the church, I know it is not near those buildings, but far beyond. I think it is no fire, but probably the moon rising."

A few moments' watching of the rising light showed that it really was the moon.

Thus the distance of the source of the light was roughly indicated by the differences of direction in which the light itself and the intervening objects were seen by observers stationed at a certain distance from each other.

The difference of direction in which a heavenly body is seen, as observed from two stations at a known distance from each other, is called its parallax, and the parallax being known, and also the distance of the two stations from which the observations are made, there are simple mathematical calculations by which the distance of the heavenly body can be determined—the result being, of course, more or less accurate according to the nicety of the instruments and the accuracy of the observations.

In the case of a transit of Mercury or of Venus the moment of time in which the planet enters upon the sun's disk will, of course, on the principle above explained, vary with the position of the observer upon the earth's surface; and the time which it occupies in crossing the disk will also vary if the places of observation are chosen with a view to this difference. Let us suppose that two persons are looking out at windows, one in the first and one in the second story of the same house, at the full moon, when it is rising, and that a telegraphic wire is in such a position and at such a distance from the house as to lie across the disk of the moon as seen by the two observers. It is plain that the place of the dark line, which it will appear to form, will be higher, as seen by the observer in the lower story, than as seen from the higher position, and that its length on the face of the moon will be greater or less, according as it traverses the disk through the center, or more or less above or below it. And it is easy to conceive that it would be possible—if sufficiently accurate measurements and calculations could be made—to determine from the different lengths of the line formed on the face of the planet, the difference in height of the two positions from which the two observations were made, and vice versa, to determine the relative distances of the wire and the moon from the distances of the two stations of the observers from each other.

Now the track of the planet—whether Mercury or Venus—in its transit across the face of the sun, forms, of course, a line similar to those produced by the telegraph wire in the case supposed, the line being more or less distant from the center of the disk according to the positions of the two stations from which the observations are made. The stations are consequently established in positions as far from each other as possible on the surface of the earth consistently with their being such that the sun shall remain above the horizon for each one through the whole duration of the transit—which is sometimes a period of several hours—so that all the "contacts" can be observed. There are four of these "contacts:"

1. When the forward margin of the plane first touches the outer margin of the sun, called the first exterior contact.

2. When the planet has just fully entered upon the disk, so that the other margin of the planet—the rear, so to speak, in respect to the line of its march—just leaves the margin of the sun, the first interior contact.

3. When the advancing margin just reaches the farther edge of the sun's disk, the second interior contact.

4. When the other margin just leaves the disk on the farther side, the second exterior contact.

It seems that of these, the two interior contacts, as they are called—that is, the second and third—can be most accurately determined, because, just before they take place, a very thin line of light at the margin of the sun in the one case appears and in the other disappears, in such a way as to mark with great precision the moment when the contact takes place.

The transits of Venus are considered of far greater importance than those of Mercury, in respect to furnishing data for astronomical calculations, on account of the former planet being more nearly in an intermediate position between the earth and the sun, and the resulting angles being consequently larger and more susceptible of exact determination. The principles and methods, however, are in both cases substantially the same.

Although all the movements of the planets follow certain fixed and unchangeable laws, such phenomena as the transits only occur when certain coincidences take place, and these coincidences occur only at what are, to our view, irregular intervals. It happens also, curiously enough, that in the case of Venus two of these coincidences occur within a few years of each other, after which a long interval follows during which the planet passes either above or below the sun, as seen from the earth, and consequently no transit occurs.

The two transits which are now approaching, and the first of which is so strongly attracting the attention of the astronomical world, are to take place, the first December 8, 1874, and the second December 6, 1882. After these there will not be another until the year 2004.

At the last transit, which took place in 1769, the celebrated navigator, Captain Cook, had the charge of the observations at one of the stations determined upon by the Royal Society of London, which was at Otaheite. The other was at Hudson Bay. From the results of the observations then made the distance of the sun from the earth was determined to be about ninety-five millions of miles, and this has been the received estimate of the distance until a few years since, when, by some other process, this result was found to be too great, as was supposed, and there seemed to be proof that the true value was nearer to ninety-one millions.

The approaching transit is now looked forward to with special interest as likely to furnish the means of definitely settling the question, and great preparations have been for some time in process, both by learned societies and by the different governments of Europe and America, for observing the phenomena in the most accurate manner possible. The choice of stations, the discussion of the best methods of computation, the construction of instruments, and the selection and appointment of observers, have all been subjects of much discussion for many months. All the preparations are now very far advanced, and the whole scientific world is looking forward with great interest to the result.

The elements to be determined by the observers at the different stations which have been or may be selected at different points on the earth's surface, and which will form the data for the subsequent calculations, are, first, the precise instants at which the several contacts take place, as seen from the several stations, and, secondly, the precise points on the sun's disk at which they severally occur.

As has already been remarked, the observation of a transit of Venus is the best and surest means of ascertaining the distance of the sun from the earth; and as this forms a standard from which all the other magnitudes and distances pertaining to the solar system are ascertained, and as, moreover, the diameter of the orbit of the earth is the only base line by means of which all knowledge of the distances of the stars can be ascertained, the observations about to be made are literally and strictly designed for the purpose of verifying the initial step toward the measurement of the universe—at least of all that portion of it which comes within the range of human vision, and is a subject of human knowledge.—Christian Weekly.

SENATOR SCOTT was talking to a Pennsylvania Sunday school, a Sunday or two ago, and asked the scholars why Simon was kept in prison. One of the teachers quietly prompted a boy to say that it was for a hostage, and the youth, not quite catching the words, piped out: "He was detained for postage."

Single Text Sermon.

The English Independent has a pointed communication enforcing the idea that preaching sermons based on a single text, sometimes containing only a few words, is a grievous mistake, and one of the causes which has taken from the pulpit much of its attraction and power. And the writer points out what he conceives to be a more excellent way, as follows:

"All pastors, I believe, should expound some part of the Scriptures at every service, both morning and evening. By expounding I do not mean what is called a running comment, nor the system of drawing inferences from passages, and far less that dry mode which continually reminds one of the lexicon, and which would coolly devote ten minutes in determining whether the word 'therefore' looked backward or forward. An exposition worthy of the name will bring out in a clear manner all the truths in the passage, and apply these to the people who listen. This was the method adopted by the great Teacher. 'And beginning at Moses and all the prophets, he expounded unto them in all the Scriptures the things concerning himself.' The apostles and other primitive preachers followed the same course. If ever they did preach from single texts and detached sentences, we have no record of such a practice, and for many years after the times of the apostles preaching was almost wholly expository. This method puts far more honor upon the Bible than the sermonic can ever do. In the former the divine element is prominent; in the latter the human. However eloquent and cogent the words of a preacher may be, we cannot say, 'They are quick and powerful, and sharper than any two-edged sword, piercing even to the dividing asunder of soul and spirit, and of the joints and marrow,' and discerners 'of the thoughts and intents of the heart.' This method is also highly advantageous to the minister. It leads him to study phases of truth which otherwise he might overlook, yea, would overlook. He will therefore have 'a fuller treasure, a richer mind, than if he were to spend all his time in looking out texts, making skeletons, and clothing them in the common way.' It gives him the opportunity, besides, to speak of topics, thoughts and illustrations, which many who listen to him require to know, and which we can speak of without being justly accused of personalities, seeing that they all come in the ordinary course. It enables him, likewise, to secure all that variety of which I wrote in my last letter, a thing which can scarcely be done, except in very skillful hands, by always adhering to the form of didactic discourses from single texts. And while this method is beneficial to the minister, it is most acceptable to his people. They love it because it is so instructive, interesting and varied. They would rather not hear the sermon than be deprived of the exposition, and I am in a position to know that the exposition has been much more influential than the sermon in attracting many to the pulpit, and binding them to it with intense affection."

Death of Paganini.

His days of speculation and glory were alike numbered. In 1839 he was a dying man. He struggled with indomitable energy against his deadly foe. He now often took up the guitar, which, in the spring-time of his life, had been so intimately associated with his first romantic attachment. He was a great admirer of Beethoven, and not long before his death he played one of that master's sublime quartettes, his favorite one, with great energy. In extreme weakness he labored out to hear a requiem of Chernbini for male voices, and soon afterward, with all but his last energies, he insisted upon being conveyed to one of the churches in Marseilles, where he took part in the solemn mass of Beethoven. His voice was now nearly extinct, and his sleep, that greatest of consolations, was broken up by dreadful fits of coughing; his features began to sink, and he appeared to be little more than a living skeleton, so excessive and fearful was his emaciation. Still he did not believe in the approach of death. Day by day he grew more restless, and talked of spending the winter at Nice, and he did live on till the spring.

On the night of May 27, 1840, after a protracted paroxysm, he suddenly became strangely tranquil. He sank into a quiet sleep, and awoke refreshed and calm. The air was soft and warm. He desired them to open the windows wide, draw the curtains of his bed, and allow the moon, just rising in the unclouded glory of an Italian sky, to flood his apartment. He sat gazing intently upon it for some minutes, and then again sank drowsily into a fitful sleep. Rousing himself once more, his fine ear caught the sound of the rustling leaves as they were gently stirred by some breath of air outside. In his dying moments this sound of the night wind in the trees seemed to affect him strangely, and the summer nights on the banks of the Arno long ago may have flashed back upon his mind, and called up fading memories. But now the Arno was exchanged for the wide Mediterranean sea, all ablaze with light. Mozart, in his last moments, pointed to the score of the Requiem, which lay before him on his bed, and his lips were moving, to indicate the effect of kettledrums in a particular place, as he sank back in a swoon; and it is recorded of Paganini that on that fair moonlight night in May, as the last dimness came over his eyes, he stretched out his hand to grasp his faithful friend and companion, his Guarnerius violin, and, as he struck its chords once more and found that it ceased to speak with its old magic power, he himself sank back and expired, like one broken-hearted, to find that a little, feeble, confused noise was all that was now left of those strains that he had created and the world had worshiped.—Good Words.

Courage.

In Scotland there is a small town called Wick; the great business of the place is herring-fishing, the men earning their living at it, and the boys being brought up to follow the trade of their fathers. Now it happened that rather more than a year ago a lad, thirteen years old, named Sutherland, went out fishing in company with six other boys, and they were in a little boat not far from the shore, when, something in the water catching their attention, they crowded to one side to look over, the boat capsized, and they were all thrown into the sea. In this case many would think only of themselves and eagerly secure their own safety; but our little hero was not so selfish. He directly caught hold of his nearest companion, and, holding him fast, swam with him to the shore. They and another boy were now safe, but, to their horror, the four others, unable to swim, were struggling in the water. Sutherland stayed not a moment, but, dashing into the sea, went back to the boys, and, seizing another, swam again to the shore. And now the brave boy started again and saved another; but there were still two more, and Sutherland was tired—so tired he could hardly spread out his arms and legs to swim—but yet he went, and the sixth boy was saved. Now one more remained, but Sutherland's strength was spent, and it seemed like facing death to start again. He, a brave child of thirteen, had saved the lives of four others, and now must he try for the fifth? Yes, the courageous boy would rather die than neglect his friend. Again he began to swim, but the effort was too great—his strength was all gone, he could no longer stretch out his arms; and his lifeless body sank in the water and lay on its sandy bed.

Now I will tell you another story about courage of a different kind.

Hedley Vicars was a gay young officer in the army, surrounded by all the light and thoughtless; he was a bright, merry fellow, much beloved by his comrades, but he was not a Christian. He and his friends made fun of religion and religious people, and for a man to speak a word for Jesus would be to bring down ridicule upon himself. Hedley Vicars, however, had not long been in the army when God taught him about himself, about his great love for sinners, and for him, yes, even for him, who had cared nothing for God.

Hedley Vicars was now a Christian, and he must confess Christ, for whosoever is ashamed to confess Christ before men, of him will he be ashamed before his Father in heaven. It is a hard thing to subject one's self to the scoffings of all one's companions, but Vicars was no coward. He placed his Bible one morning upon the table and laid the colors of his regiment on the open page. He thought his friends would be calling, and so they did. At first they laughed, and would not believe that their comrade had become a Christian, but he confessed the truth, and, bearing all the jeers of the worldly, Hedley Vicars from that day to the day of his death acknowledged Jesus Christ to be his Lord and Master. I can tell you this, dear boys and girls: it took more courage to lay that open Bible on the table than to go out to the fiercest battle.—Angel of Peace.

Attending Public Worship.

The public men of England set a good example to the people in a uniform attendance on Sunday worship. A capital story is told of the Duke of Wellington, in this connection, by Mr. Gleig, in his memoir:

"Both at Strathfieldsaye and Walmer the duke was a regular attendant at public worship, and received the sacrament as often as it was administered. It was a touching sight to see that great and venerable man kneeling devoutly before the rails of the village church, the sunlight falling through the stained glass upon his head, and his own attention fixed entirely upon the act in which he was participating. He was not always so attentive during sermon-time. Indeed, unless the preacher were eloquent, or the subject out of the common order, he used generally to gather himself up in the corner of the pew and go to sleep, when he sometimes snored audibly. He was very particular also in requiring that his guests should attend divine service somewhere. It happened on one occasion that Count Nugent, an Irish gentleman, but an Austrian general, paid him a visit at Walmer Castle. Sunday morning came, and his excellency said:

"'Duke, do you go to church?'

"'Always'; don't you?'

"'I can't go to church with you, for you know I'm a Catholic.'

"'Oh! very well,' was the answer, and he rang the bell. When the servant entered the duke said:

"'His excellency wants to go to the Roman Catholic chapel; you can show him where it is.'

"And sure enough to the Roman Catholic chapel his excellency was marched. The duke, as he walked to church, observed:

"'I knew he did not want me to go to church, nor to go himself either, but I thought it best that we should both go.'"

UGLINESS LEADING A WOMAN TO BECOME A CHRISTIAN.—My friend, Dr. Buffington, told me (Rev. Dr. Newton) that a young woman came to see him once about joining his church. He asked her what made her first think of wanting to be a Christian. She said it was because she found she was growing so ugly. She looked in the glass one day when she was very angry, and was fairly frightened to see how ugly she looked. She found that the bad tempers that she was giving way to were making ugly marks upon her face. She was afraid to think what this would grow to by-and-by. This led her to think what a dreadful thing sin must be. Then she prayed to Jesus to take away her sin, and make her a Christian. This young woman was right. What she said was true. There is nothing that will help to make us look ugly sooner than giving way to bad temper.—Evangelist.

Religious Intelligence.

LUTHER'S translation of the Bible is said to have had a circulation thus far of 351,000,000.

THE Rev. Messrs. Cochran and McDonald have recently gone out as missionaries of the Canada Wesleyan Church to Japan.

ARCHBISHOP PURCELL, the Roman Catholic primate of Cincinnati, it is said, has forbidden the children of Roman Catholics to read any book from the public library.

THE minister who has been settled the longest without colleague over one congregation in Massachusetts is the Rev. William P. Paine, of Holden, who has been in his present parish forty years.

THE Virginia Episcopalians report 1,100 confirmations during the past year and additions to the communion numbering 1,400. The contributions, as far as heard from, not including current expenses, amount to $150,000.

THE statistics of the Irish Wesleyan Methodists, according to the May district meetings, show 19,976 members, and increase of 203; on trial, 600; emigrants, 442; deaths, 310; candidates for the ministry, 13.

THE first Christian school in Jerusalem was opened in 1817 with nine members; now there are five schools, with upward of 400 scholars. In all Palestine there are twenty-five Protestant schools, with about 1,000 members.

IN 1819 the Baptists had in the United States 430 associations, 2,702 churches, 2,000 ministers, 195,000 members. The American Baptist Year Book gives, for 1873, 853 associations, 19,720 churches, 14,892 ministers, 1,585,212 members.

THE Presbytery of Arkansas sent to the late Southern General Assembly an overture, asking the adoption of the International Text for Sunday School Lessons for 1874. But the question was shelved by referring it to an ex-committee on publications.

THE Lucknow Witness says that at Trinity church, Kandy, was lately witnessed the public disrobing of a Buddhist priest, who is prepared to embrace Christianity. He made a formal recantation of his old tenets, and profession of his acceptance of the Christian faith.

AT the Second Presbyterian church, Princeton, New Jersey, on the first instant, Mr. Rioge Koe, of Japan, was baptized on profession of his faith in Christ, and received into membership. He is one of the young men sent to this country by the government of Japan to be educated.

IN AUSTRALIA there are four Wesleyan Conferences, with 361 ministers; 1,948 churches and other preaching places; 3,261 local preachers; 3,821 class leaders; 66,686 members, including probationers; 318,856 attendants on public worship; 112,378 Sunday school scholars, and 104,158 day scholars.

THE Calcutta Missionary Conference has arranged a course of lectures by English-speaking natives in the Cathedral Mission and General Assembly's Colleges alternately. The first lecture, on "Documentary Credentials and Attesting Witnesses of Jesus Christ," will be given in the Cathedral Mission College.

IF CONVERSIONS from Protestantism to Roman Catholicism take place occasionally, it is equally true that conversions from the papal church to the Protestant occur. It is reported that recently an entire congregation of German Roman Catholics in Baltimore requested to be placed under the episcopal oversight of Bishop Huntington.

POPERY finds in Belgium a congenial clime. Pilgrimages like those at Lourdes, in France, are made to the shrine of La Salette, and at Charleroi a miracle takes place every Friday in the bleeding of the hands and feet of a young girl, in imitation of the Savior on the cross, which medical men have succeeded in making the villagers believe to be genuine.

IN JANUARY LAST the cornerstone of an Episcopal church was laid at Rome, and agents are in this country raising funds to complete the structure. It is expected that the new chapel will be completed for divine service on Christmas day. Till Protestant capital entered Italy there was not a mile of railroad, not a foot of canal, not a lighthouse on all the coast. It is fitting that Protestant capital should furnish a place in Rome for Protestant worship.

THE Synod of the Irish Episcopal Church finally refused to expunge the sacramentarian phrases from the baptismal office; but, in imitation of the American Convention, adopted an explanatory rubric, as follows: "Whereas, the language used in the formularies of the church to describe the grace of baptism hath been variously interpreted, it is hereby declared that so far as such language doth denote admission to the visible church of Christ, and a visible signing and sealing of the promises of God, subject to the conditions of the Christian covenant, it is to be understood as expressing the privilege and responsibility of all who receive that sacrament; but, in so far as such language denoteth a further grace, the Church of Ireland doth not require her members to interpret it as determining, either in the case of infants or adults, that such grace is received by all who receive baptism, or that they who receive such grace do of necessity receive it at the time of the administration of that holy ordinance."

FROM the third annual report of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society of the Presbyterian Church (American) we learn that this society has fifty-nine missionaries actually laboring in foreign fields, while three returned missionaries, supported by the society, are at present in this country, and six recruits are waiting to be sent, besides one lady physician as yet uncommissioned, who has been added in her efforts for obtaining an education by the society. At the close of last year 100 auxiliary societies and eighty mission bands were represented by this board; now 239 auxiliaries and 143 bands are included in its list. The number of laby missionaries representing the Presbyterian Board in India has increased during the past year from eleven to twenty-three, besides whom the society employs eleven Bible-readers and eight native teachers. In China fourteen lady missionaries are employed; in Persia, Africa and Mexico five missionaries are apportioned to each country; three labor in Japan, two in Africa, two in the Chippewa Reservation, one in the Nez Perces station, and one in Siam.

THE Jewish Messenger says: "A gratifying success attends the Jewish schools in Asia and Africa, under the patronage of the Alliance Israelite. Seventeen are now established in various localities; are excellently attended by both sexes, with the best results. Besides improving the mental and moral culture of our own co-religionists, these schools make a powerful moral impression on the natives; and the reflection that the Jews have friends in Europe to aid and educate them, deters many a prowling Arab or Moor from attacking the defenseless Israelites. The difficulties encountered by the Alliance in establishing Jewish schools in barbarous lands have been many, but they are fast becoming surmounted. Much has been done, but vastly more is to be accomplished before education is thoroughly diffused in the East, and our brethren are raised in mental culture above the grovelling mediocrity of the nations wherein they dwell on sufferance."

THE Rev. John Gottlieb Auer, D. D., lately consecrated as missionary bishop of Cape Palmas, Africa, and parts adjacent, gives in the June number of the Spirit of Missions some forty-two Grebo proverbs to show that the Africans, even in their heathenish degradation, have a rich supply of common sense and ideas similar to those of more civilized nations. From these we quote: "Stopping (hindering) another, thou steppest thyself." "The ox says: Given leaves do not satisfy." "Pull the child out of the water before you punish it." "The snail said: 'I should tell it, but I have no foot for running.'" ("It is not safe to tell a secret if you cannot run away.") "The monkey ate with two hands and fell from the tree." "The (big-headed) fish says: 'Your head must grow before you ascend the river'"—i. e., "You need sense before you travel." "Broken things last long." "If nothing troubles you, you are unborn."

THE Irish Presbyterian General Assembly has had a heated discussion of the question of using organs in the church services. A committee, appointed by the previous General Assembly to consider the subject, reported that the General Assembly of 1866 had declared that organs were already excluded by the law of the church, and that no additional legislation was necessary. This was not satisfactory to the anti-organists, for there were already a half dozen organs in use in the churches under the Assembly's jurisdiction, which they were anxious to turn out. The matter was finally disposed of to everybody's satisfaction, and quite sensibly, under the circumstances, by the unanimous adoption of the following "compromise" resolutions, which were proposed by the moderator: "Having a natural regard for the rights of conscience, and a common desire for the peace and prosperity of our beloved church, we resolve: 1. To abstain from passing any law in relation to the service of praise. 2. To give up and abstain from the use of instrumental music in the public worships. 3. To address ourselves with increased diligence to improve the psalmody of the church."

THE Congregational church at Oakland, California, has a Chinese Sunday school, with a regular attendance of from sixty-five to seventy Chinamen; and at its fourth anniversary, recently held, about 150 Celestials were in attendance. Among other exercises there was an original composition by Dang Hung, an original oration by Hee Gam, and recitations of Scripture by Tear On, Ah Shib, Hoe Tong, Quork Toy, Jew Low, Holng Bark and several other more or less euphonious gentlemen. Hee Gam's address was more or less autobiographical. He told of going, after he had learned to speak English, into a church in San Francisco one day and there hearing a remark from the preacher that the conversion of the Chinese was a hopeless task. Discouraged at this official decree of reprobation, he went no more to church for four years; but, on going to Oakland, found a place where different views were entertained regarding the future of the Chinaman, where he was himself converted and enlisted in the Sunday school work. This church at Oakland has been from the first sagaciously and successfully at work for the Christianization of the Chinese.

THE deaconess and her duties seem to be growing in favor among the Episcopalians. A year ago there was but one in the Diocese of Long Island; now there are eleven, four of whom were admitted to office last week, in Brooklyn, with quite impressive services. Bishop Littlejohn, in receiving them, explained that the order of deaconesses was a corporate body, which could hold property and receive bequests, and the duties of whose members were: to visit the sick, succor the distressed and teach the ignorant. The candidates were to devote themselves to this life for not less than three years. Rev. Dr. Hall, of Holy Trinity, particularly warned the new deaconesses against superstitious notions and habits, probably not wishing them to have the outward resemblance to "Sisters of Charity," and told them that their way would be somewhat difficult, and that they must needs have great heart and enthusiasm in their work. The speaker admitted that, in some respects, the influence of the priesthood was less now than ever before, and that it was for woman to come in and introduce better modes of relieving the sick and needy in the parishes. A fund for the use of the deaconesses has already been started in the diocese, and the Bishop thinks that the candidates for the work will be coming forward more rapidly hereafter.

The most important and practical conception of heaven is that it is a character. It is a state the elements of which are not gained after we get there, but are attained here, and carried with us into those regions of light. The apostle gives thanks unto the Father "which hath made us meet to be partakers of the inheritance of the saints in light." The atoning blood not only delivers from condemnation, and from the curse of the broken law, but it is represented as cleansing from sin. It not only satisfies the divine government and vindicates the holiness of God, but it saves the soul from the dominion and pollution of sin. It declares the righteousness of God, and also through faith purifies the heart. Both as a legal ground of condemnation and judgment, and as a personal defilement, was sin to be taken away by the Lamb of God. Hence the washing and purifying power of the blood. "The blood of Jesus Christ, his Son, cleanseth us from all sin." Of the same import is the inspired exclamation: "Unto him that loved us, and washed us from our sins in his own blood, and hath made us kings and priests unto God and his Father: to him be glory and dominion forever and ever. Amen."

A present holiness, and a personal, is contemplated in these and in many other exhibitions of the sacrificial death of the Son of God. Pardon is but a part, although the head and fountain of all spiritual life and experience. The work of inward holiness is connected with the remission of sins, and is most emphatically declared to be essential to the heavenly life. It is holiness without which no man shall see the Lord, and the blessedness of the pure in heart consists in this: that "they shall see God." To be saved in heaven we must first be saved from sin on earth. It is true that "it doth not yet appear what we shall be," but there is no uncertainty about what we must be in order to enter the heavenly kingdom. The new birth is absolute, and without this birth of the Spirit no man can either enter or see the beatific inheritance. As to place, in its relation to the present world we inhabit, or in its relation to the vast system of material bodies which stretch beyond the reach of the most powerful telescopic reflectors, it is a matter of curious and unprofitable speculation. What the raised body will be, what the mind in its attainments and powers, and what are to be the splendid and sublime accessories of scenery, employment and society, are pleasing themes, but their practical importance is less than nothing in comparison with the character which constitutes our fitness for the heavenly home.

Christ is the foundation of all our hope, and it is through faith in him that we are to be saved; but then it is through faith in him as a Savior from sin. There is no other way by which his atoning merit can bring a soul to glory except that which regenerates and purifies the heart. He is the ground, the procuring cause, the meritorious means; but there can be no heaven for any unless they have attained to sanctification of the Spirit, and have believed with the heart unto righteousness. It is this conception of a gracious meetness for heaven that stimulates the healthful Christian life, and inspires it with the earnest and heart-searching pursuit of holiness. "And every man that hath this hope in him purifieth himself, even as he is pure." There is nothing more contradictory or absurd than to talk of holiness in heaven, while the attainment here is neglected or ignored, unless it be the thought of the irreligious mind that heaven can be anything conceivable apart from the spirituality of those who compose its society.

The greatest comfort and glory of the gospel are the freeness and fullness of a present salvation from sin which it proclaims. Heaven, as the object of hope and pursuit, is always connected with the purity which the blood of Christ secures to the believing heart. It is needful and profitable that we should look at these subjects as thus related. Holiness and heaven—the work of sanctification, "perfecting holiness in the fear of God," and the city which "had no need of the sun, neither of the moon, to shine in it; for the glory of God did lighten it, and the Lamb is the light thereof."

Faint Rebuke.

The orthodox (Methodist and Presbyterian, North) are beginning to fall out with the everlasting Beecher. They may quit publishing his sermons and Friday evening lectures for awhile, but the divergence, we fear, will not last. We are somewhat surprised that they express so much love and tenderness for Mr. Beecher personally, while they characterize his theology as emasculated and as pernicious in its tendency. Why so careful and gingerly in their treatment of a man whose power and influence for evil is greater than that of any other man in America? A recent sermon of the Brooklyn preacher, in which he explicitly avows Universalism, is the occasion of this condemnation from his old friends and admirers. But with this heaven, and with other tinctures of false doctrines, his sermons, lectures and books have been largely imbued for a long time. They ought to have spoken out long ago, but their protest is uttered only when further silence became impossible.

The truth of the matter is, Beecher has been too good an abolitionist, radical and war man, and his services to the dominant party may yet be altogether too important to allow of his being cast out as a vile and pernicious fellow. For lang syne, and also for the possible futures, if his theology receives a gentle admonition, the notorious preacher must himself be conciliated. From such a true yoke-fellow and co-laborer in politics, with the memory of Sharpe's rifles and Exeter Hall speeches fresh and fragrant, even the straitest of the orthodox cannot get their consent to part. They know well that his sermons are doing more mischief than any other class of deliverances or publications of the day, leading to the shipwreck of faith of thousands, and undermining the convictions and counterworking the religious education of the young. They know that this man, grandly endowed and of world-wide fame, is a fountain of moral poison, and the fertile propagator of the most serious and destructive religious error. And yet they speak of him with deference, and are most careful to declare their unbroken friendship and high consideration for him. The reasons are obvious. They have pulled together and wrought together in another than the theological harness, and the cords of political ultraism and expediency are stronger than the duties and obligations of religious truth.

It is one of the most significant manifestations of the evils of the political-religious harlotry which pervade the Northern churches. Beecher's eminence as a political preacher for twenty years has told most disastrously not only upon the doctrine and modes of thought of the pulpit, but it has introduced a style of peculiar weakness. The Northern pulpit is most sadly and disgustingly Beecherized, and the younger class of preachers in all the churches are more or less tainted and perverted. Instead of a stout and full gospel which exhibits human depravity, and the perdition of the impenitent, and the necessity of faith in a sacrificial atonement, and the birth of the Spirit, they are talking mere twaddle about "Christian manhood," and a one-sided divine love which excludes the principles of a government of justice and truth. Why does not the Northern religious press more severely denounce his teachings? The reason is a sad one, and the most lamentable aspect of the subject.

What Mr. Beecher may be personally we do not know. He may be pure in his morals and sincere in his theological views; but it is with the character and tendency of these views that we have to do. If they are as false and ruinous in their character as we have reason to suppose, why not say so plainly and put people on their guard? To pat a man on the back and call him a clever fellow, and eulogize him generally, while he is leading the world to hell, is very queer, to say the least. We doubt whether John would have administered rebuke for false doctrine in a tone or in terms liable to an ambiguous meaning. "If there come any man unto you and bring not this doctrine, receive him not unto your house, neither bid him God-speed; for he that biddeth him God-speed is partaker of his evil deeds."

Methodism Declining.

No small stir has been produced among the Methodists of New York city by the discovery that Methodism at that point is declining. We believe the number of members and of churches is about the same as twenty years ago, while the increase of the city has been immense. Compared with other denominations, the Methodists are falling behind, we believe, not only in New York, but in most of the larger cities. As a denomination the Methodist Episcopal Church counts large gains every year, but these gains are in the rural districts. No other ecclesiastical polity approaches the Methodist in its adaptation to the country, or in its rapid extension; but in the large cities other denominations, as the Episcopalian and Presbyterian, outstrip it. Here is a generally conceded fact, but there is little agreement in the explanation of it. Why not admit at once that while the Methodist system is the most effective of any for the whole work of the church, other systems may be better adapted to large cities? The Methodist attributes the decline in the cities to the frequent change of pastors which the law of the church requires, and this is only saying that an itinerant economy is not favorable to the highest success. If this be the cause, the only remedy lies in such a modification of the itinerancy as to make city appointments exceptions to the present rule; but such a change would never work smoothly, and must be given up as impracticable. The New York Observer, occupying as Presbyterian a standpoint perhaps different if not more favorable to clear views of the truth, gives its solution of the question as follows:

The zeal with which this question has been discussed recently in this city is somewhat surprising. It seems there has been a falling off in numbers here and in Brooklyn, as compared with some other denominations; not so great a gain, if not a decrease, and this fact has roused inquiry into the cause. We have read the debates in the clerical meetings as reported in the daily papers. But we do not find any substantial agreement among the speakers as to the cause, nor do we find that any of them touch the root of the matter, as it appears to one who has studied the rise and progress of Methodism as one of the most remarkable religious movements of any age of the world.

We do not say that Methodism is declining. But if it be true that its numbers do not increase as rapidly now as they once did, we would look for the cause in the fact that the Methodist Church does not now address itself so directly and so largely to the multitude, to the numbers, to the masses, as it did formerly. With the increase of learning, of wealth and influence it has sought and found its strength less in numbers than in the intelligence, culture and standing of members. Pursuing this track, it has built magnificent temples for worship, conformed in its ceremonials to the fashion of the times, and become in many of its features as prim and pretentious as the proudest Presbyterians in the city.

But the masses of the people are not attracted by such measures. They were met and held by early Methodism. They will be left behind if Methodism loses its early simplicity and fervor. This idea might be followed out at great length and illustrated by facts. But if it is not itself a fact, we could not make it so by any amount of argument.

Letter from Ireland.

MR. EDITOR: Cork is situated on the beautiful river Lee, and is surrounded with scenery which might gratify the most ardent lover of the picturesque. It has a large number of costly and imposing Romish chapels and convents. These indicate that popery is in the ascendant. The population is decreasing. It is supposed to have eighty thousand inhabitants, ten thousand of whom are Protestants. The Irish Wesleyan Conference assembled there this year, and has just closed its sittings.

The preparatory committees assemble before the Conference and pass in review the financial concerns of the connection. The first of these is the stationing committee. Unlike the others, this is an exclusively clerical committee.

The education committee expressed its approval of the defeat of Mr. Gladstone's university bill, and the success of Mr. Fawcett's for the removal of religious tests from Trinity College, Dublin.

The committee of review for chapel affairs reported that three new church edifices had been erected during the year, furnishing 1,300 additional sittings for worshipers; also one new school-house, accommodating 550 additional scholars; and two new ministers' residences. The trust property of the Conference in Ireland includes 307 churches, with 58,784 sittings, 86 ministers' residences and 69 school-houses. The total debt remaining on all is only £8,773. The numerical strength of the denomination is 19,997; net increase, 91. Attending on public worship, 57,901.

The Rev. Luke H. Wiseman, president, etc., was accompanied from England by Rev. John H. James, D. D., Gervase Smith, A. M., and William B. Pope.

The inevitable Dr. Cather was present and addressed the Conference in behalf of the International Christian League, and obtained the permission of the assembly to continue at his special work.

A leading preacher of the Primitive Wesleyan body addressed a letter to the president, stating that he had been in correspondence with his friends all over the country, and they were all in favor of union with the Wesleyans. A committee was appointed to meet during the year, if necessary.

The following was added to the resolutions of last year on lay delegation: "That the representative to the British Conference be instructed to ascertain whether any steps have been taken by that Conference on this question, and to report to the next Conference."

The report of the Methodist College was hopeful. The Rev. Dr. Scott was appointed president, and the Rev. Dr. Applebe theological tutor.

Four ministers died during the year—Rev. Daniel Macafee, Thomas Waugh, William Hoey and Robert Beauchamp. They were all superannuated ininisters.

Five young men were ordained by the laying on of hands, and twelve were admitted on trial.

The Conference officers were all re-elected. The representatives to the British Conference are: Revs. George Vance, William Guard Price and J. D. Powell.

The next Conference will be held in Dublin. OBSERVER.

Salvation of Children.

Melchisedec wants to know if there has been "a universal past salvation of all our race." There has not been—a provisional salvation has been made for all our race, but it will be available to the actual salvation of none who reject it. Children are not born in a regenerate state—we do not apply the word "regeneration" to that state of acceptance in which they stand through the redemption by Christ, though some so use the word. As used in our articles of religion, catechism and Institutes, it cannot be applied to the state of infancy. Let us not get into "word-warfare." Infants are incapable of repentance and faith, which are the conditions of justification and regeneration. They are "accepted in the beloved" without any condition on their part. If they die before actual sin they are taken to heaven, being prepared by the Holy Spirit for that region of purity and bliss; if they arrive at years of discretion, the preventing grace of the Holy Spirit is sufficient to keep them from actual sin, but if they do sin—as they are apt to sin—then that grace is sufficient to bring them to repentance and faith, which will result in pardon and regeneration. In what way preventing grace develops into regenerating grace, in the case of children who commit no actual sin, and so do not need repentance, we do not know. It has not pleased God to reveal this, and we have never met with any one whose experience enables us to answer the question, which is more curious than useful. We write this much that our correspondent may see that we have not overlooked his queries. We are, however, getting a little tired of this subject—suppose we get at something else. These questions have exercised the wits of divines in all ages. John Goodwin, in his Redemption Redeemed, has a curious passage on this subject. We cite it without indorsing his views as to the reason why the peculiar term "regenerate" is used instead of the word "convert," used in Matthew xviii, simply remarking that when he speaks of the sin which in children is taken away by the death of Christ, he means that the guilt of inbred sin is not imputed to them—and noting, moreover, Goodwin's caveat in regard to Pelagianism, which he shunned as poison. But here is the passage:

"I rather conceive that regeneration, which the Scripture makes appropriable only unto persons living to years of discretion, who generally in the days of their youth degenerate from the innocency of their childhood and younger years, and corrupt themselves with the principles and ways of the world, relates not unto the natural generation as such (I mean as natural,) but unto the spiritual estate and condition of men in respect of their natural generation and birth; in and upon which they are, if not simply and absolutely, yet comparatively innocent, harmless, free from pride, malice, etc., and, in respect of these qualifications, in grace and favor with God, upon the account of the death and sufferings of Christ for them, as we shall, God willing, prove more at large in the second part of this discourse. In the meantime, what we now offer as most probable, touching the reason of the name and relation of regeneration, I conceive our Savior himself implieth in that passage of his with his disciples: 'At the same time came the disciples unto Jesus, saying: Who is the greatest in the kingdom of heaven? And Jesus called a little child unto him, and set him in the midst of them, and said: Verily I say unto you, except ye be converted, and become as little children, ye shall not enter into the kingdom of heaven.'—Matthew xviii, 1-3. 'Except ye be turned back,' as Calvin interpreteth—i. e., unless you recover and reinstate yourselves in that estate or interest in the love and favor of God, which you are in danger of losing by your ambition, by returning to such a humility, innocency and simplicity, wherein, while you were children, you were accepted with him, 'ye shall not enter,' etc. Calvin's words in English are these: 'And the conversion whereof he speaks imports that his disciples had at this time too much accustomed themselves to the common course and manners of men' (in the world,) 'and therefore that they might aspire to the mark' at which they aimed; I suppose he meaneth greatness in the kingdom of heaven,) 'they must turn back in their course.' And unless we shall suppose that children—to whom our Savior saith that his disciples must be like, or else never 'enter into the kingdom of heaven'—are in an estate of grace and favor with God, we shall make him to say, in effect, that unless they be like unto those who are in an estate of condemnation they cannot be saved. For, as Musculus upon the place well observes: 'Our Savior doth not say unto them, Except ye be converted, and become as this child; but indefinitely, And become as children,' or little ones,) 'lest they should conceive that there was something singular in this child more than in others which they were to imitate.' Nor doth anything that hath been said upon this last account suppose children to be begotten or born without original sin; only that, indeed, hath been said which supposeth that that sin which is in children is taken away by the death of Christ, so that they are generally, while children, in the favor of God through Christ, notwithstanding that sin which is in them. Neither is this anything more than what Musculus himself upon the place clearly avoucheth in respect of all children, without exception, 'that have been baptized.' But this only by the way."—Nashville Christian Advocate.

DR. EDWARDS, in the Richmond Christian Advocate, closes his account of the commencement exercises of Randolph Macon College with the following statements:

The public speaking, taken altogether, is without a parallel on any former commencement occasion now remembered. There was nothing that approximated a dull, dry, labored and tiresome speech. Everything was directly to the point, and not one of the addresses was more than fifty minutes in length. The literary societies were never more fortunate in electing speakers for the public exercises. Entertainment, instruction, popular effect and the highest moral sentiment were combined in these addresses. It was a happiness to listen to cultivated, scientific and eloquent men, who came to us from the learned professions and from the private walks of life, without being offended by any of the infidelity and gross materialism which are now so prevalent among scientists and scholars.

The degree of doctor of divinity was worthily conferred on the Rev. J. C. Wills, president of Central College, Missouri; on Rev. Alpheus W. Wilson, of the Baltimore Conference, and on the Rev. John D. Blackwell, of the Virginia Conference.

The report of the president in relation to the behavior and good conduct of the students during the session was highly gratifying.

The college has as well qualified a board of instruction as is to be found in any college in America. The professors, without exception, are thoroughly equipped for their respective departments. But they have too much work to do, and need reinforcement. Additional professors must be furnished. The board of trustees are fully convinced of this need, and have adopted measures looking to this demand.

THE trustees of Boston University have decided to open, the coming autumn, a school of oratory. This is a new thing in our colleges, and probably a very good idea. There is need of instruction in speaking, and special need of an improved system in the most of our literary institutions. The school of oratory in the Boston University is to have a full faculty, of which Prof. Monroe has been elected dean. Chancellor Warren says:

Provision will be made for three varieties of students: 1. Those who have taken their first degree in arts, science or philosophy, or who have an equivalent preparation, and who desire to fit themselves for professorships of oratory in colleges, theological seminaries, law schools or other higher institutions of learning. 2. Students of like scholastic attainments, engaged in theological, legal or other post-graduate studies, or in the active practice of their profession. 3. Under-graduates in colleges, teachers in public schools, and ordinary private pupils.

CORRECTED.—We were misinformed about Charles Wesley Warren, alias Horton, as appears from the following in the Raleigh Christian Advocate:

A Mistake Corrected.—THE NEW ORLEANS ADVOCATE, in its last issue, alluding to Charles Wesley Warren, who recently figured so extensively in Wilmington as a preacher and a lecturer, is mistaken in saying that he joined the North Carolina Conference at its last session. He was not a member of our Conference, nor of our church. He was appointed by Bishop Paine, under the sanction of Dr. Closs, the presiding elder, as a supply at Fifth Street church, Wilmington, but was soon overtaken in his sins and compelled to resign his charge and leave the city.

THE Rev. William Morley Punshon, LL. D., was married at the College chapel, Sheffield, June 17, by the Rev. Gervase Smith, M. A., to Mary, eldest daughter of the late William Foster, Esq., of Broom Bank Mount, Sheffield.

THE catalogue of Mansfield Female College for 1872-3 is a handsome pamphlet, and should have a wide circulation. We commend the college to the patronage of our people. We copy the following announcement for 1873-4:

The fall session will open on Wednesday, the twenty-fourth of September, 1873, and the spring session on Monday, the ninth of February, 1874. Commencement will be on Wednesday, the twenty-fourth of June, 1874.

The Institution never offered greater advantages. It is supplied with ample facilities for instruction, and claims to give a thorough and comprehensive education. Its teachers were educated in the best schools, have had years of experience, and employ the most approved methods of instruction. It confidently refers for its character and scholarship to its former pupils, scattered all over the adjacent country, many of whom are occupying prominent positions in other institutions, and all of whom are faithfully acting their parts in life.

The friends of the Institution are urged to rally to its support, and thus enable it to maintain its position and wield its highest influence for good.

RANDOLPH MACON stands among the foremost of our Southern colleges, for age and merit. Her alumni are among the eminent and honored in Church and State, and she is still turning out ripe scholars and Christian gentlemen to fill the highest places in society. President Duncan is not only the prince of preachers, but he is a model preceptor and wise in affairs. Louisiana has a representative in the faculty in the person of Prof. Harrison. Boys who must go further than Greensboro, Centenary and Homer will be fortunate to reach the academic shades and classic halls of Randolph Macon. See advertisement in another column, and for information address Rev. James A. Duncan, D. D., president, Ashland, Virginia.

WHITWORTH FEMALE COLLEGE, located at Brookhaven, Mississippi, reopens on the twenty-fourth of September. This is one of the best schools in the country, accessible, well conducted and prosperous. The instruction is thorough, and a full faculty is employed. The best of moral and religious influences are thrown around the pupils, and everything is done to promote their welfare. See advertisement in another column, and send to President Johnson for circulars.

WE HAVE RECEIVED the circular of Millwood Female Institute, Jackson, Louisiana, for the academical year 1872-3. As noticed last week, this institution, formerly under the principalship of Prof. S. S. Norwood, has passed into the hands of Rev. J. C. Miller, who proposes to build up a Methodist female college of high character. President Miller has energy, experience and capacity, and will, we trust, secure a large patronage. The next term opens on the fourth Monday of September.

THE Alabama Conference Female College, Tuskegee, Alabama, is one of the best-known institutions of learning in Alabama. Our readers are referred to the advertisement in this week's paper. President Moore is worthy of all confidence, and will satisfy all who may commit their daughters to his care.

DR. PUNSHON IN LONDON.—We have received from London a complete report of the sermon preached by Dr. Punshon, in City Road chapel, on his return to that city, and shall soon print it in the Christian Advocate. Concerning the service the London Watchman says:

"An immense crowd gathered to give welcome to the preacher, who, as they hung upon his eloquent lips, were both reminded of past days and filled with grateful emotion. It has been our pleasure to give to the public an extended report of the elaborate and powerful discourse which Dr. Punshon delivered; we simply remark here that it sustained the great reputation of the minister, was made the means of spiritual blessing to many, and very effectually served the object for which it was delivered. Mr. Bowden, with, we dare say, a pardonable pride as the superintendent of City Road chapel, announced the collection to be over £2,025, the largest, we believe, ever made in a Wesleyan chapel in this country. We are told that several small sums have since been forwarded, and several promises have yet to be redeemed."—New York Christian Advocate.

THE Rutland (Vermont) Herald, in speaking of the late Hiram Powers, the sculptor, says it was a dream in Powers' youth that shaped his destiny. Powers dreamed that he saw, across the river, a female figure in white standing upon a pedestal. At that time Powers had never seen a statue, but soon after he felt the significance of the dream on seeing a rough statue by a green artist. From that time his course was decided.

A SCHOOL commenced four years ago in Mexico, in a twelve by fourteen, flat-roof, dirt-floor adobe building, with ten scholars, now numbers seventy pupils, thirty-six of whom are Mexicans, and thirty-four Americans and half-breeds. Mrs. Harwood and her sister conduct this school, and the reading of the Scriptures is a part of the daily exercises.

Brahmo-Somaj.

The Brahmo Church of India is making great exertions to spread its faith all over India. They are a body of Deists, very liberal in their faith in their way. All they require people to believe is that there is but one God, and that there is no divine Christ. Rev. Mr. Dall, the missionary of the New England Unitarians, is connected with them, and they are trying to form a basis upon which all religionists can unite. At their great anniversary meeting, lately held at Calcutta, their paper states that "the three flags were borne by three gentlemen of different nationalities—a Boharee (Hindoo,) a Mohammedan and Mr. C. H. A. Dall. The presence and prominence of the last-named gentleman added to the attractions of the spectacle." In their worship they imitate Christians very closely, having singing, praying and preaching, attended by men and women, exactly after our customs, and directly in opposition to their own former customs. With all their efforts, however, and with the almost universal spirit of reform to aid them, they can make but very little progress. Many express a belief in their faith, and for a time run well; but there is no life in them, and no life-giving power in their creed, and hence they fall. How does the following extract from an editorial by one of their great leaders show their need of Jesus, the life, the truth, the way!

"No fact, perhaps, has so often obtruded itself upon our notice during the last ten years as the inconstant and vacillating disposition of most Brahmos. Such souls flourish and fade with mushroom rapidity. They run post-haste through the infancy, boyhood, youth and manhood of religious life, and in a year or two their vitality altogether ceases. Yesterday they were found preaching fiery sermons to misguided India; to-day they doubt the utility of public worship and religious zeal; to-morrow they quietly sink into worldliness and hypocrisy and infidelity. Such men have become so numerous, and their waverings and inconsistencies are so ridiculous and glaring, that the public have naturally come to suspect the genuineness of Brahmo faith and character, and seem unwilling to believe that any Brahmo is capable of sustained and steady progress. We who have seen a good number of such painful cases of degradation and apostasy have learned to place no confidence whatever in new-born zeal and untried youthful fervor. The fact is evidently of serious importance to our church, and it is desirable that we should carefully inquire into its causes, and, if possible, discover the means of preventing its recurrence. The chief cause seems to us to be the difficulty which attends Brahmo prayer, and the general spiritual culture enjoined by Theism. No religion is so spiritual, none has to deal so much with things unseen and invisible, as Brahmoism. It is true that every Brahmo offers daily prayers, and tries to discipline and regulate his life according to the will of God; but all this worship is in the heart, and involves spiritual exercises of the highest kind. Hence the weak, impatient, half-hearted and worldly-minded faint and falter even before they have gone half way, and ere long manifest an anxiety to leave a dark and uncongenial sphere of life. Some run toward old Hindooism, and fall at the feet of that system which they before execrated, for the fear of man has taken the place of the love of God. Others fall into the vortex of rationalism, skepticism, materialism and utilitarianism in their audacious attempt to justify their apostasy with the aid of false philosophy. Having failed to worship the All-Holy, they ignominiously kneel before Buckle and Comte, Darwin and Mill, and pretend to seek salvation at their hands. They know, however, as little of philosophy as they know of religion, and their high-sounding words are only meant to cover the poverty of their knowledge, both intellectual and spiritual. The third class of renegade Brahmos quietly settle down to a worldly life, and transfer their allegiance from God to mammon, and seek earthly riches in preference to the riches they see not. Our advice to all who have thus apostatized is, Come back, brethren, and be reconciled to God."—Missionary Advocate.

The Cholera.

The mayor of Nashville issued a proclamation, July 5, declaring that as the cholera was rapidly disappearing and business was reviving, the sanitary force was discontinued, as also the gratuitous supply of provisions, medicines, etc., except in extreme cases. He properly cautioned the citizens in regard to diet, etc. The Banner of July 6 says: "Nine persons are officially reported as having died in the city of cholera, so called, on the fourth, and three yesterday." The weather for the past week has been most propitious—a clear sky, a brilliant July sun and pleasant breezes have been favorable to the health of the community—for which let us be thankful to a gracious Providence. We devoutly pray, and let all the people pray, that the measures employed here and elsewhere to counteract the ravages of disease may have the divine sanction and blessing. Dr. Kelley said on Sunday that only six of his members had died of cholera, and all of them departed in peace. His health is better, though he is still feeble. He took part in the Sunday school and in the funeral service of Miss Ann W. Lanier in the morning, attended another funeral in the afternoon, and administered the communion at night, when we had a season of refreshing from the presence of the Lord. Dr. Young has attended a number of funerals, but only a few of the members of his charge have died of cholera. A few persons only have died with it in Edgefield. It has been spreading over the State, but we trust it is now passing away. It has appeared in a few places in Kentucky, Ohio and other States, but we do not believe it will become epidemic. The Rev. T. A. Hoyte, pastor of the First Presbyterian church of Nashville, has had an attack, but his physician, Dr. Maddin, informs us that he is getting well, for which we are thankful.—Nashville Christian Advocate, July 12.

Books and Periodicals.

HISTORY OF METHODISM IN TENNESSEE. By John B. McFerrin, D. D. Volume 3. From the year 1818 to the year 1840. Nashville, Tennessee: Southern Methodist Publishing House.

The author, Dr. McFerrin, has given us a most interesting volume. The personal sketches are specially entertaining, and the historical materials are rich and instructive.—Southern and Western Methodists will meet with many familiar and revered names, and with many facts and incidents which they will be glad to recall. This book, and the like of it on denominational history—the history of early times—is a means of grace, and the very thing to stir up and revive the gifts and power of the fathers in the present generation. Volume 3 is dedicated to Bishop Paine, and contains a very good engraved likeness of the venerable senior Bishop. The history is brought down to 1840, and here the author declares his purpose to rest for a season.

REASON AND REDEMPTION, OR THE GOSPEL AS IT ATTESTS ITSELF. By Robert Baker White, D. D. Philadelphia: J. B. Lippincott & Co., 1873.

This is a handsomely bound octavo of 351 pages. It contains a prefatory letter from Rev. W. A. Scott, D. D., a well-known Presbyterian minister, formerly of New Orleans, and now of San Francisco, California. The work is solid, comprehensive and is up to the latest results of biblical criticism and scientific discovery. Bating the Calvinistic views of the author, which, we think, embarrass the subject of reason and redemption, the work is sound and edifying, although written in too severe and heavy a style to be generally read. J. A. Gresham, New Orleans.

THE "SPIRITUAL" DELUSION, Its methods, teachings and effects. The philosophy and phenomena critically examined. By Dyer D. Lum. Philadelphia: J. B. Lippincott & Co., 1873.

The author exhibits the philosophy and the phenomena of this most mischievous delusion. How satisfactory and conclusive his views are we cannot altogether say; but he is right and sound in denying the supernatural in spiritism, and in exposing many of its great and widespread evils. The book may be read with profit by those who are interested about spiritualism. Gresham, New Orleans.

THE NEW THEOLOGY, OR ADVANCED TRUTHS ON SPIRITUAL SUBJECTS. Edited by Henry B. Browning, M. A. Philadelphia: J. B. Lippincott & Co., 1873.

The author tells us that the contents of the book are taken from the works of Kingsley, F. W. Robertson, E. H. Sears, Channey Giles and others of the same class. It is a mass of broad church, Swedenborgian and kindred mysticisms, making up a little volume of great and dangerous errors. Gresham, New Orleans.

THE RECORD OF A HAPPY LIFE. Being memorials of Franklin Whitall Smith, a student of Princeton College. By his mother, H. W. S. Philadelphia: J. B. Lippincott & Co., 1873.

The family seem to have been Quakers, judging from the thees, thous, first days, etc. But the record is a pleasing and profitable one—the life of a religious youth who lived and died well. For sale by Gresham, New Orleans.

WORK, PLAY AND PROFIT, by Anna M. Hyde, is a beautiful volume for children. The subject is gardening for young folks, explained in a story for boys and girls. The work is finely illustrated, and is well calculated to entertain and instruct. Published by Lippincott & Co.

THE METHODIST QUARTERLY REVIEW for July, 1873. D. D. Whedon, LL. D., editor. New York: Nelson & Phillips. Contents: Carey's Social Science; Theodore Parker; The Temperance Reform; The Doctrine of Reprobation; The Dangerous Classes and their Treatment. The editorial department is well sustained—always the best part of the Review—and embraces the usual Synopsis of the Quarterlies, Foreign Religious Intelligence, Foreign Literary Intelligence and Quarterly Book Table.

WE HAVE RECEIVED the annual catalogue of Verona Female College, Verona, Mississippi—Rev. Dr. Wier, president. We are glad to learn that the session recently closed was unusually prosperous.

HOME AND SCHOOL for July has been received. An excellent number of this popular monthly.

THE Bishop of Deventer, one of the Jansenist prelates, has signified his willingness to consecrate Prof. Reinkens, the newly-elected missionary Bishop of the Old Catholics. The Ultramontane journals will therefore need to revise their explanation of the untimely death of Archbishop Loos.

HE ALONE is a man who can resist the genius of the age, the love of fashion, with vigorous simplicity and modest courage.—Lavater.

MRS. RICHMOND, relict of the Rev. Leigh Richmond, died lately at Clifton, England, in her ninety-sixth year.

GRAND CENTRAL HOTEL, NEW YORK CITY.—We have just received the announcement of H. Lyman Powers, Esq., proprietor, stating that after two years of incessant labor, and an expenditure of $2,000,000, the above mammoth marble hotel is now completed and open for the reception of guests. The great advantages of this hotel, with reference to its location, its vast size, unsurpassed accommodations and magnificent resources, render a statement of its claims to public patronage appropriate. It is situated on Broadway, opposite Bond, and occupies nearly the entire block between Bleecker and Amity streets. It is eight stories in height, and embraces more area than any hotel on this continent or in the world, and is capable of entertaining one thousand five hundred guests. It contains six hundred and thirty rooms, two hundred of which are a suite of from two to four each suite, provided with large parlors, wardrobes, bath rooms and closets, including hot and cold water in each, the remainder varying in size and location, which only a model of such magnitude could possibly offer. Notwithstanding all the great and unequaled advantages in location, accommodation, and even splendor, the terms for board and rooms are only from $3 to $4 per day, according to the location of apartments. We take pleasure in referring to the card inserted in our present issue.

FIFTH AVENUE HOTEL, NEW YORK.—Among the varied attractions offered to visitors to the great city of New York there is nothing which strikes the stranger with more pleasant surprise, and, we may say, amazement, than the wonder of her hotels. Such are not to be found in any other part of the world. Not only the splendor and vastness of the buildings and costliness of the furniture and equipments, which surpass in their luxuriousness the palaces of the kings, but the almost endless variety of viands, of every domestic production and imported from all parts of the globe, make up bills of fare equal to the demands of the most capricious appetites, and at the same time afford food for reflection upon the skill, enterprise and indomitable energy of those men and companies who erect and conduct them.

Messrs. Darling, Griswold & Co., proprietors of the Fifth Avenue, located at 198 Fifth avenue, are in the front rank of such enterprise. Their house is supplied with all the modern improvements and conveniences, and it seems to us that nothing is wanting that a guest could desire.

THE COMMERCE OF NEW ORLEANS. Messrs. Louis J. Bright & Co., publishers of the Price Current, will issue their customary annual statement on Monday, September 1. THE WEEKLY WATCHMAN, LITTLE ROCK, ARKANSAS.—Under contract with E. B. Hotchkiss, editor and proprietor, the subscribers of the Watchman will be furnished with the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE during the time of the suspension of said paper, being thirty-six weeks further, as agreed upon, or until notice thereafter.

Board, including lodging, washing, lights and fuel, can be had in the best families for $20 per month. Day-boarding with the same families, $14 per month. Rooms provided in the dormitories free of rent. Board to be paid in advance at least one month.

LOCATION.

This institution is located in the lovely village of Jackson, about twelve miles from Bayou Sara, in a grove of pine, magnolia, oak and beech. The location is remarkable for its beautiful woodlands, its bland and delightful atmosphere, its pure water, its unrivaled healthfulness, and its cultivated and refined society.

WHEN FOUNDED.

The college was established by the State of Louisiana in 1825, and ceded to the Methodist Episcopal Church South in 1845.

ALUMNI.

Its Alumni numbers two hundred and three, and they are to be found in the most honorable and useful stations in the land.

APPARATUS AND CABINET.

The college possesses a valuable set of Philosophical, Astronomical and Chemical Apparatus, and also a well-selected Mineralogical and Geological Cabinet. The apparatus includes a Theodolite, Sextant, Compass, Chronometer, Atwood's Machine, Whirling Tables, Electrical Machine, Air Pump, various combinations of the Mechanical Powers, Batteries, Chemical Tests, etc., sufficient for a thorough and extended course of observations and experiments. Steps have been taken by the Board of Trustees to put these in thorough repair.

LITERARY SOCIETIES.

There are two regular Literary Societies connected with the institution. These are of great utility to young men acquiring a liberal education—improving them in the art of public speaking, making them in some degree familiar with the proceedings of deliberative bodies, and in cultivating systematic business habits. Each Society has a convenient hall and a well-selected Library—about one thousand six hundred volumes each, which, added to the College Library of two thousand volumes, makes over five thousand volumes in the college.

BUILDINGS.

The Trustees are determined to continue the repairs on the buildings till completed. The grand Center Building is a noble specimen of architectural beauty and adaptation to the purposes of its erection. The wings, built of solid brick, present each a front of two hundred feet, with upper and lower galleries the entire length, supported by Tuscan columns, and with the center making in the perspective a continuous front of seven hundred feet.

PREPARATORY DEPARTMENT.

In the Preparatory Department students are fitted for regular college classes, or may obtain a thorough English or commercial education.

ITS FACULTY are men of experience and success in teaching.

The Child's Corner.

WHAT THE CHOIR SANG ABOUT THE NEW BONNET.

A [illegible] little maiden brought a [illegible] little bonnet,
With a ribbon and a feather and a bit of lace upon it.
And, that the other maidens of the little town might know it,
She thought she'd go to-morrow the next Sunday, just to show it.

But, though the little bonnet was scarce larger than a dimple,
The getting of it settled proved to be a work of time,
So when 'twas fairly tied all the bells had stopped their ringing
And when she came to marching were strength, the folks were singing.

So the foolish little maiden stood and walked at the door,
And she shook her ruffles out behind and shook the folds of them down before,
"Hallelujah! hallelujah!" rang the choir above her head,
"Hardly know you! hardly know you!" were the words she thought they said.

This made the little maiden feel so very, very cross
That she gave her little mouth a twist, her little head a toss;
For she thought the very hymn they sang was all about her bonnet,
With the ribbon and the feather and the bit of lace upon it.

And she would not wait to listen to the sermon or the prayer,
But pattered down the silent street and hurried up the stair,
Till she reached her little bureau, and in a hasty box on it
Had hidden safe from critic's eye her foolish little bonnet.

Which proves, my little maidens, that even of you will find
In every sabbath service but an echo of your mind;
And that little head that's filled with silly little airs,
Will never get a blessing from sermon or from prayers.

The Tiger.

My papa and mamma lived in India, in a very pretty place among the Himalaya mountains. All round us were the high mountains with their tops white with snow; but down where we lived there was no snow, but beautiful trees, flowers and green grass. A river ran near the house, that always made a roaring noise tumbling over the stones, and we could see the white foam on it a long way up into the hills, until at last it looked like a line of chalk.

Our house was in a compound—a large square inclosed by a thick fence and shaded from the sun by trees. There was a veranda round the house, up to which you went by steps, and all the rooms in the house opened out upon it. There were several other houses in the compound besides the one we lived in. There was one house for cooking in, another for washing; two or three for the servants to live in (for people in India have a great many black servants—it is too hot there for white people to do any hard work.) Then there was the tailor's house, and the shoemaker's (it's a tailor who makes all the ladies' and children's dress in India.) I had a black nurse—ayur they are called there—and I was able to speak Hindostanee before I could speak English. She used to take me up at four o'clock in the morning; and, as soon as I had my bath and was dressed, I went for a drive, sometimes with my papa or mamma, sometimes with only my bearer, a Hindoo man, who took me out to drive and walk, and sometimes to ride on a little pony up through the hills. I was very fond of my bearer. He and I used to go for walks in the evening, and pick flowers and fruit, and sit by the river. He was dressed in a white muslin dress, and a white muslin turban round his head. He often told me stories about himself when he was a little boy. He had been a heathen—that is, one who prays to something else than God. He told me he used to pray to ugly idols made of wood and stone, and thought they were his gods; that he used to think the River Ganges was a god. He used to believe that the little white Brahmin cows with the hump on their backs were nearly gods. He said when he was a little boy in the holy city of Benares, where the cows were allowed to walk through the streets and to eat whatever they liked, the people would not turn them even out of their houses if they chose to go in, nor stop them taking anything they liked; and he told me that these poor people thought that if they could torment themselves a great deal they would please these ugly gods. So some of them would tie up their arms until they became quite useless, or put their bodies into some queer shapes, or stand on one leg until they were quite worn out.

"When I was a little boy," he would say, "I thought these men very good, and thought the gods would like them; but now, Sahib, I know better. I know the true God. I know that those nasty idols are no gods—only wood, ivory and gold, and that they never could hear me pray. And now I pray to the true God, and he hears me and takes care of me."

"Are you afraid of God, Gunda?" I asked.

"Oh! no, Sahib, I am not afraid of God. God loves me very much. He calls himself my Father, and takes care of me as your father does of you. Are you afraid of him?"

"Afraid of papa?" I said. "Oh, no! Papa loves me and is kind to me. Why should I be afraid of him?"

"Well," said Gunda, "God loves me and is kind to me, and I could not be afraid of him. I used to be afraid of everything when I was a heathen. Now I am afraid of nothing. I ask God to take care of me, and I know he will."

"Do you think he would take care of me too, Gunda?" I asked.

"Yes, Sahib, you must ask him to take care of you, and he will."

Gunda was telling me these things one morning, when we were out before breakfast, sitting by the river; and when we had done talking I got on my pony, and we went back to the house, where we were just in time for breakfast. After breakfast the sun was very hot, and every one lay down to take a sleep; and all the doors were open to let in the air through the house. I was lying on a sofa fast asleep, and my bearer was lying on a mat in the room. The only person awake in the house was the tailor; he was sitting out in the veranda working at a dress for mamma. He was sitting near the nursery door; and the baby was left in the cradle just outside, that she might be cool. The tailor was told to mind her. He had been busy for some time, with his head down, looking at his work, when he looked up, and what did he see coming into the compound? A large tiger! It walked slowly in, as you may have seen a cat do, and came toward the house. The tailor gave a scream, and ran in, crying out, "A tiger! a tiger!" but he never thought of the poor little baby, but left it out by itself in the veranda. Everybody jumped up out of their sleep, and ran to make the mats tight; for we had only mats instead of wooden doors, as you have in this country. The noise wakened me, and I was going to cry, when my bearer took my hand in his and said, "Sahib, you must not be afraid. God will take care of us;" and he knelt on his mat, and, holding my hands, said: "Heavenly Father, take care of us. Save us all from the tiger. We ask thee in Jesus' name." Just then mamma came running into the room to see if we were safe. She saw I was there, but not the baby. "Oh, the baby!" she cried; "the baby's outside!"

"Wait," said Gunda, "I'll go for the baby."

"O Gunda! no," cried I, "you'll be eaten," and I caught hold of him to keep him from going; but Gunda said: "Sahib, God will save the baby and me."

Just then some one called out: "The tiger is in the veranda." Gunda pushed aside the mat, and ran out; while I dropped on my knees, as I had seen him do, and asked God to save Gunda and the baby. I had hardly done when Gunda ran in, holding the baby safe in his arms. The tiger was in the veranda; but never looked at Gunda; God saved him; but he had hardly got inside the mat, and made it fast, when he heard the tiger spring upon the baby's cradle and turn it over. We all stayed very quiet, until at last we saw the tiger go slowly out of the compound, as he had come in. When papa came home, and heard how Gunda had saved his baby, he took his hand and said: "Gunda, I will never forget your kindness. You risked your life for my child's. May God bless you."

"Oh!" said Gunda, "it was not a great thing for me to do. I was not afraid. I knew God would take care of me. Did he not shut the mouths of the lions when Daniel was put in their den? and could he not shut the tiger's mouth, and save your child and me too?"

But we could not go out of the compound while there was a tiger near; it would not have been safe; and we thought it very hard to have to stay there always. Papa and some other gentlemen went out every day with guns and dogs to look for the tiger, and at last they came home one day and said they had shot him. They got him skinned, and laid the spotted skin on the floor, where it looked so pretty, and very often poor little baby sat on it, but little thinking how nearly she had been eaten by that same tiger, only that God took care of her.—Methodist.

The Little Mesmerist.

Grave Uncle Nathan was respected as one of the most dignified and decorous men in town. Neat to primness, not a strand of his long straight hair was ever displaced, nor a speck of dust on his glossy black coat.

But five-year-old Gay, one Sunday evening, half an hour before church, climbed up on his knee, and wove her soft fingers in and out among his whiskers, until the good man bowed his head on his breast and went to sleep, dreaming of angels.

On the corner of the mantel near which they sat, and within reaching distance, stood her "dolly's clothes," full of ribbon sashes, two or three inches in length, of every color of the rainbow.

A brilliant idea visited her. Reaching for the basket, she took out the sashes, and forthwith began to separate bunches of her uncle's smooth hair into queer little twists or tails, tying the end of each one with a bit of ribbon, until his head looked as gorgeous and as variegated as a Hollander's tulip-bed. The church-bells rang out their last warning just as she had completed her labors, and consecrated it with a kiss of purest love on his eyelids.

"The bell is ringin' for church, uncle, and you look so sweet!" said the admiring Gay.

"Bless me! I'll be late," said the punctual deacon, seizing his hat and clapping it on his head. "You mesmerized me, you little witch. Now run off to Aunt Tracy," and, kissing her tenderly, he was in another instant on the street.

"I dess I did memri uncle, and he looks splendid," soliloquized Gay, as she sought her aunt, who was in bed with a headache.

The organ was sending out the soft strains of a solemn voluntary as Uncle Nathan, hat in hand, walked slowly and solemnly up the long aisle. The light ends of the ribbons fluttered gently with every motion of his body, and his head looked like a pyramid of butterflies. Those who saw him passing by stared after him amazed. Handkerchiefs were pressed to lips which would laugh because "they had to."

"Why, Bro. Barker, what does all your head?" said his pew chum, in a low whisper.

"Nothing, thank you, but my wife has a severe headache."

"He's gone crazy," thought Mr. Wells; "what shall I do? My dear friend, who fixed your hair?" For by this time the attention of that half side of the church had been attracted.

"My hair? Nobody. What does all this mean?" as, rubbing his pate hurriedly, bit after bit of ribbon descended like snowflakes. Snatching his hat he vanished through the side door like a shadow, and next morning the innocent little mesmerist was sent home.

A new weekly journal, which professes to be the organ of the lowest classes, has just made its appearance in Madrid. The editor announces the programme to be "War to the rich; war to the powerful; war to society; war to the family; war to property; war against God." The police have naturally replied by war to the proprietors, who have made themselves scarce.

Farm, Garden and Household.

Thoughts for the Month.

COTTON.

This crop requires very careful management the present month. It is in the midst of its fruiting and still in full growth. These two things are more or less incompatible with each other. Vigorous growth appropriates too much of the organizable material at the command of the plant, and leaves too little to form fruit. Excessive rains, for instance, causing large growth of "weed," almost invariably cause a shedding of fruit.

During this month it is not desirable to check growth entirely, but to keep it within moderate bounds—a slow but continuous growth is the thing desired. How much is this under the control of the farmer? 1. By shallow in place of deep plowing during cultivation the roots have to extend themselves in a moderately compact mass of earth (that loosened by winter plowing and afterward consolidated by rain,) and rapid growth cannot take place, inasmuch as the growth above ground is commensurate with that underneath the soil. 2. By keeping the surface lightly stirred at short intervals a sudden check from hot, dry weather may be warded off. A hard soil for the roots to ramify through is, of course, very objectionable, but a moderately loose one is exceedingly favorable to the fruiting of the cotton-plant. Deep plowing after the plant is six inches high is unfavorable to the formation of fruit. The substitution of a large sweep for the scooter and shovel is one of the most important advances in cotton culture, which has taken place since the war—important because it has brought about a substitution of shallow for deep plowing, and because it has rendered it practicable to cultivate a given area with so much less labor.

As the blooms which open as late as the tenth of September may produce mature fruit, it is desirable to promote some growth up to that period. Therefore, even if the fields are entirely free from grass, light plowings should be given at moderate intervals through this and the next month, if it can be done without breaking the limbs of the plant. Mr. Redding suggests an excellent plan in another column, viz.: plowing on both sides of every other row, then going back and plowing those rows skipped. If a large plow is used an approximation is made to a continuously stirred surface.

CORN.

Late corn will be laid by this month. We have already cautioned our readers against cutting the "spur" roots (those large ones which come out from the joints near the surface of the ground.) The last plowings ought therefore to be shallow but thorough. On bottom lands, where much of the late corn is planted, it is best to leave a good bed at this last working; by so doing the corn will not be so liable to be "drowned out." A broad-winged sweep, with the right wing set so as to throw dirt, may be used, if the land is not grassy.

PEAS.

If the laying by is done early in the month peas may be sown broadcast in the corn, one to one and a half bushels per acre. This is an old and excellent practice. If the peas do not ripen the vines may be cut for hay. But it would pay well not to harvest or pasture the peas at all, but simply let them remain on the land to enrich it. Especially is this true in the case of bottom lands, which are run year after year in corn.

Seize every opportunity to drill in peas in stubble or other uncultivated land. During next month there will be leisure to work them, and no crop will pay better for the amount of work it exacts. Let your thoughts run forward to the latter part of winter and early spring, and imagine how comfortably you would feel with your barns well filled with pea-vine hay. For hay purposes they may be planted up to the last of this month. We should be glad to have in our next number a discussion of the cheapest and best plan of raising, cutting and curing pea-vine hay. This is a very important matter to the Southern farmer. What say Mr. Phinazee and others to our proposition? Please let us have all the plans ever tried or suggested.

SWEET POTATOES.

Along the gulf slips or vines may still be planted to advantage. In localities where the seasons are shorter slips put out after the tenth of July are not likely to make tubers large enough for the table, but in favorable seasons may make excellent seed potatoes. Give light workings as late as possible—late workings make the crop. See that not a bunch of grass is left among the vines, and keep the latter from taking root between the beds; this they are very apt to do if covered at all in the workings or if the season is wet.

TURNIPS.

Ruta bagas may be planted from the middle of this to the fifteenth of next month. Other varieties from the latter date to the middle of September. Very rich ground and repeated plowings and harrowings are the conditions of success. Nothing is lost in making the effort for a good turnip crop, for if it fails the land will be in charming condition for wheat or oats or barley.—Southern Cultivator.

How to Trap Squirrels.—In trapping squirrels set a steel trap on the upper rail of a fence near where they frequent; set a pole with an ear of corn or some other squirrel food fastened on the end of it, up against the side of the fence, leaning in such a position as to spring the bait over the trap at a height of six or nine inches. When the squirrel reaches to get the bait he will get into the trap.

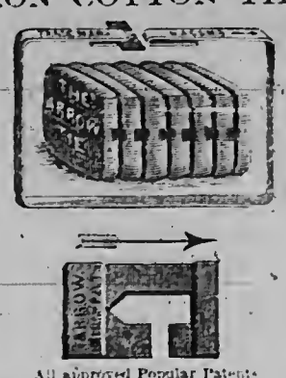
Poultry houses should be warm, light and well ventilated, and yet a majority of them are dark, close and uncomfortable. As a natural consequence the fowls confined in them are generally weak, drooping and diseased.

MACHINERY, TIES, ETC.

THE DUNCAN FLANGE COTTON GIN.

By the Flange the Cotton is kept in contact with the teeth on each side until the lint is taken from the seed, without allowing them to be taken up by the return motion of the roll, as in other Gins.

The Flange prevents hulls, stems, sticks and hard substances from being carried completely, making a better sample out of inferior picked cotton than other Gins.



We have sold more than the past year than any seventy of any other Gin for the same length of time, consequently we can furnish more and better references, and they are warranted to rollout up to all that is said of them.

We keep on hand a variety of hard all sizes, from 40 to 80 SAW STANDS, with or without feeders.

IMPROVED

EAGLE COTTON GINS.

The great popularity of the EAGLE COTTON GINS is established from the well-known fact that they are the most reliable, strongest and best built Cotton Gins ever made. The Eagle Cotton Gin runs lighter than any other gin, thus having a great advantage for planters who wish to run by horse power. All the farmers as planters who use the Eagle Cotton Gin will certify to the fact that when their cotton is sent to market it always brings the highest market price, as no other gin can produce a finer or a better sample of cotton than the Eagle Cotton Gins. Over seventeen thousand of the Eagle Cotton Gins have been made and sold. During a period of twenty years the undersigned has had the agency of the Eagle Cotton Gin in New Orleans. He has never had a gin returned or rejected out of the immense number sold. The saw cylinders of all the Eagle Cotton Gins are twelve inches in diameter, which is two inches larger than most other kinds of gins, thus giving our forty-saw gin more teeth, and they are more than equal to the fifty-saw gins of other makers, who use only a ten-inch cylinder, and the same great advantage of the twelve-inch cylinder in larger sized gins can be easily estimated. Planters who wish a reliable cotton gin, with an established reputation, can purchase an Eagle Cotton Gin with a certainty that they are not making an untried experiment, but will obtain a cotton gin which is indorsed by the oldest and largest planters in the country as the best in use. A large stock of the Eagle Cotton Gins are always kept on sale by New Orleans, ready for immediate shipment. Planters should be particular to state if they want right or left-hand motion gins.

New Orleans Markets.

From the New Orleans Price Current.

The accounts from the interior are generally favorable. Good progress has been made in cultivating and the prospect has improved.

The river is 5 feet 6 inches below high-water mark.

COTTON.—The following are the arrivals since the eighteenth instant:

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| Louisiana and Mississippi | bales... | 872 |
| Mobile | | 51 |
| Texas | | 69 |
| Total | | 992 |

On Saturday the demand was slack throughout the day, only five buyers coming forward, and the general tendency of the bulk of the offerings was to still easier rates, while strict good ordinary and the better qualities were firm at previous rates. Inferior sold down to 6c., good ordinary as low as 16c. and as high as 45c., and strict good ordinary at 17c., but held higher. The sales were confined to 500 bales. On Monday there was no improvement in the demand, which was confined to five brokers, but as two of them took together 882 bales the business reached 900 bales, strict good ordinary sold at 16c., and middling at 18¾c., while the lower grades were neglected and irregular. On Tuesday the movement was suspended during the morning by a heavy rain-storm, but later in the day several buyers came forward and took 850 bales, at about previous rates. If anything, the market showed more steadiness. The sales included strict ordinary at 18¾c., low middling at 17¾@17¾c., strict do. at 18¼c., and strict middling, high style, at 19½c. Good style low middling was held by some factors at 18c., and high style at 19½c., these descriptions, as well as strict, being scarce and disproportionately dearer than mere average lots. The higher grades are scarce and mostly nominal.

The above makes an aggregate for the past three days of 2,150 bales, against 2,900 for the corresponding time last week and 3,050 the week before.

The receipts proper at this port since the first of September, exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas, are 1,220,564 bales, against 953,011 bales to the same date last year, and the increase in the receipts at all the ports up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 840,379 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same date last year, there is an increase of 409,221 to Great Britain, of 65,333 to France, and of 179,566 to other foreign ports. We quote:

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| Inferior | | 7½ @ 8½ |
| Low ordinary | | 9½ @ 10½ |
| Ordinary | | 11½ @ 13½ |
| Good ordinary | | 14½ @ 17 |
| Low middling | | 17¾ @ 18¾ |
| Middling | | 18¾ @ — |
| Strict middling | | 19½ @ — |
| Good middling | | 19½ @ 20 |

Special Notices.

CAMP MEETING.—The camp meeting on Seashore camp ground will commence on Friday, the first day of August next.

The camp ground is beautifully situated upon the coast, two miles west of Biloxi, Mississippi, and lies open in and fronts directly upon the gulf, enjoying the delightful sea-breeze. Persons visiting the camp ground will leave the New Orleans and Mobile railroad at Seashore station, whence a walk of a few hundred feet brings them to the encampment.

The trustees have laid the grounds off in avenues and lots suitable for the erection of permanent tents. Several parties erected their own permanent tents last year, and the trustees are pleased to learn that a greater number intend doing the same this year—some as family tents, others by church association. Both these are desirable.

The trustees have made provision for good boarding, and lodging accommodations to a limited extent, at reasonable prices.

Several small, plain tents will be erected, to rent to persons or families desiring to hire, either furnished plainly or entirely unfurnished. Unfurnished tents, nine by thirteen feet, at $5, and nine by twenty-five feet, at $10 for the encampment week. For the same plainly furnished with cots, pillows, sheets, etc., a reasonable additional charge will be made.

Arrangements have been made with the railroad companies for the conveyance of passengers to the camp ground and back at half the usual price of fare.

Taking the New Orleans, Mobile and Texas railroad, Morgan's Louisiana and Texas railroad, and the Attakapas Mail Transportation Company, at any of their stations, parties will pay full fare and receive return tickets free. By the New Orleans, Jackson and Great Northern railroad parties will pay full fare and retain their tickets, which, indorsed at the camp meeting by the secretary, will be good for return fare. Beyond New Iberia, by the stage routes, a liberal deduction on usual fares will be made by the proprietors.

From this city tickets can be purchased at the office, upper corner of Camp and Common streets, or at ticket office at the depot, at the head of Canal street.

The trains from this city will leave the Canal street depot at 5 o'clock A. M., 3.15 P. M. and 5 P. M., the first two trains stopping at all the way-stations, the 5 P. M. train stopping only at the principal stations, but all stopping at camp meeting station during the continuance of the encampment. The freight trains leave the depot, corner of Levee and Girod street, at 8.30 A. M. and 6.30 P. M.

The trustees recommend to all who desire to attend the meeting to address either of the undersigned, and make arrangements for their comfort before the date of the camp meeting.

Brethren of the Methodist Church and of other churches, and the communities of the adjacent cities and country, are invited to attend the camp meeting.

Ministers of talent and distinction, from far and near, are expected to be present and assist in conducting the exercises.

W. H. FOSTER, President.
PHILIP HALLORAN, Secretary.

THE JACKSON DISTRICT SUNDAY SCHOOL CONVENTION, M. E. CHURCH SOUTH.—This convention, which embraces the ministers, traveling and local, the superintendents and teachers of this district, as well as others interested in this great cause, will be held in Canton, Mississippi, beginning on Wednesday, the twenty-seventh of August next.

The committee appointed by the Jackson District Conference to secure speakers for the above occasion, without attempting to prescribe a programme for the same, would respectfully suggest the examination and discussion of the following subjects: What is the great end of Sunday school instruction? Is our literature adapted to meet the end of the Sunday school? What is the best mode of securing attendance on Sunday schools? What are the true relations of children and of Sunday schools to the church? Are denominational schools important to success? Can our Sunday school music be improved?

NOTICE.—The Publishing Committee of the ADVOCATE gave it as their opinion that the insertion of the notices of Quarterly Conferences once or twice was sufficient, and, as the space of the paper is valuable, they passed a resolution recommending that they "be not inserted more than once or twice." Our friends who are interested in these appointments will take due notice thereof, as we propose to be governed by the resolution in future.

News of the Week.

DOMESTIC.

NEW YORK, July 24.—Two yellow fever deaths occurred on board the schooner Dinsmore from Havana hither. The captain and one man are now down.

BALTIMORE, July 25.—A little after ten o'clock to-day a fire broke out in the planing mill of Joseph Thomas & Co., on the south side of Clay street, between Liberty and Park. Soon after the general alarm was sounded.

2 P. M.—The fire is still raging. Eight blocks of fine buildings have been burned. The authorities are sending for outside help.

2.40 P. M.—The fire is still raging, but is not expected to extend beyond the blocks named in last dispatch. The Central Presbyterian church, Dr. Smith, southwest corner of Saratoga and Liberty, is a complete wreck, nothing remaining but the walls. With the exception of three brick dwellings on the southeast corner of this block, in the immediate rear of the ruins of the church, not a dwelling remains.

4.10 P. M.—The fire is now completely under control, and many who removed their goods and furniture on blocks adjacent to the fire are now moving back. Reports are still circulated that several children were burned and men killed, but strict inquiry at the marshal's office fails to verify any deaths by burning.

BALTIMORE, July 26.—The Sun of this morning estimates the loss by the fire yesterday at $500,000, and remarks that "good judges estimate the damage as low as between $300,000 and $400,000." The Gazette estimates the loss at from $500,000 to $600,000; and the American says: "The loss will closely approximate $1,000,000."

GETTYSBURG, PA., July 27.—Prof. S. S. Schumacker, the famous Lutheran theologian, is dead, aged seventy-four.

ST. LOUIS, July 27.—Thirty-nine fatal cases of cholera in this city for the week ending yesterday.

NEW YORK, July 27.—The News says an application has been made to Governor Dix, and the petition is signed by some of the most prominent men in New York, to grant young Walworth a pardon. The proceedings have been kept very quiet, and Governor Dix has written to Judge Davis, asking him to transmit to him a copy of all the testimony, letters and records in the case.

M. Kristeffy, private secretary of the Pope, is here, having made a year's tour of private inspection of Catholic institutions in this country.

WASHINGTON, July 28.—It is learned from ex-Senator Harris, of Louisiana, who has just returned from San Diego, and is connected with the Texas and Pacific railroad, that work is going on rapidly. Five hundred miles will be completed in Texas by the close of this year. The ten miles required by their charter to be built from the western terminus is all contracted for.

The northern route from San Diego via San Gorgonia pass, has been decided upon, crossing the Colorado at Fort Yuma and the Rio Grande at El Paso. The grades have been found very favorable and the road will be built at less expense than was supposed. The distance from the Pacific ocean to New Orleans by this route will only be about eighteen hundred miles, and to ports on the gulf, in Texas, about fifteen hundred miles. They expect to have the road completed in 1876.

A dispatch from Governor Kellogg to Attorney General Williams says they collected in June, from the city of New Orleans alone, $1,100,000.

The July agricultural report has just been sent to the press. It represents an improvement in winter wheat, but a decline in the prospects of spring wheat on account of unseasonable weather in some quarters, and insects in others. The average in corn is increased in West Virginia and Minnesota, and decreased in all other States except Florida and Arkansas, where it remains the same as last year. Corn-planting was everywhere retarded by the weather, and in many cases has been several times replanted.

The condition of cotton, which had been previously given, the indications up to July 1 indicate the crop as 5.100 per cent. of the average, not including Virginia, where the culture is yet mainly experimental. The prospective yield of oats declined during June in New England, Middle and Northwestern States, except Wisconsin, where it was enhanced. Winter barley generally declined in the South and West, where heavy rains prevailed. The late winter told badly on the fruit crop. The injury to apple-trees was more extensive than was apparent at the last report. A vast number of peach-trees were killed. The condition of grapes ranged from 61 in California to 127 in Nebraska.

NEW YORK, July 29.—Late advices from the City of Mexico state that the government has received dispatches confirming the report that the famous revolutionist, Lozada, had been taken prisoner by the national troops. He was captured on the fourteenth instant.

The Teple revolution is about ended.

The government is arranging to send six thousand troops to reinforce the army on the Rio Grande.

FOREIGN.

VIENNA, July 23.—The Emperor of Austria will go to St. Petersburg in the autumn. The visit is regarded by the press as of deep political significance.

BAYONNE, July 23.—The Carlists claim that their effective force in Spain now numbers thirty thousand men. They have disembarked a large quantity of arms and ammunition from England at Requleto.

PARIS, July 23.—The Carlists have made a formal demand of France for the recognition of their rights as belligerents. The French government has refused, and declares that it will remain perfectly neutral.

In accordance with this policy it has forbidden the Spanish Republicans from sending succor to Puigcerda by way of Port Vendres, a French town on the Mediterranean.

LONDON, July 24.—The Right Hon. George Carr Glyn, Baron Wolverton, died this morning, in the seventy-seventh year of his ago. His eldest son, Hon. George Grenful Glyn, joint secretary to the treasury, and famous as a parliamentary whip, will succeed to the baronetcy. It is probable that Thomas Brassey, member for Hastings, will become the whip in the House of Commons in place of Glyn, when the latter goes to the House of Lords.

ST. PETERSBURG, July 24.—A dispatch from Khiva says a decree was issued by the Khan, on the twenty-fourth ultimo, totally abolishing slavery in his dominions. He provides that all persons held in bondage shall be made citizens or returned to their native countries.

LONDON, July 25.—The Shah of Persia will embark at Bryndesi for Constantinople.

ST. PETERSBURG, July 25.—The government has received a dispatch from General Kaufman, announcing that the treaty between Russia and Khiva has been signed. The Khan promises to pay Russia two million roubles and abolish capital punishment in his dominions. In return for this Russia guarantees the independence of the Khanate. The Czar's troops will occupy Khiva until the war indemnity is paid. A portion of the territory of the Khan is to be given to Bokhara for assistance rendered the Russian troops.

ROME, July 26.—The King of Italy is represented as having held the following language to the French minister on the occasion of his departure from Rome:

"M. Fournier, you may leave in all assurance that my ministry will be conservative. I want no other; and tell your government I desire to be on good terms with it. I have no taste for a Prussian alliance, and there exists no treaty between the Emperor William and me. Only call the attention of your government to the doings of the church party in France; these doings are a continuous provocation. The cry of 'Sauvez Rome et la France!' is a cry of war against Italian unity. If Marshal MacMahon's government does not succeed in calming this agitation, which is communicating itself to the whole of clerical Europe, he will oblige me to cast myself entirely into the arms of Germany, and I shall do it. At present I represent peace between France and Germany. Do not forget this. Let war be declared against me, and it will be sufficient for me to place an army corps on your frontier in order to paralyze a great part of France, and cause her an invasion and losses of provinces and indemnities more terrible than those of 1870."

BAYONNE, July 29.—Don Carlos has arrived at Seiza, in Navarre, seventeen miles northwest of Pampeluna.

The Carlists are concentrating before Logrono, the capital of the province of that name, and an attack will probably be made soon. One hundred and seventy cures and other clergymen have fled from Spain and sought refuge in France.

LONDON, July 29.—The government proposes, upon the marriage of the Duke of Edinburg with the Grand Duchess Maria, of Russia, to increase his yearly allowance to $125,000.

BERLIN, July 29.—Bismarck has granted permission to the Good Templars to establish lodges in Prussia.

ST. PETERSBURG, July 29.—An official dispatch from General Kaufman reports that tranquility prevails at Khiva. The health of the troops is good. The transportation of the enfranchised slaves to Persia has begun.

"MAKING CATHOLICS."—"I believe I have divine authority to secure Protestant children from their Protestant mothers and make them Catholics. I deny the right of the Protestant minister to do the same."

This statement was made under oath by the Roman Catholic priest on Ward's Island, near this city, on the ninth of July, 1873. Now we ask every and any Protestant parent into whose hands this copy of the New York Observer may come: "Will you place your son or daughter in a Roman Catholic school, or one in which by any possibility the influence of a Roman Catholic may be brought to bear upon the youthful mind? What can you expect but that your unsuspecting child will be seduced into the church that does not hesitate to avow such an infamous system as this priest professes? Your child may not admit to you her apostasy. She will be taught to conceal and deny it, if necessary. But she will be ruined by such influences as this shameless priest employs, and you are to be held responsible before God for the destruction of your own child."—New York Observer.

BY FLOWERS, understand faith; by fruit, good works; as the flower or blossom is before the fruit, so is faith before good works; so neither is the fruit without the flower, nor good works without faith.

From the Work.

GUM SPRING, SOUTH BOSSIER CIRCUIT, LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.—Mr. Editor: Bro. John A. Miller began a protracted meeting at this church on Saturday, the twelfth instant, and continued six days. The weather was quite warm and dry, yet the congregations were good and very serious, even to the last service. Bro. Miller was assisted by Bro. Kimball all the time, by Bro. Shea on Sunday, and Bro. H. O. White came in on Monday and did good service to the close. We had two services each day. The preaching was all good and full of the Holy Ghost. The result was a glorious outpouring of the Holy Spirit upon the church. There was not a large number of conversions or accessions to the church. The accessions to the church by application were all of good material, and there was precious gospel seed sown that must yield abundant fruit in the day of eternity.

Your brother, JAMES FORD.

JACKSON CIRCUIT, ALABAMA CONFERENCE.—Mr. Editor: A protracted meeting has just closed at Union church. It was a time of great rejoicing to many Christians. The love and power of God at times seemed to fill the place. The influence of the Spirit of the divine Master seemed to be upon every heart while the minister proclaimed the everlasting truth; and amid it all sinners trembled and turned pale, and scarcely none but those who were almost thoroughly dead in their guilt, hardness of heart and unbelief failed to approach the altar. While so many were repenting of their sins, and manifesting a desire to flee the wrath to come, Christians shouted aloud the praises of God, magnifying his holy name for his wonderful works to the children of men. The church here seems to be generally revived. There were nineteen accessions to the church, and it is supposed that there were about the same number of conversions. A meeting was recently held at Bethel church, another appointment of this work, which, we think, resulted in much good. The church there was greatly revived and built up by a number of conversions and eleven accessions. The Lord is prospering his work. The set time to favor Zion seems to be here. O that the good work may go on till all shall awake to righteousness and to the obedience of the truth.

VERMILLIONVILLE, LOUISIANA.—When we separated at Enfaula, last winter, you made me promise to write you, and now I do so. I arrived in time to preach the first Sunday in February—have been at work ever since. We are all greatly improved in health. We find our charge a very pleasant one, and so we are well pleased with the change. I feel very much away from home out of Alabama, and it seemed strange indeed that I was not a member of the Alabama Conference. The preachers, however, gave me a cordial welcome, and the members of my charge soon made me feel at home among them. We have to work here under the shadow of Romanism. In this Attakapas section of the State nearly all of the native population are Roman Catholics; hence Sunday, instead of being kept holy, is devoted to worldly pursuits. Not so, however, with our people. I never saw people more devoted to the interests of Protestantism. My congregations are large, Sunday-school first-class; all things considered, the church in good condition spiritually—indeed, in communities entirely Protestant, with twice and three times the numerical strength, I have not seen so much done. Since I have been here I have been amazed that people are moving to Texas and everywhere else, and yet there cannot be a more inviting section than this Attakapas region. The soil is productive, the climate is healthful, and more pleasant than in Alabama, being moderated by a good sea breeze from the Gulf of Mexico, and Protestant society as good as can be found. Romanism is gradually losing ground, and Protestantism is gaining. Would that Methodists in other States, who want to remove to a fertile soil and healthful climate, would give us a call. Notwithstanding the present political complications, this is the section. Sad to tell, the crops have been well-nigh ruined by two months of continuous rain; and in consequence it would not be well to estimate the fertility of the soil by this year's crop; but corn, cotton and sugar-cane all grow well here, while gardens produce vegetables of the finest quality without fertilizing. Arrangements are being made to have a school in connection with every pastoral charge—this is one important demand of Protestantism. I have found employment here in my former vocation—school-hours so arranged, by consent of all parties, as to allow full time for pastoral work. Aside from finances and politics, all things are encouraging here; but political troubles and unfavorable weather have well-nigh frustrated business; yet in God we trust.—J. M. Brown, in Nashville Christian Advocate.

The Publishing House Suit.

It was supposed that the claim of the Publishing House against the United States might be prosecuted without the further expense of a special agent, but on further consultation with our counsel it is deemed best that the Rev. R. Abbey continue to assist in the business.

Signs of the Times.

CROPS, FINANCIAL PRESSURE, ETC.

MR. EDITOR: I desire to make a few suggestions to the people who read your excellent paper, provided it meets your approbation. The crops in this region are very poor, cotton especially. It has been raining here, as far as my knowledge extends, since about the tenth of May. We who believe the Bible believe that God rules the clouds and regulates the seasons, and that "all things work together for our good," provided we love him. I think I can see the good intended to be worked out by the Lord in sending so much rain. Now the people in the cotton-growing region have planted so largely in cotton that, had it not been providentially hindered from producing a full crop, the price would have gone down to seven or eight cents, which would not have brought enough money to keep the people living; but, as it is, they may get more money for the little they make, and at the same time learn a very important lesson, viz.: that they would do better to plant less cotton and more of other things for home consumption. This country is destined to be miserably poor just so long as the people depend on producing cotton with which to buy bread and every other article of food. And what makes a bad matter worse is, that those who produce the cotton have no voice in setting the price upon it, nor upon any article they have to buy with its proceeds. The cotton is generally sold or mortgaged, before it is planted, at any price their unreasonable masters (merchants) see proper to give them when it is carried to market. Then they must give the merchant his own price for his old rags and rotten corn, which is just about one hundred per cent. above its real value, besides the time lost out of the crop to haul it. A majority of farmers are one and two years behind, and will never get any better under the present straining system. I travel about and hear the people talk, and from all I can learn the farming interest in this country is like a heavily laden wagon going up a steep hill with a weak team, the mud getting deeper and the hill steeper the further it goes; the wagon is bound to come to a stand-still. But it may be asked, What is the remedy? What better can be done? I answer, Quit making so much cotton—quit at all hazards. It cannot possibly be any worse. Let the people raise their own bread and meat; raise turnips and sweet potatoes for stock. But, says one, who has time for this? Cut down your cotton to one-third your present crop and then you will have time. Plant a part of your cotton-fields in oats; cut off the crop and then have pasturage. You will then find that you will not need so much corn. As for the meat, it will be almost raised on the pasture. Sow your poor lands that, after hard and close cultivation, will only produce one bale of cotton to four or five acres, in cow peas. This will insure a vast amount of forage for the winter, besides improving the land. Let the planters plant less and manure more and cultivate better. Let them build up their homes by adding home conveniences and home luxuries. The present cotton system is calculated to enslave and impoverish, without any compensation.

If the Southern farmers would adopt this plan they would soon see a great change in their circumstances. One-third the cotton would bring about the same amount of money, and at least half that amount would be clear gain, because there would not be so much to buy. Then, Mr. Editor, you would get more money from your subscribers; then there would be more money to support the several enterprises of the church; then the whole country would blossom as a rose. In my next I will notice the signs of the times in reference to the church. OBSERVER.

SPURGEON ON COMMUNION.—The English edition of Mr. Spurgeon's sermon on the text, "These are they who separate themselves," Jude xix, contains some outspoken words against the evil of close communion, from which we quote:

"There is not a Christian beneath the scope of God's heaven from whom I am separated. At the Lord's table I always invite all Christians to come and sit down and commune with us. If any man were to tell me that I am separate from the Episcopalian, the Presbyterian or the Methodist, I would tell him he did not know me, for I love them with a pure heart fervently, and I am not separate from them. * * * * * *

"The pulse of Christ is communion; and woe to the church that seeks to cure the ills of Christ's church by stopping its pulse. I think it a sin to refuse to commune with any one who is a member of the church of our Lord Jesus Christ. I should think myself grossly in fault if at the foot of these stairs I should meet a truly converted child of God, who called himself a Primitive Methodist or a Wesleyan or a Churchman or an Independent, and I should say: 'No, sir; you do not agree with me on certain points; I believe you are a child of God, but I will have nothing to do with you.' I should then think the text would bear very hard on me: 'These are they who separate themselves, sensual, not having the spirit.'"

THE Rev. R. K. Brown writes, says the Nashville Christian Advocate, Edgefield, July 17, 1873: "For the Moxleau mission, on Tullp Street Sunday school, $35.55. There will be some more soon."

Alabama Conference Female College, Tuskegee, Alabama.

We condense from the Daily News the following account of the commencement exercises of this popular institution:

The commencement exercises, for this year, of the Alabama Conference Female College were had last week, commencing with the sermon on Sunday morning and ending with the concert on Wednesday evening. The week previous was devoted to an examination of the several classes. This examination was conducted by a committee of gentlemen thoroughly qualified for the work, and who performed it patiently, thoroughly and conscientiously. They "glossed" nothing, extenuated nothing, but proceeded in their labors with rigid and impartial criticism. We give the result of these labors in their report published in this issue by order of the board of managers. Comment is scarcely necessary. The report speaks for itself, and is flattering both to teachers and pupils in its truthful exposition of the condition and management of the institution.

On Friday night preceding commencement exercises proper the Philadian Society, composed of the young ladies of the college, teachers and pupils, and organized for social and literary improvement, held their first public exhibition. This consisted in recitations, music, tableaux and dialogues. The salutatory to the audience, by Miss Leila Griggs, was happily conceived and impressively and elegantly read; and the exercises throughout were highly entertaining. This society desires to collect a library; who will assist them in this laudable undertaking? Contributions in books, or the money to buy them, would, we doubt not, be gratefully received. On Sunday, the twenty-second ultimo, the sermon was preached by Dr. A. S. Andrews, president of the Southern University, from Matthew xxvi, 8. The discourse was an earnest, able and eloquent exposition of the important truths suggested by the text.

The sophomore exhibition on Monday morning consisted of recitations, interspersed with music. The selections were happily made, and the young ladies read with a correctness and clearness of enunciation that evinced at once their talents and appreciation of the teaching they had received.

The art festival took place on Monday evening. The original pieces for the occasion were the salutatory, by Miss Pauline Campbell, an essay on Art, by Miss Julia Dowdell. These young ladies, both of Tuskegee, received the meed of praise which was justly their due, as well for the excellence and appropriateness of their productions as their correctness and beauty of style in reading. The exercises were closed by an appropriate address from Mr. G. R. Glenn, of Columbus, Georgia.

The young ladies of the junior class read original essays on Tuesday morning. The most impressive of these exercises occurred when the name of Miss Mattie Motley was called. This estimable young lady, lately deceased, was a member of the junior class, and, when the time arrived at which she would have read in order, her death was feelingly announced by the president, and Prof. Herz occupied the moments with a solemn requiem for the dead. The vacant chair, hung with a wreath of beautiful flowers and draped in mourning, the impressive stillness and the soft tones of the organ, touched every heart, and drew tears of sympathy and sorrow from eyes not used to weeping. First of the evening exercises was an address by Captain R. E. Park, of Macon, Georgia, which had been announced for the morning, but, which was postponed on account of inclement weather. The exordium of the address was a graceful allusion to the services rendered by President Moore to the Alabama soldiers during the late war, in camp and hospital, and upon the field of battle; and to the eminent fitness that he should have been called to take charge of those to whose fathers and brothers and friends he had so faithfully ministered in their hours of greatest trial. The graduating class then read their essays, and better productions or reading it has not been our fortune to hear on similar occasions.

On Wednesday morning Miss Fannie Felton read "a salutatory to the audience;" Miss Hennie Dill, "a valedictory to the class;" Miss Lelia Griggs, "a valedictory to the faculty and undergraduates," and Miss Kate Smith responded in behalf of the undergraduates. President Moore then delivered diplomas to the young ladies who had completed the course, and gave his parting counsel in words of wisdom, earnestly and feelingly spoken. Next in order came the address of General E. M. Law. We were prepared for an intellectual "treat" and we received it in even greater measure than we expected. The address was indeed a masterpiece. It was pure and elevating in tone of thought, chaste in style, and in its delivery General Law showed himself an adept in the art of graceful oratory.

We have little room for extended notice of the concert on Wednesday evening. It was piquant and charming—such an one as Prof. Herz knows well how to give. We were delighted and refreshed.

We trust and believe there is a bright and prosperous future before the Alabama Conference Female College. Vigilant eyes are watching over its interests, and experienced hands controlling its destiny, and its worth as a first-class institution is widely known. We are gratified to know that a favorable opening is promised for the next term.

The Decay of Romanism.

What was Rome in 1790, and what is it now? Within these eighty years the church-state and the temporal power of the German episcopate have been dissolved; the possessions of the church in France, Spain and Italy have been sold as national property. Everywhere has Protestant heresy obtained civil rights. Protestant chapels flourish in Rome as well as in Madrid; the Protestant clergyman walks about unmolested, and disseminates his Bible by thousands and tons of thousands. Had not—since Napoleon's consulate in France, and in the other Catholic and Protestant States since the Congress of Vienna—political power steadily stood up for the church; had not, after 1848, political reaction leagued itself with ecclesiastical reaction; had we done what the spokesmen of Ultramontanism now so earnestly, so persistently demand—left the church to herself—the vail of the temple had long since been rent asunder. The German Catholic movement of 1840 by no means foundered on Peter's rock; it was first hindered, then repressed, and finally strangled, through police measures, by State persecution. To the church's advantage, in the very heat of the contest, a Pope pronounced from the pulpit the word "reform"—a Pope who, at that time, loved that his name should be connected with that of Ganganelli. The infallible Pope, Pius the Ninth, was, in the year 1849, the ideal of the Italian Liberals whom to-day he curses. The transformation which the world then hoped for at the hands of the Roman Catholic Church already cast widely before it its majestic shadow. Wherefore secede from a church which intends to make its peace with modern culture and society? so said quiet, thoughtful people—and remained. The Syllabus, the "Non Possumus" and the infallibility dogma were necessary to prove that between modern society and Rome nothing real or durable can exist except war. Roman Catholicism is being surely driven to take up that position which, fifteen hundred years ago, perishing heathendom occupied with regard to ambitious Christendom. It is the religion of the uneducated. * * * So long as Rome could dispose of the secular arm in her service, and the night of ignorance beshrouded the world, her mastery was easy. No intelligence was required to burn dissidents. The conflict in which we are now engaged in Germany derives the desperation of its character only from the fact that the State has too long favored and furthered the aggressions of the church. * * * The Liberals overestimate the strength of their adversary. In the end this battle must become a battle of intelligence; and upon that territory the Jesuits, ghostly as well as worldly, with all their dogmas and the miracles of the saints to boot, cannot but quickly come to grief.

Let Roman Catholicism look which way it will, it can claim as its own no great man of learning, no great poet or painter. Its most distinguished theologians have fallen away from it; the absolute contradiction in which, stilly enough, it has set itself against modern discovery and natural science, presses it hardly even upon its own special field—theology. No man of learning can approach the Bible nowadays in the harmlessly naive manner with which that book was wont to be interpreted at the beginning of this century. * * * The sorties of Ultramontane journals and orators against the professors of theology are well known; but how much is wanting ere one of the partisans of infallibility shall equal or surpass Dollinger in erudition? When they throw dirt at an artist like Kaulbach they truly manifest a vulgar vigor; but they cannot set up against him a painter of equal eminence. There were once a Catholic erudition, a Catholic poetry, a Catholic school of painting and music; but they exist no longer. The last blossom on the life-tree of Catholicism were Manzoni, Chateaubriand and DeMaistre. And how little in harmony with the priestly ideal of the first is the irritable Bishop Ketteler, or the cursing Pius the Ninth! No! It is in vain you strive to conquer the genius of the eighteenth century through that of the sixteenth.—Berlin National Zeitung.

Pass Him Round.—O. B. Fowler.

We are requested by the Quarterly Conference of Cuba circuit, Demopolis district, Alabama Annual Conference, to give notice to the church and public that the person claiming the above name has in his possession a license to preach, signed by S. H. Cox, presiding elder, and S. Hall, secretary, and a church certificate, signed by George Bancroft, preacher in charge, and that he is wholly unworthy of either. He has abandoned his wife and two children, whom he represents as dead, obtained money under false pretenses, and is guilty of many and repeated falsehoods. We hope the church papers will publish this notice.

THE SUN-BRIGHT CLIME.

I.

Have you heard, have you heard of that sun-bright clime,
Undimm'd by sorrow, unhurt by time,
Where age has no power o'er the fadeless frame,
Where the eye is fire and the heart is flame?
Have you heard of that sun-bright clime?

II.

A river of water gushes there,
'Mid flowers of beauty strangely fair,
And a thousand of forms are hovering o'er
The golden waves and the dashing shore
That are seen in that sun bright clime.
Have you heard, have you heard of that sun-bright clime?

III.

A million of forms all clothed in white,
In garments of beauty clear and bright;
They dwell in their own immortal bowers;
'Mid fadeless hues of countless flowers
That bloom in that sun bright clime.
Have you heard, have you heard of that sun-bright clime?

IV.

Ear hath not heard and eye hath not seen
Their seraph forms and their heavenly mien;
Their ensigns are waving and their banners unfurl'd
O'er the jasper walls and the gates of gold
That are fixed in that sun-bright clime.
Have you heard, have you heard of that sun-bright clime?

V.

But far, far away is that sinless clime,
Undimm'd by sorrow, untouch'd by time;
Where nought is sold, but where all is given—
The home of the just, and its name is Heaven—
That's the name of that sun-bright clime.
Have you heard, have you heard of that sun-bright clime?

Address

To the Ministers and Delegates of the Jackson District Conference of the Mississippi Annual Conference.

BELOVED BRETHREN: Allow me to greet you in the name of our Lord and Savior, Jesus Christ, whom we love and serve, and in whose cause we are united and engaged.

Assembled, as we are on this occasion, to inquire into the condition, and plan for the interests of the church of Christ, as committed to our care and supervision, that we may labor for its welfare and prosperity, it becomes us, with all faith and diligence, to seek for the holy anointing, ever remembering the words of the Savior: "Without me ye can do nothing." May we always have his presence and strength to abide with and help us. Let us on this occasion pray most earnestly for the outpouring of the Spirit upon us and the church in this district, that, being fired afresh with the love of God, we may labor for his glory here, and go to our respective homes and fields with renewed zeal and energy to labor for his glory there.

Having been appointed to the position which requires me "to travel through the district, to superintend the spiritual and financial interests of the church and to take care that every part of the Discipline be enforced," it may be supposed that I see and hear and learn more of the condition of the church—its improvements and wants—than any other person in it. This being so, I have thought it might be proper to call your united attention to some things, the consideration of which by you may be profitable to the whole church in the district.

I.—THE SPIRITUAL CONDITION OF THE CHURCH.

As you are to inquire into this while here, it may be considered to be the prominent question, and the one of most vital interest. It deeply concerns every one of us, our families, and the special communities in which we live. I am happy to inform you that in several of the churches there is a better state spiritually than at the opening of the Conference year. This is evinced by an increased attendance on the ministry of the word, at prayer meetings, other social meetings, and the private means of grace. There have been conversions and additions to the church. The membership have been revived. These improvements, in some of the pastoral charges, have been marked, and have had a very encouraging effect on pastors and members. That such improvements may be universal in the district is the prayer of every sincere Christian in it. That such a state of improvement is not general or universal may be accounted for, I believe, in the facts following, viz.:

1. The family altar is not found in every family, and we fear only in few, comparatively, of the families of our church. God is not worshiped in every house by the household. God is not recognized in such families as their Ruler and Sovereign, as their constant Keeper and Provider, and Giver of all their blessings, and as entitled to their hearts and lives. Hence proper religious influence upon the youth is wanting even in some of the families of our church. We ought to labor to correct this deficiency and dereliction in our members. One of the General Rules of our church requires family prayer.

2. Private prayer is not faithfully and punctually attended to by some members of our church. To have a place to pray, and an hour for prayer, do not form a part of the daily programme of their lives. Hence they do not love to pray. Hence the spiritual life is not lived nor enjoyed by them. They are destitute of the power to make them felt and useful in the church and world. Instead of being strong to help in the church, they are feeble and weights to be carried, and thus retard the cause.

3. Hence the prayer meetings are but sparsely attended. Those who do not pray in their families and in the closet will not take part in the prayer meetings, either to lead them or to lead in prayer when called on. As prayer meetings are a very efficient means of promoting religion and keeping up the revival and progressive spirit in the church, when they are neglected or but sparsely attended the spiritual state of the church is low. I regret to say there are churches, if not circuits, in this district without a prayer meeting. This has a chilling effect on those who would do better.

4. A worldly spirit controls the minds of many. Not simply in making them more careful and anxious about making and accumulating the goods or riches of the world, so that some use not very honorable means to this end—this would be bad enough, as the deceitfulness of riches and the cares of the world choke the word and prevent spiritual life—but the pleasures of life and the lusts of other things entering in also choke the word. A conformity to those worldly pleasures, amusements and other worldly actions destroys the life of God in the soul. Among these, as destroying the moral and religious life, may be set down wine parties, dancing parties, balls, card-playing, circuses, theaters, whisky-selling, whisky-drinking, dealing in lotteries, attending that saturnalian carnival, Mardi-gras. All these things are in direct conflict with the General Rules of the church, and the spirit and genius of Christianity. When members of the church indulge in such the cause of vital godliness will languish. If proper discipline were brought to bear on such members the church might be purged and relieved, and its power felt for good. But when members persist in such things, and will not be admonished by their pastors, and no one will bring charges against them, or when the pastor, as the law directs, appoints a committee to investigate the rumors to see if there is ground for charges, they refuse to act, or, if charges should be brought against them, the persons summoned as a court of trial refuse to serve or have anything to do with the cases, how can we protect the church and preserve its spiritual life? Are members true to themselves and to others, to the church and to God, who pursue such a course?

The pastor meets persons who say: "I would like to join the Methodist Church, but do not see that I would better my condition any by joining here, as you have members here who dance, play cards, go to circuses and theaters, sell whisky and get drunk." Has not the church in such places lost its spirituality and power? The pastor has to explain that he has no power to expell persons for such conduct. He has no vote in any case. He is only the presiding officer to see, when charges are brought, that the parties have a fair trial.

From the observations I have made I believe that if church conferences were held regularly, and the members would deal faithfully with all such persons as to the things alluded to above, many, if not all, of them might be cured and saved. A manfearing spirit keeps the church from doing its duty in that respect. Let the effort be made to reform and save.

Just here we are met by members and ministers who affirm that our church is not against whisky-selling, dancing, card-playing, attending circuses and theaters, and such like things, because they are not specified in the General Rules, and therefore we cannot arraign our members for such conduct, nor expell for such, if they do not reform and repent. They forget that a general rule is not a specific rule, so as to mention all the specials that might come under a general rule. The general rule says: "By doing no harm, by avoiding evil of every kind, that which is most generally practiced, such as," and then presents a general catalogue of heads.

If the position taken by these persons were correct we could not discipline one for theft or adultery, because neither of these is specified in the General Rules. But will these persons say such ought not to be dealt with by the church?

It is directed in the Discipline, pages 129–135, that persons may be tried and expelled from the church "for crime that is expressly forbidden in the word of God, or for neglect of duties of any kind, imprudent conduct, indulging sinful tempers or words, or disobedience to the orders and discipline of the church, or for sowing dissensions in any of our societies, by inveighing against our doctrines or discipline." These are more specific directions for carrying out the principles of the General Rules of the church.

The General Conference, as the legislative body of our church, has given us some definitions of what is forbidden in the General Rules. In that definition it has asked: "How shall we guard against bribery, dancing, attendance upon circuses and theaters, Sabbath-breaking, and the other evils forbidden in the General Rules?" Among the directions given is this: "3. Let the people be admonished that none who practice any of these evils can remain in our church." See Discipline of 1858, pages 101 and 102.

But because the General Conference of 1866 ordered that section to be published in the Preachers' Manual, so as to have all his specific instructions in a convenient form, many assume that the General Conference has receded from its position on the evils above enumerated. This is their mistake. The General Rules forbid the taking such diversions as cannot be taken in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ.

The General Conference of 1870 sent out, in its pastoral address, no uncertain sound against the evils above alluded to. And every pastor was requested to read that address to his congregation; and that he may do so, at least once a year, it has been published in the Manual of the Discipline for convenient reference and frequent reading. The pastors of the Methodist Episcopal Church South are urged to give heed to these things in the administration of discipline.

To make our church more spiritual and more useful in saving souls, all of our members should be trained up in the idea that every one has a work to do. "He gave to every man his work" is the word of the Master. As every joint and member of the body has its place to fill, and its office and work, so, according to First Corinthians xii and Romans xii, every member of the church has his place, office and work. (Here opens a wide field for labor and usefulness in social meetings, Sunday schools, etc.) The hand that never grasps or works withers and becomes lifeless. To preserve our spiritual life and make vigorous the members of the church they must be active—must work to cultivate the graces of the Spirit in their hearts and exhibit the fruit of the Spirit in their lives. The exercise of every grace tends to its increase. So to labor to build up the church, and advance the cause of Christ in extending the knowledge of Christ in the conversion and salvation of sinners, will develop our powers and make our own religious life more vigorous.

II.—MISSIONS AND MISSIONARY CONTRIBUTIONS.

The cause of missions will claim your attention, and I hope your earnest attention, as there are communities in the boundaries of this district destitute of the gospel and means of grace, which ought to be supplied. Can we do it? Other portions of our Annual Conference are destitute and need the gospel, and pecuniary aid in sustaining the ministry which may be sent to preach to them. The foreign field is opening the door wide to us every day, and in some places the field is ripe to the waiting—waiting for the reapers. China, Japan, South America and Mexico are all calling for help. Shall we decline to have any part in their instruction and salvation? Shall we refuse to gather from them stars to be in our crowns of rejoicing? I believe a better spirit animates you, and that you will give your earnest prayers that the gospel may be given them, and of your substance to support those who may be sent to tell them of Jesus and the resurrection. A missionary church is always a lively, prosperous, aggressive and progressive church; for they that water shall be watered themselves. There is that scattereth and yet increaseth; while there is that withholdeth more than is meet and it tendeth to poverty. If we would have our church all alive spiritually, and interested in the advancement of Christianity, we must seek to have it imbued with the missionary spirit.

Can we occupy any new field or form any new circuits? I think we may. But if this be done we must have more laborers—more ministers at our command. At the last session of our Annual Conference at least eight more preachers could have been assigned to works than we had at our disposal, while the scarcity of preachers made it necessary to appoint very young preachers to the charge of important fields, where the services of more experienced men were needed. Those young preachers are doing the best they can. But if they could have been placed under men of experience they would have been saved many embarrassments. Here is our need. No new work can be undertaken without more preachers. Let us pray the Lord of the harvest to send more laborers into the field. While you pray for this, are you willing to give your sons to this work if God shall call them? to give yourselves if God says: Go?

III.—SUNDAY SCHOOLS, ETC.

Sunday schools, and the manner of conducting them, as well as the cause of education generally, will demand your attention. Of the importance of Sunday schools I trust you are all deeply impressed. We cannot impart truth to the young too early. By occupying the mind with truth error is excluded. But the effort should not cease with the lesson committed to memory, or the theory imparted, but should be carried forward so as to get the child to practice and experience the truth—to be doers of the word, as well as hearers and readers—to become Christians in childhood and youth. And the Sunday school superintendent and teacher who does not direct his labors to that blessed result fails to come up to the dignity, importance and design of his office and the work he has undertaken. The gospel is designed to save all, that they may be in Christ—the children of God. Do not children need all the saving power of this truth? Do they not need salvation? Did not Christ come to seek and to save them? Then the mission of Sunday schools is to instruct children and bring them to Christ to be saved. They are a part of the machinery of the church to effect this great and blessed result. To save souls is the design of such schools. Then it is of great importance to have religious and deeply pious persons to engage in the Sunday school work as officers and teachers. Persons acquainted with the deep things of God are much needed in the Sunday schools. They may lead others to Christ.

IV.—FINANCES, CHURCHES AND PARSONAGES.

I must congratulate you and the church in this district upon the financial improvements in the district since 1870. These improvements have been gradually advancing. The Minutes of the Annual Conference show that more was paid in this district last year for the support of the pastors than in any other district of the Conference. Every pastoral charge in the district has made an advance in the amounts allowed the pastor. The receipts have increased also.

Church-building and repairing have been and are still going on.

One year ago there were but two parsonages in the district; now there are six, worth, with the land attached, about $10,000. They are not large and costly, but are neat and comfortable homes for our ministers and their families. Steps have been taken to secure two others, which I trust will be crowned with success before the year ends. I can but wish and hope that every pastoral charge will not rest till it has a good parsonage, and well furnished for its pastor and his family. It will be a safe and cheap investment for the circuit or station and preacher—saving the expense of rent to the work, and of moving furniture to the preacher. It will make it cheaper and more convenient often to support the pastor by having a parsonage.

Praying the blessing of God may be with and guide us in our deliberations, I am

Your brother in Christ,
H. H. MONTGOMERY.

YAZOO CITY, June 5, 1873.

SOME of us speak words that touch roughly the character or business of our neighbors, and think little of it, when the mere thought of a tune on Sunday quicker than Old Hundred gives us a regular electric shock of horror.

The Alabama Conference and the Southern University.

MR. EDITOR: Does Kappa mean to assert for a fact that the $13,000 is held by the Alabama Conference in trust? Does he mean to assert that this is a regular trust in law and morals, not held by the Conference for its own use and benefit, but to convey or dispose of the interest at the will or for the benefit of another? Has the Conference no interest in this fund?

Kappa replies to the assertion made that "the Conference did so dispose of this fund as to benefit its members." He denies. This question may be very soon settled by an appeal to the action of the Conference. The Conference resolved: "That ten-thirteenths of the interest be paid annually to the treasurer of the Southern University, to be applied to the payment of the tuition of the sons of the ministers of the Alabama and North Alabama Conferences, etc.; and that three-thirteenths be paid annually to the treasuror of the Tuskegee Female College, to be applied to the payment of the board of the daughters of the members of the Conference." The Conference further resolved: "That the institutions shall, through their respective treasurers, report, through the treasurer of the Legal Conference, to the Annual Conference at each session, the names of all the recipients of the above-named funds, and the amount paid for each." Here the Conference applies the interest of this $13,000 to the payment of the tuition of the sons and board of the daughters of the preachers, and yet Kappa denies that the Conference did so dispose of this fund as to benefit its members. He cannot deny that the interest of this fund is applied to the payment of tuition and board of preachers' sons and daughters. The question, then, narrows down to this: Did the Conference, in making provision for the tuition of preachers' sons at Greensboro and the board of preachers' daughters at Tuskegee, thereby benefit the preachers? The Conference so regarded it. If the Conference had no eye to the benefit of its members, why did it further resolve: "That the Conference reserves to itself the sole right of judging whether the moneys herein granted have been expended according to the provisions of the grant, and if in any case it shall be discovered that there has been any abuse of the grant, or misapplication of the funds, then the Conference may, at its own discretion, withdraw the entire sum?" What are the provisions of this grant if not the payment of tuition and board? And if the Conference had no eye to the benefit of its members, why does it give these institutions to understand that "if in any case" there shall be a perversion of these funds from the provisions of the grant they may lose the entire grant?

The committee on education intended that the members of the Conference should receive benefit from these funds, for this committee recommended that the interest on $10,000 be turned over to pay for the tuition of the sons of itinerant preachers of the Alabama Conference, etc. This language is not ambiguous, nor was the committee constituted of men ignorant as to the force of language, nor was it constituted of men capable of framing a resolution with the intent of practicing a fraud by making it appear that there should be benefit where none was intended. The mover of the substitute intended that the members of the Conference should receive benefit, for he so worded the substitute that the interest of $13,000 should be applied to paying the tuition of the sons and board of the daughters of its members, etc., and the purpose of the mover of this substitute was to guard more effectually, by additional resolutions, the benefit of the Conference. This substitute was judged to be a clear document. It gives these institutions to understand that the intention of the Conference is that they shall annually receive the interest of $13,000 as long as they in good faith and every case apply said interest according to the provisions set forth.

Kappa does not understand either the Conference or himself. He assumes "that the Conference did so dispose of those funds as not to benefit its members." Yet, according to his own argument, the members of the Conference now have a right, when before they had only a gratuitous favor from the faculty of the Southern University. What about the benefit in the three-thirteenths! Had the members of the Conference even the gratuitous favor of board at Tuskegee? Have they secured as a right benefit which they did not enjoy as a gratuitous favor?

Kappa understood that it was the purpose of the Conference to help forward the endowment fund of the University, and not to pay the tuition of preachers' sons. The question of endowment is not the question. The Conference could help the University and pay the tuition of preachers' sons with the same money. The interest of the University and the education of preachers' sons are not opposed, so that both may not be secured by one act. It has not been denied that the Conference intended to aid the University. If the Conference did not purpose "to pay the tuition of preachers' sons," why did it say so? I infer that Kappa further understood that the Conference did not purpose that three-thirteenths of this interest should be applied to the payment of the board of daughters of the members of the Conference, and yet this is just what the Conference said it purposed. Why does the Conference purpose one thing and say another? Why don't the Conference just say what it means? If it intended to aid these institutions, and had no other object in view, why was there any mention of board and tuition? why was not the interest handed over annually without providing for tuition and board of preachers' children?

Let Kappa stick to the question. The question is not whether the Southern University and the Alabama Conference Female College have been benefited by this fund, but whether the Conference has so appropriated a trust fund as to benefit the itinerant preachers of the Conference. The question is not as to the extent of the benefit or nature of it. The question is a simple one, and cannot be covered up by a history of the struggles of the University. In Kappa's first article he discriminated between funds held by the Conference in trust and funds held for the benefit of its members, and he was surprised and pained that brethren proposed to appropriate the interest of this fund to pay the tuition of preachers' children, and thereby benefit the preachers. It was replied that the Conference did appropriate this fund for the benefit of the preachers in ordering it to be applied to the payment of tuition and board of their sons and daughters. Kappa denies that the Conference did purpose "to pay the tuition of preachers' sons," and I infer heard of preachers' daughters. He "discriminates" between the true purpose of the Conference and the purpose of the Conference as set forth in its own act, and gives us to understand that the Conference really purposed not to purpose what it did purpose.

Kappa represents the Conference as saying by its action, now in controversy, to the preachers: "Send your sons along to the University. The faculty will take this $800 interest as an equivalent for the tuition fees of every preachers' son in both Alabama Conferences," etc. But according to Kappa's position they so take it that no benefit is secured to the preachers. The faculty has never made any charge for tuition, never will, but will take the $800 as an equivalent. On the same principle the Conference says to these same preachers: "Send your daughters along to Tuskegee. The president will take this $240 interest as an equivalent for a $240 board bill. He will deduct this much from your board bill. If your daughter should be the only preacher's daughter in attendance, the whole amount will be credited to your bill. If there should be another, your bill will be credited by $120. Preachers have heretofore been charged the regular bill for board, and will still be so charged, but this $240 paid out of this fund will be deducted." In the language of Kappa: "Does the reader not see that no benefit is secured to the members of the Conference that they did not enjoy before?" Let Kappa in his next make it a little clearer that there is no benefit in this matter of board, and let me suggest that the "utility" of his next article may be enhanced greatly if he will stick to his text, and argue the purpose of the Conference from the act and language of the Conference.

Obituaries.

DEPARTED THIS LIFE, on the twenty-ninth of June, 1873, in Floyd, Louisiana, after an illness of two and a half days, of meningitis, GEORGE B. F. LANGFORD, son of Sister W. A. Gaddis, aged seven years, five months and eighteen days. The school has lost one of its regular pupils and the Sabbath school a member. Cheer up, bereft parents and friends! The grave, thank God, is not the goal of human hope. If faithful to our trust, we too will soon anchor in the haven of repose. With the light of the gospel penetrating the tomb, "we sorrow not, even as others who have no hope."

G. M. L.

BRO. JAMES ADAMS, who was a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church South at Montevallo, died April 19, 1873. He was born in East Tennessee, November 9, 1804. He embraced religion and joined the church when quite young. In all his sickness and suffering he was quiet and patient. He moved to Selma in 1851. Here he lived several years; then he moved to Montevallo, where he breathed his last. He was an active, zealous and faithful Christian. He served the church as class-leader, trustee, steward, Sabbath school teacher and superintendent as faithfully as any man ever did. He has left a wife and several children and scores of friends to mourn his death. His children are all grown and married but one—little Bob Lee. May God help the mother to bring him up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord. Bro. Adams was prompt in his attendance at church. His seat was never vacant if he could possibly get there. His seat was in what used to be termed the "amen corner". He loved the ministers of the gospel, and when weary and worn his house was their pleasant home. He had on the whole armor—he was at his post when the Master called. He had fought a good fight, he had kept the faith, and henceforth he has a crown of life.

His pastor, R. G. RAGAN.

DIED, in Summerfield, Alabama, June 10, 1873, of dysentery, Miss ADELIA CHAPMAN, of Grove Hill, Alabama, in the twentieth year of her age.

The deceased was a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, and led a consistent Christian life. She endured her sufferings during her painful illness with remarkable patience and fortitude. Early on Sunday morning she became conscious that her end was drawing near, and she looked forward to it with calmness, resignation, and an unusual composure of mind, possible only to those who are sustained by the comforting presence of the Holy Spirit. Her mind was clear and under perfect control. She called for the writer to sing and pray with her. She entered feelingly into the expressions of the prayer, and caught and repeated the words of the hymns as the utterances of her own faith and trust. She summoned her schoolmates and bid them, one by one, farewell, giving each her dying counsel, urging upon all to lead Christian lives and meet her in heaven. To the leading questions asked her to ascertain her spiritual condition, her prospects and her hopes, her answers were prompt, clear and satisfactory. She said that she felt assured of her salvation; that she would soon be with Jesus; that there were no clouds to obscure her sky; that all was bright above and beyond her; that she was in the hands of One "who doeth all things well;" that her Redeemer was precious to her soul, and that she felt she was his child, that her sins were all forgiven—washed away by the cleansing blood of her Savior. We all exclaimed: "What a beautiful death!" "What peace, joy and serenity reigned there!"

At midday, when the sun came out from behind the clouds and brightened the earth with his smiles, she sweetly fell asleep in Jesus, and we could hardly tell when her spirit mounted to worlds on high.

A. D. McVOY.

DIED, in Summerfield, Alabama, June 17, 1873, of dysentery, Mrs. FLORENCE FULLER, of Forkland, Alabama, in the twenty-second year of her age.

The deceased, daughter of Dr. G. C. Taylor, had been married six months, when her husband died. After this sad event she determined to prepare herself by study for greater usefulness, and for this purpose entered, two years ago, as a student, Centenary Female College. Her superior intellectual capacity and earnest application to her studies soon classified her as no ordinary student. She at once acquired a character for faithfulness to duty, correctness of deportment, conscientiousness of action, integrity of character and sincerity of purpose. Her life here displayed all the Christian virtues, and her influence was marked and felt by all. At all religious services her place was never vacant, except from sickness or necessity. When it became evident that she would die, she called for the writer and requested prayer, and that the hymn, "We shall meet beyond the river," should be sung, as she was about to die. She delighted in song, and she entered with all her soul into the sentiments of the hymns that were sung. Now and then her voice could be heard as she caught the strains of "Over there." She bade farewell, one by one, to all her friends and associates around her bedside, giving them her dying counsel. Her resignation, calmness and composure of mind in view of death, her expressions of faith and hope, her realization of the presence of the Savior, made her death-bed impressive beyond description, and illustrated the truth: "My grace is sufficient for you." Here was a happy death, for a glorious immortality awaited her. But from a human standpoint it was sad beyond expression to see her die—just as the hopes and fond anticipations of her life were about to be realized; just as she had gained the highest honor of her class, as the reward of faithful application through two long years of laborious study; just as she was preparing to read the valedictory of her class, within a few days of graduation, with her laurels won, her name honored on every lip and loved in every heart. She did good while living, she did good in dying, and her memory will do good to those who love her.

A. D. McVOY.

DIED, in Lowndesboro, Alabama, June 16, 1873, after an illness of sixty-four hours, WILLIAM GILMER, oldest son of W. D. and C. McCurdy, aged thirteen years and one day.

A "tribute of respect" to the memory of this truly noble boy is herewith forwarded for publication. I know that long obituary notices are sometimes objectionable, and frequently they are only read by the immediate friends and relatives of the deceased. Nevertheless, I venture on your forbearance to allow me to hold up the bright example of a lovely life to all our Sunday school scholars, for such was truly exhibited in the life of Gilmer McCurdy. He was not only the favorite at home, but was universally admired and loved by the entire community. The very large attendance of old and young of all denominations, filling the Methodist church on the day of his burial, fully shows in what high regard he was held by all who knew him. Farmers, merchants, mechanics, doctors, all were ready to lay down business to pay respect to this mere lad. The closed doors of business houses, the Sabbath-like stillness on the streets, and the long procession, composed of three Sunday schools—Methodist, Presbyterian and Episcopalian—in a body, together with many riding in vehicles and on horseback, plainly said that in the opinion of this community a rare character had passed away, inflicting a public calamity. Few there were who did not weep freely as they carried him away. From more than one person was heard the remark: "He was the best boy I have ever known." His teacher, who has been engaged in teaching for a number of years, says: "He was the best pupil I have ever had." The key to his great popularity is found in his tender regard for the feelings of all—old or young, white or black—and his unflinching truthfulness. This unlocks his character. I have never known a boy so remarkably considerate of the feelings of others, and especially his parents. As was said in the funeral discourse, "he always seemed to be under the parental eye, and surrounded by the restraints of that home where he was almost idolized. Other boys can and often do throw off all restraints and act regardless of parental wishes, but not so with him." Only a few days before he died his teacher, pointing toward him, said: "There is a boy who has never told me an untruth, or in any way deceived me." Gentle, kind and true, no wonder that he was generally loved, and that the church should be filled with weeping, sorrowing friends at his funeral. He had never formally joined the church, but on the Sunday night before taken sick he went to the church with the intention of doing so, if an opportunity offered; but this not having been presented, he said he would see the pastor of the church and join at the next service. But before then, doubtless, he was admitted into the church triumphant.

RETROSPECTION.

I know a green and sunny spot of ground
That formed an island in the early spring;
The brook, with one broad sweep, went circling round,
Along its fringe of alders vines did cling;
'Twas there the blue-bird and the oriole found
A grand old temple when they wished to sing.
I used to find the earliest violets there;
I scarcely knew a place to me so fair.

I wonder if the maple holds aloft
Its keys innumerable, as it did then?
I wonder if the turf is just as soft
To children's feet? If I should know again
The old white thorn where, wont to go so oft,
I gathered garlands? Is it one, or ten,
Or twice ten years since I stood on the bank
Where ferns and willows grew so thick and rank?

I well remember how I dipped my feet,
So bare and brown, beneath the waters cool,
Or sat enthroned upon some mossy seat,
To play the teacher of a rustic school,
And my imaginary pupils bent
With slender twigs, because they missed a rule,
Or idly dropped a book or pencil down—
How well I learned to counterfeit a frown!

Come back, O summer when the days were long!
Take one white garland from the throne, and bring;
Weave in some violets; let the wild bird's song
With all its wonted harmony out-ring;
And let me bury all the grief and wrong
The years have brought me; for I fain would sing
A joyous lay, I weary of the care
And pain and sin that meet me everywhere.

Playing at Preaching.

Many a pulpiteer aged fifty is, indeed, not much less obviously playing at preaching than he was at five, when he conducted divine service in the nursery, attired in pinafore for surplice, or in some borrowed black apron or shawl for Genevan gown. The child is father of the man; and the man, like his father, is sometimes uncommonly childish.

Let us glance at some of these nursery preachers in the first instance.

By the time he was ten years old George Whitefield was bent on a clerical career. "I was always," he says, "fond of being a clergyman, and used frequently to imitate the minister's reading, prayers," etc. Part of this ambition a biographer takes to have been no doubt inspired by the pleasure the boy already felt in the exercise of his fine voice and power of declamation. John Wesley, in his teens, had, perhaps for the same reason, a hankering after the stage; his only qualm of conscience being on the vexed question, which he formally submitted to all comers: Pray, can I be a player, and yet go to the sacrament and be a Christian?

Robert Story, of Rosneath, who had an exceptional gift of mimicry, used, as a child, to imitate every minister he heard in his young days at Yetholm; and in after life recalled his frequent anticipation being himself intended for the ministry) of the rapture he should one day inspire by a tone similar to that of an old screeching minister in the neighborhood. He used to take his Bible into the fields with him, fix on some lonely spot, choose a text, and, by his own account, "preach extempore with great energy and pathos." Above all days, a windy one was his delight, for then he could speak loudest. "And after all the notions which I have since gained," he says, "of sublimity and beauty, I cannot help thinking that there was something very interesting and wildly grand in a little boy retiring into a wood during a storm of wind, opening the Bible, or selecting a text from memory, and, with the ardor of his young fancy, launching out into all the earnestness, pathos and piety of a Christian orator." The sister of one of Dr. Chalmers' school-fellows at Anstruther, supplied his biographer with a souvenir sketch of her breaking into a room whither the two boys had retired together, and finding the future great pulpit orator (then a very little boy) standing upon a chair preaching most vigorously to his single auditor below.

"I believe," said Lord Eldon to Mrs. Foster, "I have preached more sermons than any one who is not a clergyman. My father always had the church service read on the Sunday evenings, and a sermon after it. Harry and I used to take it in turns to read the prayers or to preach; we always had a shirt put on over our clothes to answer for a surplice."

When Samuel Rogers and his brother were called in and asked by the father of the family what profession they wished to follow, Samuel avowed his predilection for that of a preacher—a choice which he explained by his admiration for Dr. Price, and which he seems to have asserted by precocious essayings in the doctor's best manner.

Robert Hall, at ten or eleven, was seriously set to preach to a select auditory assembled in the house of Mr. Beeby Wallis, of Ketterling, his gift of ready expression having already signally asserted itself.

Dr. Channing was a very small boy indeed when he earned the title of the Little Minister. He used to arrange a room with seats and a desk, and to summon the family, with blows upon the warming-pan in lieu of a bell, to a religious meeting, where he "preached with much seriousness and energy." At other times he would assemble his playmates for a similar purpose upon the steps of the front door. Did they really come (more than once) at his call? or, if they came, did they, would they, could they stay? Exceptionally good little boys, if so, not to call them goody; and as markworthy in their way as the Little Minister in his.

More literally a mere player at preaching was young Leigh Hunt, who even in his old days avowed: "Indeed I have never been without a clerical tendency;" and who used to declaim in presence of an admiring and astonished maid-servant, who, by his account, when he, otherwise in martial attire, put on his father's bands, and got upon a chair to preach to an imaginary congregation over the back of it, seemed to think the image realized of "heaven and earth coming together!"

John Wilson's biographer, describing his nursery days, and the admiration his "superior intelligence" won from his sisters, tells us that of in-door amusements the most exciting to their youthful minds and his precocious genius was that of pulpit oratory; and that one sermon he used himself to speak of as being a veritable masterpiece—so highly appreciated, indeed, that he was continually called on to repeat it. Standing upon a chair arranged to look as like a pulpit as possible, he would address his juvenile congregation, along with the more mature audience of nurses and other servants assembled to listen to his warning voice. "The text chosen was one from his own fertile brain, drawn from that field of experience in which he was already becoming an adept (angling,) and handled not without shrewd application to moral duties." In this allegory of life he is said to have displayed both pathos and humor, drawing a contrast between good and evil parents, that excited sympathy and laughter, while the sermon was delivered with a "vehemence of natural eloquence that in a boy of five years old may well have entitled him to be looked upon as a genius."

Little Jane Taylor deserves a passing mention among these medley notes in the attitude described by her sister Ann, in her third or fourth year, when "at the baker's shop she used to be placed on the kneading-board, in order to preach, etc., to the great entertainment of his many visitors."

A certain minister who still holds forth to large and admiring audiences showed preaching tendencies at a very tender age. At five he would mount a chair for a pulpit, summon his audience, which usually consisted of a maid of color, Dinah by name, and preach with much earnestness and enthusiasm; one time he began the service thus, "Let us pray: O Lord, have mercy on us poor devils," when he heard a titter from Dinah; he rose from his knees and with much dignity said: "If we can't have better order than this we'll consider our meeting ended." Once when he had been missed for some time from the nursery his mother asked on his reappearance: "Where have you been, my son?" "Been preaching to the lost sheep of Israel," answered our young divine in pinafore.

The sister and biographer of the late Bishop Bowen, of Sierra Leone, is careful to describe some sermons which he preached to his brother and sisters, when playing at church, with his pinafore hind part before for a surplice.

Father Taylor, the sailor-preacher of Boston—our specimens are of all sorts and sizes—used as a small boy to preach funeral sermons in quite a funereal spirit over dead chickens and kittens; he would gather the negro boys and girls about him, his biographers relate, and discourse in most pathetic and forcible language on the life and death of the departed.

Readers of "London Labor and the London Poor" may remember how the "Rev. Mr. Shorthand," as we learn from the biography of that glibly didactic street-seller of the penny sheet, hand-cards, from the earliest dawn of reason manifested a strong predilection for "the church," before he was seven years old had preached to an infant audience, read prayers over a dead animal, and performed certain mimic ceremonies ecclesiastical among his school-fellows; all in perfectly good faith, however imperfect the practice. — Christian Weekly.

Sewing on Buttons.

It is bad enough to see a bachelor sew on a button, but he is the embodiment of grace alongside a married man. Necessity has compelled experience in the case of the former, but the latter has always depended upon some one else for this service, and, fortunately for the sake of society, it is rarely he is obliged to resort to the needle himself. Sometimes the patient wife scalds her right hand, or runs a sliver under the nail of the index finger of that hand, and it is then that the man clutches the needle around the neck, and, forgetting to tie a knot in the thread, commences to put on a button. It is always in the morning, and from five to twenty minutes after he is expected to be down street. He lays the button exactly on the site of its predecessor, and pushes the needle through one eye, and draws the thread after, leaving about three inches of it sticking up for leeway. He says to himself: "Well, if women don't have the easiest time I ever see." Then he comes back the other way, and gets the needle through the cloth well enough, and lays himself out to find the eye, but, in spite of a good deal of jabbing, the needle point persists in buckling against the solid parts of that button, and finally, when he loses patience, his finger catches the thread, and that three inches he had left to hold the button slips through the eye in a twinkling, and the button rolls leisurely across the floor. He picks it up without a single remark, out of respect for his children, and makes another attempt to fasten it. This time, when coming back with the needle, he keeps both the thread and button from slipping by covering them with his thumb, and it is out of regard for that part of him that he feels around for the eye in a very careful and judicious manner, but eventually losing his philosophy, as the search becomes more and more hopeless, he falls to jabbing about in a loose and savage manner, and just then the needle finds the opening, and comes up through the button and part way through his thumb with a celerity that no human ingenuity can guard against. Then he lays down the things, with a few familiar quotations, and presses the injured hand between his knees, and then holds it under his arms, and finally jams it into his mouth, and all the while he prances about the floor, and calls upon heaven and earth to witness that there has never been anything like it since the world was created, and howls and whistles and moans and sobs. After awhile he calms down, and puts on his pants, and fastens them together with a stick, and goes to his business a changed man.—Danbury News.

TABLE SALT is a composition of two poisons, either of which alone is fatal.

Mental Projection.

A number of mysterious manifestations are traceable to the simple fact of recurrence of impressions altogether independently of the will. There are others which are purely volitional, and these constitute a distinct class of hallucinatory phenomena. They are illusions produced by what I should call the faculty of projection of objects that have been received from without by the brain and fixed in it. We exercise this faculty, naturally, when at will we repicture to ourselves, or project what we have seen, heard, felt or otherwise received by the senses. We recall a landscape we have surveyed, a tune we have heard, and the like; and if the impression be correctly fixed in us, and we will it to return, it comes back correctly. In the act we project from us that which we recall, and look at it, or listen to it, as if it were again external to us. This faculty, exalted to an unnatural degree, is a fruitful source of illusion. Wigan supplies a striking illustration of the kind in the case of an eminent portrait painter who followed Sir Joshua Reynolds. The painter in question once produced three hundred portraits from his own hand in one year. When asked on what this peculiar power of rapid work depended, he answered that when a sitter came to him he looked at him attentively for half an hour, sketching from time to time on the canvas; then he put away the canvas and took another sitter. When he wished to resume the first portrait, he said: "I took the man and put him in the chair, where I saw him as distinctly as if he had been before me in his own proper person. When I looked at the chair I saw the man." After awhile the painter began to fail to discover the difference between the real and the imaginary sitters, so that he became actually insane and remained in an asylum for thirty years. Then his mind was restored to him, and he resumed the use of the pencil; but the old evil threatened to return, and he once more forsook his art, soon afterward to die.

Talma, the actor, had a faculty of mental projection equally singular with that possessed by the artist whose history Wigan has related. Talma could project before himself the form of a human skeleton with such perfection of detail that to him the form was a reality, and when he stood before the footlights he had in his presence, in the theater, an audience of skeletons.—Popular Science Review.

QUEEN OF THE LAUNDRESSES.—A letter from Paris states that one of the signs of the decay of old customs is the lack of interest shown this year in the election of the Parisian Reine des Blanchisseuses. The traditional procession was shorn of all its former glories, and the whole affair was of a very prosaic character. The Queen of the Laundresses is to a great extent the guardian of the young laundresses of Paris, and there is this peculiarity in the election, that the candidate selected is chosen for her virtues as well as her beauty. The present queen is reported to have added to the usual motto of the republic the words "Proprete et Charite," to follow after "Liberte, Fraternite, Egalite." Some of the former queens have terminated their career in a strange manner. Marie Compain, who was elected in 1843, poisoned herself, after a short life of great misery, at the age of twenty, while Blanche Chaulong, a very handsome girl, elected in 1845, who came from Menilmontant, disappeared on the very evening of the regal procession, accompanied by the representative of the god Mercury, who had attended her the whole day, on the triumphal chariot, and she was never heard of again. In 1846 and 1847 the Reines des Blanchisseuses were two sisters from the Passage St. Pierre, who died early, one of them having been a dancer at the Theatre des Delassements Comiques. In 1848 no queen was elected, even the very name of royalty being obnoxious; but there was a so-called "Goddess of Liberty," a woman of great beauty, who afterward presided at the comptoir of a well-known cafe in the Rue de Rivoli. The ancient ceremonies of the procession have been neglected this year, and, although a queen was elected, no ball or banquet took place, as the police refused to allow the traditional fetes.

ON THE subject of the "Equality of the Sexes," Wuttke says: "As the final destination of all moral beings is the same, hence a difference of the moral worth of the sexes is not conceivable.—Galatians iii, 28; First Peter iii, 7. The inferior position of the female sex in all non-Christian nations is a sign of moral uncultureness, which even the Greeks did not entirely put off. The account of the creation of woman indicates her true dignity; taken from man's heart, she belongs to man's heart, and is not a slave at his feet; she is a part of him—is not merely flesh of his flesh, but also soul of his soul. The antithesis of sex, which is not of a merely bodily character, conditions indeed also very different moral duties; but these duties are absolutely equal in moral worth. The precedency of the woman in the interior of the family is in no respect less than that of the man in the civic sphere; and though, in virtue of this difference, the woman is in many respects—especially in those of the external, public life: that is, of the outward directed activity—properly subject to the man as the natural leader in this sphere (Ephesians v, 22, 23,) yet, as an offset to this, the man is in his turn properly dependent on the woman in the sphere of female activity; it is not to the credit of the man to dominate in the kitchen and nursery. Each rules, by the constitution of nature, in his own sphere; and it is perfectly in order for the woman, in her sphere, to exercise a determining influence on the man. The historical tyrant relation of the man over the woman is not the original and true one, and is inconsistent with true confiding love and with the dignity of womanhood, and is expressly explained in the Scriptures as a punishment for sin.—Genesis iii, 16.

Scientific.

THE disappearance of the fallen leaves is explained by Dr. Eugene Robert by the hypothesis that earthworms drag them into their subterranean habitations by means of the curved appendages by which their anterior rings are armed.

IN THE Photographic News Lieutenant Abney directs attention to the remarkable fact that in the carbon printing process, the influence of the solar rays being once established, the action is continued in the dark. After a few moments' exposure the transfer is inked, and in a few hours a perfect result is yielded. Similar phenomena were recorded in 1854 in Hunt's Researches on Light. Here is a wide field of inquiry as yet almost untouched.

M. CORUN has recently repeated on a large scale the experiment of Fizeau (first devised in 1849) for determining the velocity of light. He gets as a result 298,500 kilometers, or 185,470 miles per second, with a probable error, as he claims, of less than 1,300. This result agrees very closely with that which Foucault in 1851 obtained by an experiment quite different, viz., 298,200 kilometers, or 185,280 miles. It corresponds to a solar parallax of 8.86 sec., or a distance of 92,260,000 miles. The experiment as first performed by Fizeau indicated a considerably greater velocity of light; but it was not entirely satisfactory in its details.

CUNDURANGO.—After a protracted trial of cundurango in the cancer wards of the Middlesex Hospital, in London, the medical authorities of that institution have arrived at the conclusion that the drug has no effect on cancer. The British Medical Journal says that at a recent meeting of the Clinical Society of London, papers were read by the two gentlemen who had been conducting this investigation, in which it was distinctly stated that not one single indication of improvement had been observed in any of the cases treated by the alleged remedy. In fact the disease either ran its usual course, or the patient showed symptoms of derangement of system which might fairly be attributed to the drug. At the same meeting the fact was mentioned that a large number of persons in England, misled by the reports that had come from America, were paying exorbitant prices for the nostrum, and the feeling was strongly expressed that it was desirable that the public should be made aware of its utter worthlessness.

LIGHT AND HEAT.—The two sciences—those that treat of heat and light—which have stood distinct for ages, are now identified. In one sense they must always be distinct: their manifestation must always reach the human consciousness through different channels; but in themselves they are one. Our nerves are like the strings of a musical instrument, capable of responding by sympathy to vibrations of certain rates, but mute in the presence of all others. The ether is in a state of perpetual tremor, from the thousands of wave systems which are forever crossing and recrossing it. The optic nerve is so constituted that it responds to some of these vibrations, and the nerves of feeling to others. We might compare the two senses of sight and feeling to the treble and bass of this instrument. The sun sends out a multitude of vibrations of different periods. Our nerves of vision respond to the more rapid of these, and our nerves of feeling to the more sluggish. The former are translated in the seat of consciousness into the sensation of light, the latter into the sensation of heat.—Home and School.

THE ENGLISH COAL FAMINE.—The scarcity and high price of coal in the English market appears to be mainly a reaction from over-production and other industrial causes; but there is no doubt that the difficulty will be henceforward chronic. The result of the discussion has been to call public attention particularly to two questions: first, the probable duration of the coal supply in England, and secondly, the possibility of greater economy in the use of fuel for steam-generating and manufacturing purposes. Under both heads the recent address of Sir William Thompson offers many suggestive facts and hints. He makes an interesting statement of the conclusions reached by the late royal commission on the British coal-fields, of which he was a member. That body formed the opinion that under the best-known stems, four thousand feet is the depth to which coal can be worked without absolute stoppage by reason of the terrestrial heat. Adopting this depth as the probable practicable limit, they concluded that the stock of available coal in England represents the consumption of one thousand two hundred and seventy-three years at the present rate, assuming that rate to remain stationary. If, on the other hand, the present increase is taken as a basis, then the coal will be exhausted in one hundred and ten years. Sir William Thompson thinks the truth lies between these extremes, but points out the all-important fact that these calculations of supply do not include the element of cost in working, and that long before the British coal-seams are exhausted England will find it cheaper to import her coal. This will necessarily affect her commercial and manufacturing supremacy. In the same address there is an interesting reference to Mr. Warsop's method of increasing the efficiency of the steam engine by pumping heated air into the boiler. This is done by forcing air through a pipe, coiled in the flue, so as to absorb a portion of the waste heat. This pipe enters the boiler, and lies along the bottom. Being perforated with holes, it allows the hot air to bubble up at many points through the water. "The result appears to be," says Sir William, "that, with a given expenditure of fuel, the available power of the engine is considerably increased by the action of the air-pump, notwithstanding that the power for working it is derived from the engine itself." The theory of this gain, if there is any real gain, is not yet understood.

Religious Intelligence.

OVER $13,000 were disbursed by the stewards to the claimants of the New York Conference at its late session in Hudson.

IT IS SAID the Archbishop of Canterbury has notified the Nonconformists of England that they may set their hearts at rest on one matter, and that is, there will be no disestablishment of the English Church.

THE London papers state that the clergy and Jesuits of Belgium are making great efforts to organize a pilgrimage into the heart of France, to pray for the restoration of the temporal power of the Pope. Each province of the realm is invited to dedicate a banner to Our Lady of the Sacred Heart.

A BOSTON correspondent of one of the daily papers, speaking of the recent anniversaries in that city, writes that a new spiritual life seems to have sprung up among the Universalists of that vicinity, who have been holding prayer and conference meetings, remarkable for depth of feeling and earnest practical application of gospel truths.

THE corner-stone of the Fifth Avenue Presbyterian church, New York city, of which Rev. John Hall, D. D., is pastor, was laid on Monday, June 9. The edifice is to be 200 feet long by 100 in width, and about 120 feet high in the clear to the peak of the ridged roof, with a steeple 286 feet high from the ground. The cost is to be $900,000.

THE Local Preachers' Association, of Philadelphia, propose raising $500 toward the monument to be erected over the remains of Philip Embury. They have already secured $300, and are ready to receive any additional contribution from ministers, traveling or local, or any of the members and friends of the church who may desire to be represented in this good work.

MISS CARPENTER, an English lady, went to India a few years since and endeavored to promote female education on a purely secular basis.—Though receiving liberal government grants from Lord Lawrence for these normal schools, her efforts have utterly failed. The government now recognizes the fact that the instruction of women must be based on religion.

THE late General Assembly (North) met all the expenses of its delegates. The funds were obtained on the following plan: Every presbytery pays into the Assembly's treasury a sum equal to six cents for every one of its communicants, and out of the common fund every claim is met. This year every dollar required from the presbyteries was paid into the treasury, and the aggregate was $27,693.50.

THE gospel is gaining victories throughout the whole extent of Oceanica. From the Pearl Islands in the east to the Friendship Islands in the west, every group of islands, great and small, has been made accessible to the divine truth. The Wesleyans are laboring successfully among the Fejees; the Presbyterians are at work on New Hebrides; the Episcopalians on Solomon's Archipelago.

A NEW Catholic university, giving full classical, theological, scientific and commercial courses, is to be established immediately near St. Joseph, Missouri. One hundred and fifty acres of land have been given for the site, and a delegation of brothers from the famous Notre Dame University, in Indiana, are in St. Joseph making preliminary arrangements. The institution will be opened in September.

THE Rev. Dr. Murry Mitchell, a Scotch missionary in Calcutta, says that "there is a decline in the manufacture of images for the Durga-Poojah, a great Hindoo festival, which is daily falling in the estimation of the natives." He also says there is "a general and deep persuasion in all Northern India that the glory of the divine Ganga, and the efficacy of its waters to purge from sin, are to pass away within a generation."

ON THE subject of free churches, the United Presbyterian Assembly, just adjourned in Philadelphia, recommended its congregations to abolish the system of renting pews "as inconsistent with freedom of worship, as a hinderance to benevolence, and as making merchandise of the house of God." It also urged churches to give their pastors a liberal support, naming $1,000 as the minimum for country pastors, and $2,000 for pastors in towns and cities.

THE census gives some interesting items about the Jews. In 1850 they counted only 18,371 members in the country, and in 1870 73,265. In 1850 they had but 36 synagogues, and in 1870 they had 152. Such progress as this shows the attraction this country has offered this people. In Philadelphia they have eight synagogues, and in New York 26. Metropolitan centers appear to be their favorite fields, and they will be found strong, relatively, in all the leading cities of the nation.

HEREAFTER, according to new rules adopted by the Presbyterian Assembly for its Education Society, no aid is to be given to candidates seeking to enter the ministry, unless they come recommended by the pastor and session of their church, and bring evidences of their worthiness, health, correct habits and probable usefulness. During their seminary course also the professors are required to give a yearly certificate of their present and prospective value, or they will be dropped from the list of beneficiaries.

CENTRAL AFRICA.—Access to the interior of Africa from the west coast is now to be realized. Rev. Albert Bushnell, of the Presbyterian mission at the Gaboon, says that a merchant of that place is to settle in the interior for trade, and has invited the missionaries to establish a station at his post. A son of one of the inland chiefs represents that his people are very anxious that the missionaries should come among them. The place of the proposed new mission is nearly opposite Lake Tanganyika, on the River Ogobai.

THE late Presbyterian General Assembly adopted a resolution in favor of holding a general council or conference, such council to consist of representatives of all Presbyterian churches holding to the Westminster Catechism. A committee of correspondence was appointed to secure, if possible, approving action from other Presbyterian bodies. Dr. McCosh, at whose suggestion the resolution was presented, is a member of the committee.

THE work of the London Missionary Society among the aborigines of Singrowlee, where Mr. Jones fell a martyr to duty, is now beginning to bear fruit. They call themselves Majhuars, and are of a kindred race with the better-known Santhals, Cales and Gonds. The central station of Dordhee is described as one of the prettiest villages in India. "The outward aspect of the neighborhood is in happy union with the blessed effect the gospel is producing in the hearts and lives of the inhabitants."

THE Rev. J. Rockwell Smith writes to the Southern Presbyterian Missionary from Pernambuco, Brazil: "One of our papers has recently had a series of articles advocating the separation of Church and State. The feeling against the Jesuits is intense. The papers are very free-spoken. Sometimes, not unfrequently, they contain articles with very liberal sentiments. * * * There is nothing more apparent, even to a casual observer, than that the Brazilians are waking up from a long sleep. There is not a little of the spirit of inquiry and independence of thought evinced by them."

AFTER sixteen years of missionary service in the Gilbert Islands (which lie 2,000 miles southwest from the Sandwich Islands,) Rev. Mr. Bingham and wife, of the American Board, have completed the translation of the whole of the New Testament into the language of those islands. Mr. Bingham lately gave an account of his labors at Honolulu, and had the King among his hearers. What his work has been may be judged from the fact that the Gilbert islanders, when Mr. Bingham went among them, were living in the very lowest state of heathenism, without a written language, reported very cruel and savage, and having no desire to trade except for tobacco.

IT IS reported by the Baptist Missionary Magazine (American) that in Kiew, on the Dnieper, Russia, eleven Baptist converts have been in prison for almost a year on account of their faith. The Baptists in Russia have requested that three of their members be chosen to act as missionaries in their own country, and have promised to pay to each of them $75 in gold a year for their support. A brother in Russia writes that he has promised an equal sum, and that an English gentleman has undertaken the support of a Russian missionary at his own expense. It is probable that some of the eleven prisoners will be appointed, on their release, to this missionary service.

WHAT Pere Hyacinthe has accomplished thus far in Geneva is the organization of a society of over 1,200 Liberal Catholics, whose avowed object is "to combat the Ultramontane doctrines," and while acknowledging, in a certain sense, the supremacy of the Pope, they hold themselves at liberty to appoint their own bishop. The pere has not yet accepted the formal charge of this parish, as he considers his mission a higher one, namely, the reformation of the papal church at large. His popularity is great, and the progress of his movement is watched with deep though quiet interest, as it must prove either a humiliating failure or the starting of a sure and successful reaction in the Church of Rome, at least as it exists in Switzerland.

ACCORDING to the twelfth annual report of the foreign missionary operations of the Southern Presbyterian Church, as given in the Missionary, the whole missionary force of that church now in the field consists of 18 ordained missionaries (of whom four are natives of the country where they live,) three male assistant missionaries, 14 female assistants, and 19 native assistants; making 45 laborers in all. The receipts for the year amount to $47,875, of which $29,196 are given by the churches, which is $4,000 or $5,000 less than their last year's contribution. Nearly $8,000 are contributed by Sunday schools; over $6,000 are a special contribution for the Caupinas Institute in Southern Brazil. The funds raised for the purchase of a press for the Chinese mission at Han Chau have been turned over to the current fund for the support of that mission, since the mission can get all its necessary printing done at Shanghai at a less expense than with a press of its own. The missions reported are: three missions among the Indian tribes of the Southwestern Indian Territory (the Cherokee,) where the number of communicants is 25; the Creek, where there is a small church and day school; and the Choctaw and Chickasaw mission, of which the Spencer and the Armstrong Academies and Boggy Depot form the centers (57 having been received into the church on profession of faith at Boggy Depot, the capital of the Choctaw Nation, during the year,) besides seven of the pupils of Spencer Academy; the Italian mission, represented by a lady teacher at Milan, who will labor hereafter in connection with the Waldensian mission; two missions in the United States of Colombia, South America; two in Brazil—one in Campinas, in Southern Brazil, where the native membership of the church numbers 26 persons, and one established during the year at Pernambuco, Northern Brazil, through the liberality of the churches of Mobile and New Orleans; and, finally, two missions in China—at Hau Chau and at Su Chau, the latter station having been opened during the year. Besides these, a mission is about to be established in Mexico, and the committee propose undertaking another in Japan. They therefore make an earnest appeal to the 835 Southern Presbyterian churches that have contributed nothing this year to the cause of foreign missions to join their efforts to those of the 634 churches upon whom the whole work has devolved.

Doctrinal Indifference.

The modern tendency to reduce the essential doctrines of religion to a few comprehensive articles is calculated to advance the cause of Christian unity, and to simplify and commend the truth to those who are seeking it. But this tendency is carried too far when all the cross-fences and boundary lines are pulled down and obliterated, and the position is assumed that it matters not what men believe. Nothing is more dangerous to the general religious and moral well-being of society than these easily announced and popular platitudes about a broad and liberal Christianity. The very foundations of the gospel are being undermined by concessions to the demand for a non-doctrinal bond of organization and fellowship. An upright life and a spiritual experience are mainly important, but these are not likely to be found apart from well-defined doctrinal belief.

That some few upright and devout people were found among the pagans did not disprove the world's need of the gospel, nor does it argue the inutility of sound doctrine that good people are sometimes met with who are under the dominion of religious error. The fact that there are good men among the Jews and the Mohammedans does not establish the conclusion that it is a safe and right thing to reject Christ and to brand the gospel as an imposition. Whether we can account for these exceptional instances of virtue or not, they are exceptional, and we must look to the wider effects of these systems, as compared with the results of Christianity. Epicurus was himself a man of great temperance and purity, and many of his disciples may have been the same, but it is evident that the general tendency of his philosophy was to sensuality and vice. Its practical character is summed up in the words of Paul: "Let us eat and drink, for to-morrow we die." The rich man, described in the parable, was such a character as Sadduceeism made him; and the typical Pharisee of our Lord's time was the legitimate and ordinary development of self-righteousness, or of salvation by legal and ceremonial observances.

Our modern liberal school would find it difficult to explain the emphasis which Paul puts upon the doctrine of justification by faith. What matters it whether men build upon this or that, so they keep the commandments, and, in a general way, profess to recognize Christ as the Son of God? That sharp encounter with the Galatians was on a mere doctrinal quibble, and yet the inspired apostle tells them: "Christ is become of no effect unto you, whosoever of you are justified by the law; ye are fallen from grace." Most harsh and, according to the liberal school, most uncharitable to insist upon such precise definitions, and to charge those who rejected them as graceless reprobates! It is not enough to profess to believe in Christ, but Paul is particular as to what we believe concerning him, and insists upon the propitiatory and sacrificial character of his death: "Whom God hath set forth to be a propitiation through faith in his blood, to declare his righteousness for the remission of sins that are past, through the forbearance of God; to declare, I say, at this time his righteousness, that he might be just, and the justifier of him which believeth in Jesus." The popular theology, yielding to the Socinian interpretation so much in vogue with Unitarians, wipes out all this, tells us that there is nothing to propitiate, and that there is no righteousness which must be declared by a substitutional sacrifice.

The Unitarianism of Swedenborg and his followers admits of no such view of the atonement, and hence, in common with all Unitarian views, strikes at the very root of Christianity. A mystical exposition which resolves the trinity into divine love, divine wisdom and divine operation, strips the doctrine of all significance, and takes out the very core of the gospel and throws it away. If there is no three-fold distinction of persons in the godhead, the Father, Son and Holy Ghost are misleading terms, and ought to have no place in the Scriptures. But these, it is contended, are points about which we may differ without impairing fellowship, and which should lead to no practical protest. The resurrection of the body in Paul's day had received a mystical interpretation, but the apostle does not wink at it as of no importance. False doctrine then, as now, was seducing and corrupting. He rebukes a prevalent doctrinal error concerning the resurrection in these terms: "Be not deceived: evil communications corrupt good manners. Awake to righteousness and sin not; for some have not the knowledge of God; I speak this to your shame."

The pastoral epistles abound in such exhortations and admonitions as this: "Take heed unto thyself and unto the doctrine." Among other things which a Bishop must do is this: "Holding fast the faithful word as he hath been taught, that he may be able by sound doctrine both to exhort and to convince the gainsayers." We have also the following significant instructions and warnings, which seem to have been framed especially for these days of doctrinal laxness and latitudinarian notions: "Study to show thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth. But shun profane and vain babblings; for they will increase unto more ungodliness. And their word will eat as doth a canker; of whom is Hymeneus and Philetus; who concerning the truth have erred, saying that the resurrection is past already; and overthrow the faith of some." Paul is most careful to set forth the importance of holding fast "the form of sound words," and the necessity of preaching "the word," well knowing the danger of substituting mystical speculations and a licentious liberalism for the truth.

Here is another passage which has a most startling fulfillment in the present day: "For the time will come when they will not endure sound doctrine; but after their own lusts shall they heap to themselves teachers having itching ears; and they shall turn away their ears from the truth, and shall be turned unto fables." Sound doctrine is the bulwark of public morals, and the very life of a genuine, spiritual experience. The growth of modern skepticism and the alarming prevalence of crime are closely related to the doctrinal indifference which prevails in much of the religious teaching and profession of the times. And yet Christian charity is invoked in defense of the tolerance of errors which are at war with the vital truths of the gospel, and are destructive to experimental and practical godliness. Alas for us! that satan should clothe himself as an angel of light, and that so many should be corrupted and seduced by his wiles!

The Restless Sea.

Never perfectly calm, and always, in some part of its vast surface, is the ocean swept by storms and tossed into wild commotion by the irresistible cyclone. The wild waves are on the top, but deep down, where comparative calms prevail, there are currents and eddys, and mighty streams whose tread shakes the vast globe, and plows unfathomable furrows in the dark depths where no sunlight penetrates. "The wicked are like the troubled sea when it cannot rest, whose waters cast up mire and dirt." As the ocean never rests, so is it with the wicked. Strong, fearful, true, is the declaration, and affirmed by the mouth of Jehovah: "There is no peace, saith my God, to the wicked."

With the righteous it is not so, for the testimony concerning the good is most cheering: "Peace, peace to him that is afar off, and to him that is near, saith the Lord; and I will heal him." And yet the unrest of the sea is illustrative of the believer's experience and privilege. "O that thou hadst hearkened to my commandments! then had thy peace been as a river, and thy righteousness as the waves of the sea." The waves thus speak of the joyous, abundant, triumphant grace of God in the faithful soul. Also the afflictions and sorrows of the good are fitly illustrated by the billows. David often likens his sorrows to the proud waves: "Deep calleth unto deep at the noise of thy waterspouts; all thy waves and thy billows are gone over me." The temptations and buffetings of Christians, and the perils through which they pass, are forcibly pictured in these allusions to tempests and disturbances which are ever occurring in the sailor's history.

But this uneasy, world-wide expanse of waters is also celebrated as the manifestation of the mercy and power of God. He made the sea and governs it; for is it not written of the imperious and encroaching tide: "Hitherto shalt thou come, but no further; and here shall thy proud waves be stayed?" The Spirit of the Lord always moves upon the face of waters, his hand bridles and curbs its rage, and his voice is heard in its roar. The power, the providence, the grandeur and glory of the Creator are all wonderfully exhibited in this part of "the things which are made." And God's deliverances are associated with the sea. The passage of the Red sea was worthy of the muse and timbrel of Miriam, and of the inspired song of Moses and David. God's way is represented to be in the sea, and the salvation of the righteous is a rescue from the flood of great waters.

But, again, the sea is a symbol of people; and how like the restless sea is the world with its ever-turbulent inhabitants! Look at the nations! Glance around the earth and put your finger upon one altogether quiet spot! Russia, Turkey, Italy, France, Spain, China, South America and the rest, and where is there a state of repose? Where there is no actual war, as in England and the United States, society is in a perpetual ferment. Religious, political and social questions shake the very foundations, and threaten to break forth with volcanic violence some day. Nothing continueth in one stay. All is agitation, commotion, unrest and change. Whither is it all tending, and to what point or end is the world driving? What of the Spain and France of the future, and of the Carlists, republicans, monarchists, Catholics and Protestants? And here at home, with all this talk about Cæsarism, centralization, money-power and our terrible local oppressions and abuses, perplexed, we may pause and try to prophesy. And, besides, there are the agitations and the controversies of science, the rapid expansion of discoveries in mechanics, and the very world rocks under the birth-throes of new and almost miraculous inventions, and enlargements in the domain of knowledge. There is, likewise, the struggle for a living in society, growing more and more desperate as the world becomes older, so that "the survival of the fittest" is about all that social economy promises to the toiling multitudes.

But while all is like the restless sea—the world, the drift of society, the condition of the nations, the movement of mind, the temper and constitution of humanity—there is peace and rest in the believing heart, and rest forever when life's fever is over. Christ is on this great deep, seemingly asleep in the hinder part of the ship, but at his rebuke the winds and waves shall be still. And beyond the regions of storm and agitation there is a realm of tranquility most profound. The time will be when the sea shall give up its dead, and make a final surrender of all who have gone down into its hungry and sullen depths; and then we have the vision of a sea of glass, like unto crystal, before the throne; and later in the apocalyptic unfolding we have a sea of glass mingled with fire; and those that had gotten the victory "stand on the sea of glass, having the harps of God." But for our comfort, and as if forever to save from any fear, it is when the new heaven and the new earth have come, and the old are passed away, that we have this very last mention of the type and symbol of disquiet: "And there was no more sea." Here on the frontiers of heaven the restless floods are bound, and the voice of Omnipotence thunders: "Here shall thy proud waves be stayed."

Death of Rev. Joseph D. Adams.

Rev. Joseph D. Adams, pastor of the Morgan Street Methodist Episcopal Church South of New Orleans, died at Biloxi on the morning of July 26. Bro. Adams had been in failing health for several months, and unable to perform his pastoral and pulpit work for nearly two months past, although able to be about, and occasionally to participate in public worship. About ten days before his death he went to Biloxi, accompanied by his family, to try the effects of a change and the gulf air. It seems that he grew rapidly worse after leaving the city, and his death was unexpected even to those who were acquainted with his failing and feeble condition. The cause of his death was probably disease of the heart.

But a week previous to his death we received from him his quarterly report, prepared for the Quarterly Conference of his charge. The same envelop contained also a communication to the stewards, in which, among other things, he mentioned that, feeling that he might die at any moment, he had carefully examined himself and believed that his acceptance with God was entirely clear; and that for himself he was perfectly resigned to live or die, but that he was anxious about his wife and children. Bro. Adams was admitted on trial in the Georgia Conference, December, 1846, and appointed to Dalonega, Marietta district. He was ordained deacon in January, 1849, and elder, January, 1851. He located at the Conference held at Lagrange, Georgia, December, 1855. He became a member of the Louisiana Conference by readmission at the session held at Mansfield, Louisiana, February, 1858, and was appointed to Waterproof, Tensas parish. From the presiding eldership of the Opelousas district he was, in January, 1872, appointed to the Moreau Street church of New Orleans, and in the second year of this pastorate he has been called to his reward on high.

Of the time and place of his birth and of his early history we have no information at hand. It will be seen, however, that his ministry extended through a period of twenty-seven years, fifteen of which were spent in the Louisiana Conference. From our personal knowledge and estimate we can say that he was one of the purest and best of men—a man of true refinement and spirituality of soul, an Israelite in whom there was no guile, a man who habitually walked with God, and lived and enjoyed the religion which he preached. He was an excellent preacher; his sermons were richly instructive, abounding in solid thought and apt illustrations, and always attended with much unction. In exhortation and prayer he had few equals. In the pastoral work he was diligent, and most careful and solicitous in looking after the afflicted. For more than average qualifications, general effectiveness and availability in the itinerant work, he belonged to that type of Methodist preachers of which no Conference ever has enough. He deservedly held a high place in the love and esteem of his brethren, and his death creates a void in their ranks which may not soon be filled, and entails a loss upon the Conference that it will be difficult to repair. We have been informed that his last hours were eminently peaceful. He was buried at Biloxi, Bishop Keener officiating.

My Righteous Servant.

In a former paper we had occasion to speak of the prominent characteristics of the service of Jesus as the Father's servant, confining the view to that point alone. There is an interesting thought in connection with this character of a servant that may be briefly referred to before coming to the more specific object of the present article—that is, to notice the particular purpose and blessed fruits of his servant's life.

Jesus is presented to us not only as God's servant, but as God's righteous servant. "By his knowledge shall my righteous servant justify many." —Isaiah. Other kindred texts might be produced. This is not the idea of transmitted or acquired righteousness, but of inherent, original righteousness. "This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased." He became God's servant when he assumed human nature and appeared in human flesh. And though thus human, intensely, fully human, he was righteous, perfectly righteous, in all his thoughts, words and ways. He was never justly chargeable with sin. This is the universal testimony borne by friend and foe. The hardened, gross infidel and scholarly scientist involuntarily do homage to the majesty of his spotless purity. If blot or blur could have been found it would have been hunted out. If in the smallest possible degree moral taint had existed, some keen-scented human-flesh fly would surely have made the discovery. The bigoted Pharisee, the unspiritual Sadducee, the keen-eyed scribe—the enemies of Jesus from his own to the present day—have brought all their powers of watchfulness, analysis, spleen and hatred to bear upon him. They have returned from the contest, forced to bear the testimony: "Never man spake so truthfully, never man acted so purely, never man lived so holily as this man." The world to-day bows in homage to the majesty of his truth, as well as to the glorious beauty of his personal purity. Paul says: "For he (the Father) hath made him (Jesus) to be sin for us who knew no sin, that he might be made the righteousness of God in him." John says: "And every man who hath this hope in him purifieth himself, even as he (Christ) is pure." Judas, the betrayer, said in the presence of his foes that he betrayed the innocent blood, and sealed his confession and sin with his own life. Pilate washed his hands in the presence of the multitude in testimony of his acquittal of "the blood of this just person." The centurion, whose soldiers were the agents in his crucifixion, when he saw what was done, "glorified God, saying, Certainly this was a just (pure) man."

Well might the Father say: "My righteous servant." Easily may we look through his transparent life, and see his heart as pure and white as the falling snow-flake! Well may the Christian, the earnest, faithful copyer of his example, draw inspiration from his spotless life, and simple, child-like devotion to his Father's will!

As God's servant he came to us. His was a voluntary, complete, cheerful, faithful, constant and unwearied service. Not only as God's servant, but as God's righteous servant, is he revealed unto us; and as such he accomplished two gracious and glorious results. As a "righteous" servant he became an acceptable Mediator between God and man. "For such an high priest became us who is holy, harmless, undefiled and separate from sinners." This was the burden of his work. An acceptable sacrifice for sin, he wrought out the redemption of the soul. He "finished" the grand work, and now mediates between the Father and fallen, sinful and sinning man. "Thou shalt call his name Jesus, for he shall save his people from their sins." "Behold the Lamb of God, that taketh away the sin of the world."

But, incidentally as it were, as a faithful, obedient son, servant and elder brother, he accomplished another blessed result—that is, gave to the world a perfect example. To the spiritual, close follower of God this bright and beautiful life is a perennial inspiration to faith, zeal and labor. As he walked, so ought we to walk. "Be ye therefore followers of God as dear children, and walk in love," etc. As our elder brother he lessens the distance between us (the younger children) and the Father—brings us nearer the family circle. He has gone before, and we follow after. In his life of temptation, prayer, obedience, submission, meekness, forbearance, forgiveness, heavenly benevolence, and intense sympathy with humanity, we have an open picture looking down upon us, inspiring hope, invigorating the heart, and urging us on, by its sweet colorings and eloquent appeals, to the fullness of effort, of sacrifice and endurance. He renders all the relative duties of life of easier accomplishment—throws light upon and a halo around all the obligations we are under to God, to parents, to ourselves and to our fellow-men.

Apart, however, from its immediate effect on the Christian's experience, there is a wonderful power in this pure example exercised upon the world at large. It is silent but potential; not always, seldom ever, acknowledged, but exercises an influence almost impossible to estimate. "He, being dead, yet speaketh," is eminently true of the blessed Jesus. His spotless life, his pure devotion, his intense sufferings, his final sacrifice upon the tree, is a gracious, beneficent hand, ever stretched out to struggling, torn and incarnated humanity, full of living benedictions. The influence of his example, the power of his unblemished name is the one rich boon given to a needy, ruined world. Next to the sacrifice of himself for sin, Heaven could not have more fully blessed the earth than with the breathing picture of his holy, unreproachable earthly existence. The pure life of parents, of a Wesley, of a Washington, of a Fletcher, of thousands and thousands that might be named, is a precious legacy to the world. That human life—the very purest and best—is but a faint, imperfect copy of the dear Savior. Blessed Jesus, we thank thee that thou didst learn obedience by the things suffered in this life. ***

About Whisky.

Under this heading the Christian Intelligencer makes the following statements and calculations:

An item in one of our exchanges states that Louisville, Kentucky, has five whisky distilleries, and that during the past six months they have produced nine hundred and fifty-six thousand eight hundred and eighteen gallons of whisky. It does not state how many bright hopes these five distilleries have blasted, how many brilliant young men they have ruined, how many heartaches they have caused, how much crime and misery they have produced, how many drunkards' graves they have filled. The men who manufacture or sell whisky have no fondness for statistics of that kind. And, in truth, it would be an appalling and a difficult investigation to trace out all the thousand evils which these few distilleries in a single one of our cities have rained upon our country and people.

There are some results suggested by this brief item, not of a moral or religious character, which are more easily computed. For instance, how much time has been wasted in the mere act of drinking the product of these five distilleries, and what has been the cost in dollars and cents of the time thus lost? It is fair to presume that all these gallons—nearly a million—have been consumed as a beverage. The average "drink" of a drum-drinker is one gill, and in the six months' production above mentioned there are thirty millions six hundred and eighteen thousand one hundred and seventy-six gills or separate "drinks." Now, on the presumption that each man spends fifteen minutes only in going to and from the place where this beverage is sold and in drinking it when there, the total amount of time consumed in drinking these millions of gills would be seven hundred and sixty-five thousand four hundred and fifty-four days, of ten hours each, which have been worse than thrown away, at a loss to the tipplers, counting their time to be worth no more than $2.50 a day, of $1,913,635, for which, at ten cents a drink, they paid $3,061,817, or an aggregate of $4,975,452, which prodigious amount is just so much abstracted from the productive wealth of the country, and from the means of that portion of our people who drank this six months' product of five whisky manufactories of a single one of our cities. If we multiply these figures by two, we have the wasted time and the cost of it for a year, namely, over one million and a half of days wasted, at a cost of $3,827,270, or a total cost in time and money of nearly $10,000,000. And if to this product of the distilleries of a single one of our cities be added the lost time and money caused by the product of the myriads of distilleries in our country at large, and the cost of time and money occasioned by the offenses committed under the influence of whisky and expiated in jails and prisons; and finally, if we add to all this the sum of all the shame and misery and anguish and broken lives and impaired bodies and early and shameful graves, it makes a total so terrific that we cannot understand how the manufacturer or vender of liquor can contemplate it without horror or without abandoning his infamous occupation, conscience-stricken and in a panic of remorse.

Everybody's Room.

Not long ago we stopped for an hour at the parsonage of a worthy brother, who was kind enough to insist on displaying to us its various attractions. He had a right to be proud of them, for the design of the parsonage, and the labor of begging the money to build it for his congregation, and the work of superintending it, had all fallen on the pastor's shoulders, as is mostly the case. After taking us through the commodious and well-lighted and well-ventilated apartments he said: "The choicest room of all is yet to be seen." He then opened the door of a neat and pleasant little room just over the hall, which, on looking in, we noticed, contained but three things—a chair, a table and a Bible. "This," said he, "is our room for prayer. Any one, at any time, can retire here for private devotions. It is always here, consecrated to that object, and used for no other—always inviting those who need it to prayer and communion with God. And," said he, "our experience is that it is the most popular and most used room in the whole house." Why not? Such a room would soon become a Bethel to old and young. Hallowed by the most precious associations, the very atmosphere would suggest tranquility and help. It would soon become the dearest spot in the whole house, a reminder of duty, and a help in doing it.

We recommend, whenever any one builds a house hereafter, that a room be provided "for everybody." And it would be a good thing if those whose house is already built should set apart, from common use, some consecrated spot for "everybody."—Southwestern Presbyterian.

BISHOP PAINE, says the Western Methodist, attended the Clarksville District Conference, at Bethel church, Montgomery county, Tennessee, July 11—preached Saturday and Sunday, also Sunday night in Clarksville. Full reports of the District Conference appear in the Clarksville Chronicle. The Bishop, in his inquiries as to the state of the work throughout the district, asked one of the preachers: "What sort of preaching do you do? Do you preach the doctrines of our church, and do you find out the wants of your people and indoctrinate them, or do you preach this 'hifalutin' preaching?" The preacher very innocently replied that he was an uneducated man, and therefore he could not do such preaching. Thereupon the Bishop informed him that it was uneducated men who did the "hifalutin" preaching. A fact to be borne in mind—no educated man, in the true sense of the phrase, is ever guilty of this abomination.

THE Lakeshore camp meeting near Biloxi, opens on Friday, August 1. It is not a picnic nor a pleasure resort, but a place and occasion for religious worship and edification. We do not like the idea of making an excursion to the camp ground by rail on the Sabbath. If you cannot spend the week, by all means go on Saturday and return on Monday. We believe things are in a pretty fair way of readiness, and that the arrangements generally are better than last year. Many more tents have been engaged this year, and all who have had the forethought to arrange for lodging will doubtless be satisfied with their accommodations. Come not only with your beds and hampers of food, but come praying, and intent on the meat which perisheth not.

MR. ALF. H. PIERSON, agent for Marvin College, Waxahachie, Texas, is soliciting subscriptions to liquidate a debt on the buildings of that institution. The object is a worthy one, and we commend Mr. Pierson to the liberality of our friends.

I HAVE often said that all the misfortunes of men spring from their not knowing how to live quietly at home in their own rooms.—Pascal.

Methodism—Old and New.

MR. EDITOR: It is not only interesting but profitable to look back upon the past and review the providences of God; and it is wonderful to observe and trace the influences of education and customs which govern families, as well as nations, giving distinct characteristics to every country and climate. Prejudices of education and custom, how difficult to overcome—so deeply rooted in our natures that it seems almost impossible to eradicate them. Shakespeare saw this with his penetrative eye of genius, and cries out in most impressive language:

"The tyrant custom, most brave semators,
Hath made the flinty and steel couch of war
My thrice-driven bed of down!"

Few analyze such thoughts or fathom their meaning, or make that allowance for human nature under varied circumstances. Lord Bacon, in his Orum Organum, broke the spell of the peripatetic philosophy which held the intellectual world in bondage many centuries, and which the most learned had no power to break, acting like a mythic charm to chasten and limit their imaginative powers. Look at the Puritan fathers. How often they are condemned for their peculiar prejudices; and yet, with all their errors, New England is indebted to them for some of the best principles of education and practical economy the world ever saw; but the epithet of "puritanical" is applied to them, without discrimination, as the most absurd of all people. But how much they suffered for the cause of religious freedom—what sufferings and hardships they endured, and death also! Fifty of their company fell victims the first year of immigration, and were buried in secret, lest the hostile savages should kill the remainder, so small in number; and they have not been able to this day to identify the spot to place a monument over their remains.

Poor human nature! how soon the dogmas of their faith led them to exclude all others. The prejudices of their education tinged the finest feelings of their successors, while bigotry and superstition were grafted upon the old tree. No other sect was tolerated. The Quakers suffered, and episcopalians were driven away.

What did not the pioneers of Methodism have to encounter in consequence? All kinds of persecutions. The Puritans, who had so long monopolized the educational and religious privileges of New England, felt their legal as well as religious rights invaded by the entrance of others, and all possible care and vigilance must be brought into requisition to keep them out; for the Methodist preachers, they said, were like wolves in sheep's clothing—"clouds without water;" "leading about silly women." Their own influence must be kept and their dignity sustained by every effort in their power.

"Take my house when you do take my prop
That doth sustain my house. You take my life
When you do take the means whereby I live."

And the enemy must be kept from their borders to preserve the limbs of the fold. This was followed out to the letter of the law. But, notwithstanding their prior claims, eventually a complete change took place in the ecclesiastical department. The union of Church and State was dissolved through the influence of the itinerant ministers in New England, and the power invested in the hands of the Puritan clergymen melted away like a snow-wreath before the meridian sun.

There were giants in those days—men of more than ordinary talents, chosen of God, from the Southern States, for the work of reformation they had to perform. The gospel banner was unfurled, and the star of Bethlehem shone with invisible power, waving its graceful folds over our land, fanned by the breezes of heaven. Light followed in its pathway. How rich in anecdote was this missionary field chained by the pilgrim fathers! The incident related the last year, while at the North, illustrates the character of the people perfectly, and is very amusing too. A gentleman, whose father entertained the first itinerant preachers in the popular village of Massachusetts, had tried to get a place for one to preach, but in vain. The churches and all other public buildings were closed against him, even the district school-house; but he was not to be defeated, and gave out his appointment on its steps. The schoolhouse on the border of the town was surrounded by trees and small underwood. A few came out boldly to hear him, but many more crept behind the bushes, ashamed to be seen; but, when he had finished his sermon of love and mercy, quite a congregation rose up from behind the trees, who had listened with deep attention to the strange preacher, the Rev. Jesse Lee. He was a man to mark—a household word of many a hearth and home of former days. The person he was gifted with manly dignity and a commanding aspect of superior mental power, with a portion of tact to meet emergencies with ready wit and humor on all occasions. He was followed by persecutions as he passed through New England, but left an impression wherever he went as a pioneer, and laid the foundations of the Methodist church in sapphire. My aged brother remembers him well, and related the following anecdote: On one occasion a learned clergyman and a newly lawyer devised a plan to confound him. Accordingly, after hearing a sermon and seeing him mount his horse, they took theirs and rode on each side, questioning him as they went; but he made them no reply. At length, weary with their efforts, one of them broke out in severe language, saying the man must be a fool or a knave. He turned round with his native dignity, with a ready flash of wit, and replied: "I see that I am riding between two both." They withdrew without any further investigation. On another occasion I have heard my brother relate that a learned minister sought to prove his ignorance in a public place by asking him a question in Greek, and he replied in the Indian tongue, which so confounded the man that he let him pass without further molestation. The first preachers were not ignorant men, nor were they fanatics. They were polished and intelligent, qualified to meet society of all ranks, and adapt themselves to its demands with a zeal according to that knowledge which wins the soul.

What a change has passed over New England since that period! Methodism is rife everywhere, embracing in its circle wealth, talent and education. With all its facilities to compass the globe, it is no longer a cross to unite with the denomination. The anathema has passed away.

A most thrilling incident was related to me by a mother in Israel many years ago. One of the first converts of Methodism—a distinguished family of high position and fashionable life—were greatly opposed to the Methodist meetings. Having three beautiful and accomplished daughters to attract the admiration of the world, they were forbidden to attend their meetings. One, however, had become interested and truly converted, which produced this fear. Her father was determined to break up the charm, and locked her up in a room, to be fed on bread and water. In the meantime the other two sisters started upon a visit to New York city. It was at a period when steamboats were not thought of, and on their passage the packet upon which they sailed was wrecked, and many passengers lost, among them these two sisters. They tied the beautiful tresses of their long hair together, and were seen to sink in the ocean's depth, locked in each other's arms. Oh, what tidings of sorrow were borne back to that once fascinating home, now hung with the drapery of gloom! The father's heart was wrung with anguish, and he cried out in bitterness of soul: "Oh, that I could have the hope for the loved and lost that I should have felt for my persecuted daughter, whom I imprisoned for her faith in Jesus!" Alas! too late! too late!

To the Ministers and Members of the M. E. Church South.

REV. AND DEAR BRETHREN: The time of the meeting of your respective Annual Conferences draws near. To these convocations the Board of Missions look with much interest and great concern. Upon the returns you make of missionary collections very much depends. Thousands are dependent upon your liberality for the bread of life. If you devise liberal things they will be fed; if you withhold your contributions they will perish. The board, in consultation with the College of Bishops, have proposed liberal things for you. Relying on your love of the cause of Christ, they have taken a long step forward, and now they confidently look to you to redeem their pledge on your behalf. Knowing you and your resources, they have promised more largely than ever before; and now they expect you to verify their confidence in your liberality. Have you made your collection? Have you doubled your last year's contribution, or have you given five times the amount you did last year? Come, brethren, do not delay. I see the Bishops are making noble efforts. Many presiding elders are working with energy; the preachers are in the spirit, and the membership, in many localities, are alive to the subject. The advanced movement of the board meets favor in every direction. Let there be no faltering, no holding back; every one at his post, and each laboring with a good will, and the work will be done. We have tried you in days of darkness and depression, and nobly did you maintain the honor of the church and the cause of Jesus. We trust you still. You will rally at the voice of your Captain. The Savior calls for men and means to send the tidings of salvation to lost sinners. The church will furnish both.

Periodicals.

SCRIBNER'S MONTHLY for August has a fine table of contents, and the illustrated articles abound in beautiful sketches. The article on modern skepticism will excite attention. It is to be followed by others on the same subject. The August Galaxy has: A Visit to Vienna; Life on the Plains; Casual Cogitations; The Parkman Murder; The Revolution of 1848 in Berlin, and other articles. Good Words and the Sunday Magazine for July are both excellent. These two publications stand at the head of the English religious magazines; J. B. Lippincott & Co., publishers. Lippincott's Magazine for August has a number of fresh and entertaining articles, and is handsomely illustrated, as usual. The New Hyperion is very good hot-weather reading.

THE SOUTHWESTERN ADVOCATE is the title of a semi-monthly, published in New Orleans, in the interests of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Rev. Isaac S. Lenvitt, publisher. Rev. J. C. Hartzell, New Orleans, and Rev. A. C. McDonald, Holly Springs, Mississippi, editors.

WE HAVE RECEIVED the catalogues of Trinity College, North Carolina, the Wesleyan Female College, Georgia, and the Kentucky Military Institute.

HEALTH OF THE CITY.—We have much reason for thankfulness that the health of New Orleans continues good. We are exempt from cholera, which has so afflicted many sections of the West, and the president of the Board of Health assures us that there is no yellow fever, even in a sporadic form.

CRYSTAL SPRINGS CAMP MEETING commences September 3. For particulars see notice on eighth page. This promises to be a very pleasant and profitable meeting. Let all go who can possibly do so.

THE first ingredient in conversation is truth, the next good sense, the third good humor and the fourth wit. Sir W. Temple.

DANIEL PRATT'S IMPROVED COTTON GINS—an advertisement of which can be seen in another column—have been in general use throughout the Southern country for the past forty-two years, and have earned for the inventor and manufacturer a reputation which has enabled him to compete triumphantly with the many novelties of cotton gin machinery introduced into the Southern markets during the past few years, and are constantly proving their superiority by the perfect satisfaction they constitute to planters in the fields and the hundreds of new patrons secured yearly. The death of Mr. Pratt made [illegible] in the operations of the company, but [illegible] were withdrawn from active participation in the business. Address Messrs. Joseph B. ## NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

WESLEYAN FEMALE INSTITUTE,

STAUNTON, VIRGINIA,

will begin its Twenty-fourth Annual Session SEPTEMBER 25, 1873.

REV. WILLIAM A. HARRIS, President, with an able corps of twenty-three Teachers and Officers. Thus this no college for young ladies ranks higher. Science and Literature are taught by graduates of our first universities and colleges. Modern Languages taught and spoken by European teachers. Music by seven professors and teachers, among whom are two of the most cultivated teachers of vocal music in the South.

This is one of the healthiest climates in the world. Those who come here from the South, with feeble constitutions, chills and climatic diseases, are entirely restored.

Buildings elegant—famed by the purest breezes, and commanding the most magnificent rural and mountain scenery, making it one of the most delightful college homes in the Union.

The last session One Hundred and Eleven young ladies attended this school as boarding pupils, from fifteen Southern States.

Extracts from Testimonials.

The Wesleyan Female Institute, located in Staunton, Virginia, under the presidency of Rev. W. A. Harris, is, in my judgment, one of the best institutions for young ladies in the South. I have occasion to know and appreciate its value by the advantages enjoyed by some of my daughters, now a pupil there. Its course of study is ample, its faculty accomplished, and its instruction both solid and elegant. Its personal accommodations are all that can be desired for health and comfort or taste. No location could be more eligible, no scenery more magnificent, no atmosphere more salubrious. Not the least of its merits is that sacred regard for religious training, without which no female college especially would be a blessing.

D. S. DOGGETT.

From Bishop E. M. Marvin, D. D.

The Wesleyan Female Institute is an honor to the church. Instruction is thorough. All classes stand high. In music the advantages are offered of a very high order. The most talented professors are employed, and neither pains nor expense are spared to make this department eminent.

E. M. MARVIN.

The Wesleyan Female Institute, at Staunton, deserves the brilliant success it enjoys. It has a good corps of teachers, a beautiful situation and excellent management. Having had a daughter under Mr. Harris' care during the present session, my observation leads me to believe this school to be one of the best of the female seminaries which adorn our State. The halls of the Wesleyan Female Institute should be filled to overflowing with pupils from all our Southern States.

This house is now open and in complete order for the reception of guests. The bathing and fishing is the best of any place on the coast, and persons seeking either health or pleasure cannot do better than to visit the Ocean Springs Hotel, where they will receive every attention during their stay at the hotel. The table will always be supplied with the delicacies of the season.

I would refer invalids seeking health to the pamphlets (to be had at the Hotel, or at Messrs. Schmidt & Zeigler's, New Orleans, Louisiana,) containing an analysis of the waters of the Springs and their wonderful cures, which are certified to by some of the most eminent physicians of our country.

Terms are more reasonable than at any of the other watering-places on the coast for the same accommodations. Liberal arrangements made with families and those wishing to remain during the season.

There are also connected with the house a Ten-Pin Alley and Billiard Saloon; also fine Croquet grounds for the guests of the house.

The proprietor has made arrangements for a Band of Music, which will be in attendance during every evening of the week, besides a fine Piano for the use of the guests of the Hotel.

RARE JUSTICE.

BY S. W. EASTERBROOKS.

A crab and a turtle lived under a myrtle,
Just in the pond at the foot of the hill.
The crab was the hack—sharp, snappy and black;
The turtle was master—fat, poky and still.

The turtle gave orders from off the pond's borders;
The crab did the marketing all by himself,
And worms fat as butter and angels full of splutter
He brought for his master to put on the shelf.

They lived there together through all the fine weather,
And then came the autumn with whirlwind and gale,
The pond grew an ocean, and in the commotion
The turtle imagined his victuals were stale.

"I've pains in my liver!" said he, with a shiver;
"The worms are like shavings, the snails have no meat.
I'm meager and hollow; I was an Apollo;
Go quickly and get me some food I can eat."

They argued together. The crab said the weather
Was much too severe for his delicate frame.
"The wind," said his master, "will blow you the faster."
Then kicked the crab out, with no scruple or shame.

Ten sprawls! he is landed, well watered and sanded;
One groan! and he starts for the inn just ahead.
He's nobody's chicken, to mind for a kicking:
He'll have his revenge on the turtle instead.

"A splendid old turtle lives under the myrtle,"
He cried to the landlord, who came to the door.
"Go get him for dinner, before he grows thinner.
Go quick! I will show you the way to the shore."

The crab went the faster, and reached his old master
In time to inform him of what he had done.
"Oh! whippity-whoop, sir, you'll make a fine soup, sir;
I'll watch while they fix you. Oh! that will be fun."

The landlord looked gently, but very intently
All over the crab who had acted as guide;
Then said: "You are tender and dainty and slender;
You'll do for my supper, well buttered and fried."

The crab cried in terror, perceiving his error;
The landlord walked off with both master and man.
They boiled the fat turtle from under the myrtle,
And fried the false crab in a hot-buttered pan.

Buried in a Coal Mine.

Coal, you know, is dug out of the earth. Should you like to visit a coal mine? We come to a great hole in the ground, and get into a big basket hung by stout chains to a windlass. Down, down we go. It grows blacker and blacker, and is quite dark by the time we touch the bottom. Here passage-ways run off in every direction, often crossing each other like the streets of a town. On each side of these are caves, where the coal is dug out. Thick pillars are left between, to hold up the roof. The men who hew out the coal are called "hewers." The coal is put into tubs running on wooden wheels, and dragged to the foot of the shaft. Those who do this are called "putters." It is hard work pulling these heavy loads through the long, low, dark passages. Besides these are the "trappers," whose business is to sit cooped up in little black holes, to open and shut the trap-doors which lead out of the passages. This is boys' work. Often little boys of nine or ten are employed. It is not hard, but very dismal and tiresome. And they have to stay all day long! How should you like it, children, who go to school, and play on the grass in the sunshine?

Then there are dangers down in the mine which do not happen to people above ground. Foul air sometimes chokes the men to death; water sometimes spouts up and drowns them, and sometimes a part of a mine "caves in." This is called "a crush."

One morning, while the pitmen were at work in a mine in the north of England, they heard a noise like thunder. In a moment every lamp was out—for the men work by lamps—there is not a spark of daylight there. "A crush! a crush!" cry the men, and all throw down their tools and run.

It is Tuesday morning. The men gather at the mouth of the pit and count their number. Five are missing—two "hewers," two "putters" and one little "trapper," Robert Lester. People above hear the noise and rush to the pit's mouth. The workmen are taken up. O the agony of the wives and mothers of those who are left behind! Brave men go back to their rescue. They light their candles and reach the "crush." There is nothing but a heap of ruins. Were the poor miners instantly killed, or are they hemmed in to die of starvation? It is a dreadful thought. They called and shouted; but no answer. They begin with pickaxes and shovels to clear the way. It is hard labor and great risk. The news of the accident brings help from far and near. Men flock from all quarters to offer their services. How they work! Toward night they hear something. Listen! It is not a voice, but a tapping. It can just be heard! Clink, clink, clink, clink, clink! five times, and then it stopped. Five more, and then a stop. What does it mean? One man guessed that, as there were five missing, the five clinks showed all five were alive, waiting for deliverance. A shout of joy was raised in and above the pit.

Among the foremost of the workers was the father of little Robert, the "trapper." Night and day he never left the mine, and hardly quitted his work.

"You'll kill yourself, Lester," said a fellow-workman; "go, take a little rest, and trust the work to us."

"No, no, Tom," cried the poor father; "I promised Robert's mother we'd come up together; and so we will, if it please God," he said, wiping the tears from his rough cheek; and he hewed away with all his might.

How does it fare with the poor prisoners? They were frightened, like the rest, by that sudden and awful noise. Little Robert left his dog and ran to the men, who well knew what it meant. Waiting till everything was quiet, they went forward to examine the passage-way Robert left. It was blocked up. They tried another; that, too, was blocked up. O, fearful thought, they were buried alive! The men went back to the boy. "I want to go home; please, do let me go home," said poor Robert.

"Yes, yes, as soon as we find a way out, my little man," said a miner called Truman, in a kind yet husky voice.

The air grew close and suffocating, and they took their oil-cans and food-bags to one of the galleries where it was better.

The two "hewers," Truman and Logan, were pious men. "Well, James, what shall we do next?" asked Truman.

"There is but one thing we can do," said Logan. "God says: 'Call upon me in the day of trouble; I will deliver thee, and thou shalt glorify me.'"

They told the boy their danger. "But we must keep up a good heart," said these believing men; "and the way to do so is to put our trust in the almighty God more than in man. He heard Jonah cry to him from the whale's belly, and he can hear us from the bottom of the coal-pit. Let us pray to him."

They all knelt down, and Robert cried bitterly. But as the pious pitmen prayed, first one and then the other, their hearts grew lighter, and even the little "trapper" dried his tears.

When it was time for dinner they ate sparingly, in order to make the food they had last at least three days, for it might be full that time before they could be dug out. Meanwhile, what should they do for water? A trickling noise was heard. "Water, water!" Yes, it was water, dripping from the rock. "It seems," said Logan, "as if this water was sent on purpose to put us in mind that God won't forsake us; for don't you know the good book says: 'When the poor and needy seek water, and there is none, and their tongue faileth for thirst, I the Lord will hear them, I the God of Israel will not forsake them?'"

Soon the imprisoned men got their pickaxes; but what a hopeless task it seemed to cut through the mass of earth and stones to daylight! Their hearts beat with hope and joy when they first heard the sound of their friends working on the other side. It was then they made the cliuk, cliuk with their pickaxes, which was heard, and so encouraged their deliverers.

Wednesday, Thursday, Friday, and no rescue. What dark and dreadful days! Worse than all, the sounds they had heard did not appear to draw near. And yet prayer and songs of praise might have been heard in that dismal cavern. By Friday morning their food was gone, and by Friday night their oil too.

"Our food is gone, our light is gone, but our God is not gone," said Truman. "He says: I will never leave you nor forsake you." As for little Robert, he was so weak he could not sit up. His mind wandered; he talked about the sun and grass as if he saw them; and once he repeated what he had learned at the Sunday school:

> Sweet fields beyond the swelling flood
> Stand dress'd in living green."

Saturday came—the fifth day—and the men at work outside knew there was not an instant to lose. They were too anxious even to speak. For hours they had heard no signals. Were their poor comrades dead? Suddenly the wall was pierced; a hole was made through it; feeble voices were heard. "Truman, are you there?"

"Yes, all here."

"All living?"

"Yes, thank God, all living."

"All living, all living!" shouted the men; and the shout went up to the top of the pit. When Robert's father heard that his little son was alive the good news was too much for him, and he fell down senseless.

One hour more and the rescuers reached their comrades. Who can describe the meeting? I cannot; nor the joy and gratitude of wives, mothers and friends, as one and another were brought up to the surface. At last came Lester, with Robert in his arms. What a huzza rent the air as they came in sight! "Safe, safe! God be praised!"—Early Days.

Japanese Girls.

How would you like to see a little Japanese girl? She would look very funny to you. But many of the little girls here are very pretty and very polite; and they never seem to get angry at each other; and they always do just what their mamma says. They dress with beautiful silk sashes on them, and have long sleeves, and look very nice and neat. They have no pockets in their dresses like you; but they put apples or candy or oranges in their sleeves, which hang down like little bags. They also put their hands in their sleeves when it is cold; for they have no muffs or mittens. Their hair is done up in so funny a way that I cannot stop to tell you; only it is so queer it would make you laugh; but it is really very pretty. On their feet they wear little wooden shoes, with a strap that goes between their toes. They slip their feet off their shoes whenever they enter the house.

Sometimes I have had little Japanese girls come and see me with their mammas; and you would think it very strange if you could see how polite and pretty they are. When they come into my room they kneel down, and place their faces between their hands close down to the floor; and they keep bowed down before me for a moment or two, just as though I were an idol. At first I used to feel very strange to have people (both young and old) fall down before me; but now I am quite used to it; for it is their way of showing respect.

I wish I could hear you and little brother play "just once" on the piano. Do you think that you could play real loud, so that I could hear you way out here? You would both laugh if you could see me play. I have got a nice and sweet little harmonium here, which is a great comfort to me when I get lonely. Though it is small, yet it can sound very loud sometimes; and it seems something very wonderful and beautiful to my Japanese friends, whom I have come to see me very often. The other evening I played some Sunday school tunes to them, among which was: "I want to be an angel." This they liked very much, and made me play it twice. They could not seem to understand how the notes made such pleasant sounds; and they watched my feet very curiously, to see if the music came out of my toes or not. Then they would try to play for themselves, and were astonished that they could not make any "tune."—Evangelist.

Farm, Garden and Household.

The Flower Garden.

Beds of roses and handsome shrubs can be put down this month with almost certain success. In putting down roses there should be a tongue cut in the lower part of the limb—from this cut place the roots will most likely start. Dig out a little trench about two inches deep and lay the branch in this, securing it down with small sticks driven down over it. Leave out five or six inches of the top of the branch, cover the stem well with earth, and do not disturb it until winter. A good many of our beautiful native shrubs can be secured for the garden by the same process of layering. For instance, the Kalmia, which grows in great abundance along the banks of the rivers, when cultivated, forms a very handsome evergreen bush, and when covered by its dense heads of beautiful flowers is truly elegant. Also the Rhododendron, which is found near water courses in hilly and mountainous districts, when grown in gardens, becomes an attractive small evergreen tree, with dark, glossy leaves, and in the spring, when its clusters of beautiful rose-colored flowers are produced from the end of every branch, is exceedingly attractive. Equally beautiful are our native Azaleas, with all their varieties of colors. These and many others can be obtained by putting down layers now. Select a limb which grows near the ground and dig a wide enough trench to take in not only the main branch, but all the small branches at the end. These will be the most likely to root, and, instead of only one root, several will be secured, thus rendering it more certain to obtain one or many for the garden.

Hedges and shrubbery should be closely watched, and trimmed as often as needed; it is the summer trimming which gives the neat and symmetrical form. Now is the time to train branches to form arches; while they are growing the selection as to which will answer the purpose best can be made. Vines also should be made to cling closely to their arbors; this gives the garden a neat and tidy appearance. Annuals should be thinned out and not allowed to crowd each other; they never bloom in perfection unless allowed sufficient space to branch out and spread to their full size. All of their seeds should be collected and properly dried and safely put up for another year.

Chrysanthemums should be topped to make them send up bushy heads; this gives a large show of flowers. Cuttings of fine varieties can also be put out if well rooted; they will bloom in the fall. If the Dahlias have finished their first blooming, by cutting back the tops new shoots will spring, which will give a fresh supply of fine flowers in the fall. As they receive their nourishment chiefly from the surface soil a fresh mulching of rotted manure will be found very beneficial. Keep down the weeds and grass, and rake smooth and cover. The stalks should never be neglected, for they form a striking feature in every garden. If their borderings are kept neatly trimmed, and they themselves free from weeds and grass, the entire garden is greatly improved thereby.—Southern Cultivator.

HOW TO GET RID OF THE CUT-WORM.—How to get rid of the cut-worm is of much interest to the farmer and gardener, and every one can do it with but little trouble or expense; in fact the simplicity of the plan is very likely the reason why it is not universally adopted. It is to plant one or more China (Pride of India) trees and every fall gather the leaves and berries and mix with all the manure used, taking care to destroy the vitality of the seed by heating or otherwise. If a moderate quantity of the leaves, stems and berries be composted with all manure used and applied to the plants no fear need be felt of the cut-worm. There will be none to trouble plants manured with this compost.

The China-tree grows easily and very rapidly in all the Middle and Southern States, and many persons consider it quite ornamental. I would be obliged to you if you would place this matter before your readers, asking of them a trial, which will prove successful in every case fairly tested. N. L. Cloud, in Southern Cultivator.

HENS EATING EGGS.—Some time since I saw an inquiry in your valuable paper in regard to preventing hens from eating their eggs. I am sure people teach their chickens to eat eggs by throwing the egg-shells among the scraps of food that is given them. In this way they get the taste of the cooked egg, and then when sitting they eat them rather than leave the nest to get other food. I have killed many a hen for this when it was really my own or the cook's fault. I now take the shells carefully from the scraps at the table and the slops in the kitchen and throw them in the fire. If not entirely burned when I take the ashes up I throw them back again. Always keep a heap of ashes from the kitchen in the chicken-yard; they like it, and will go to it immediately after eating. This, with an occasional sprinkling of lime, will keep them healthy and make good, firm egg-shells.

CORN CAKE.—One tablespoonful of sour cream or butter, two heaping tablespoonfuls of sugar, one even cup of Indian meal, one even cup of wheat flour, one cup of sour milk, one teaspoonful of soda, and sweet milk or water. Makes it equally good with the addition of two teaspoonfuls of cream of tartar. We like this recipe for corn cake better than any other which we have tried.—Household.

STEAMED PUDDING.—Three cups of flour, one cup of suet, one teaspoonful of salt, one and one-half cups of sweet milk, one cup of molasses, one cup of raisins, one cup of currants, one teaspoonful of soda, one nutmeg, one teaspoonful of cinnamon and one-half teaspoonful of cloves. Steam three or four hours in a tin mold, and serve with sauce.—Household.

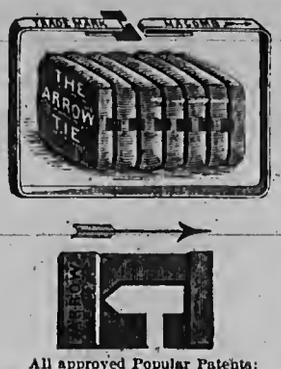
THE DUBOIS FLANGE COTTON GIN.

By the Flange the Cotton is kept in contact with the teeth on each side, until the fiber is taken from the seed, without allowing them to be taken up by the return motion of the roll, as in other Gins.

The Flange prevents hulls, stems, sticks and hard substances from being cut, consequently making a better sample out of roughly-picked cotton than other Gins.



We have sold more from this point than any agency of any other Gin for the crop of 1872-73; consequently we can furnish more and better references, and they are warranted to come up to all that is said of them.

We keep constantly on hand all sizes, from 40 to 80-SAW STANDS, left or right. Price, $5 per Saw.

IMPROVED

EAGLE COTTON GINS.

The great popularity of the EAGLE COTTON GINS is established from the well-known fact that they are the most reliable, strongest and best built Cotton Gins ever made. The Eagle Cotton Gin runs lighter than any other gin, thus having a great advantage for planters who wish to run by horse power. All the numerous planters who use the Eagle Cotton Gin will certify to the fact that when their cotton is sent to market it always brings the highest market price, as no other gin can produce a finer or a better sample of cotton than the Eagle Cotton Gins. Over seventeen thousand of the Eagle Cotton Gins have been made and sold. During a period of twenty years the undersigned has had the agency of the Eagle Cotton Gin in New Orleans. He has never had a gin returned or rejected out of the immense number sold. The saw cylinders of all the Eagle Cotton Gins are twelve inches in diameter, which is two inches larger than most other kinds of gins, thus giving our forty-saw gin more teeth, and they are more than equal to the fifty-saw gins of other makers, who use only a ten-inch cylinder, and the same great advantage of the twelve-inch cylinder in large-sized gins can be easily estimated. Planters who wish a reliable cotton gin, with an established reputation, can purchase an Eagle Cotton Gin with a certainty that they are not making an untried experiment, but will obtain a cotton gin which is indorsed by the oldest and largest planters in the country as the best in use. A large stock of the Eagle Cotton Gins are always kept on sale in New Orleans, ready for immediate shipment. Planters should be particular to state if they want right or left-hand motion gins.

A CONVERSATION FAN.

No family circle is complete in social diversions and entertainments without one, and in order to enjoy the pastime it should be distinctly understood that the answers do not numerically follow the questions, but to spice the amusement no answer must be looked for that will afford a fitting response to an interrogatory.

Where a direct answer is not to be found to a direct question, it will be discovered that it furnishes the sequel to a sustained conversation, so that couples can carry on a tete-a-tete, which they may not wish to make audible, by silent indentions of numbers.

THE CONVERSATION FAN

is an infallible remedy against dullness, breaking the spell of silence by a suggestive inquiry, furnishing congenial pleasures for an evening's entertainment, and opening up a novel and ingenious method of whiling away agreeable hours at home, in the promenade, at a party or private gathering.

SWAIM'S CELEBRATED PANACEA

HAS LONG ATTRACTED THE NOtice of the most eminent physicians by its great efficacy in curing what were considered incurable cases of disease, where the patients have been almost destroyed by SCROFULA, etc., and Prof. Valentine Mott, of the New York University, Profs. Gibson, Dewees and Chapman, of Philadelphia, and many other physicians of celebrity, gave, over their own signatures, letters certifying to its great merits. It has been occasionally advertised, and thousands of families recommend and use it. The Laboratory is under the direction of Dr. FRANKLIN STEWART, who has devoted his attention and skill in its careful preparation during the past twenty-five years, and not a bottle put up that is not worth many times its cost to the patient. It is perfectly safe for the most diseased and debilitated, and in all cases where the Blood is not pure it should be used freely.

Prepared only at SWAIM'S LABORATORY, 113 South Seventh street, below Chestnut, Philadelphia.

New Orleans Markets.

From the New Orleans Price Current.

We hear of more worm accounts, and from some localities they are of a decidedly threatening character. There can be no doubt that they are spreading to a large district and are attracting more serious attention. With the exception of the Mississippi from the interior have been generally favorable.

The river is 8 feet 5 inches below high-water mark.

COTTON.—The following are the arrivals since the twenty-fifth instant:

| | |
|---|---|
| Louisiana and Mississippi | 88 |
| Lake | 1 |
| Mobile | 190 |
| Total | 279 |

On Saturday several buyers came forward, but not finding the kinds they wanted, or having orders for small lots only, the market was inanimate throughout the day, and, although eight brokers participated in the business, the sales were confined to 650 bales. Owing to there being less competition the better qualities were less buoyant, but without any quotable falling off, while the lower grades exhibited their usual irregularity. On Monday, under the influence of a buoyant and active market at Liverpool, when the sales were 18,000 bales at an advance of 1-16d., factors were stringent in their pretensions, but nothing transpired to indicate any quotable improvement. Operations were restricted by scant supplies and the sales were only 450 bales. Ordinary sold at 11⅝@12¼c., ordinary to strict ordinary at 12¼c., strict ordinary to good ordinary at 14c., strict good ordinary to low middling at 17⅛c., strict low middling at 18⅛@18⅝c., and strict low middling to middling at 18¾c. On Tuesday the market opened with only a moderate inquiry, but buyers subsequently came forward with more spirit, and took 1,350 bales at prices showing more steadiness and firmness, but not without some small sales at less than quotations. To-day's business, in which ten brokers participated, included ordinary at 12c., strict ordinary at 13⅝c., a high style of good ordinary at 15⅝@15¾c., and some small lots of low middling and Liverpool middling at a material reduction from quotations.

The above makes an aggregate for the past three days of 2,450 bales, against 2,150 for the corresponding time last week and 2,800 the week before.

The receipts proper at this port since the first of September, exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas, are 1,252,851 bales, against 953,448 bales to the same date last year, and the increase in the receipts at all the ports up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 852,884 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same date last year, there is an increase of 417,781 to Great Britain, of 67,419 to France, and of 179,601 to other foreign ports. We quote:

Special Notices.

CAMP MEETING.—The camp meeting on Seashore camp ground will commence on Friday, the first day of August next.

The ground is beautifully located upon the coast, two miles west of Biloxi, Mississippi, and lies open to and fronts directly upon the gulf, enjoying the delightful sea-breeze. Persons visiting the camp ground will leave the New Orleans and Mobile railroad at Seashore station, where a walk of a few hundred feet brings them to the encampment.

The trustees have laid the grounds off in avenues and lots suitable for the erection of permanent tents. Several parties erected their own permanent tents last year, and the trustees are pleased to learn that a greater number intend doing the same this year—some as family tents, others by church association. Both these are desirable.

The trustees have made provision for good boarding, and lodging accommodations to a limited extent, at reasonable prices.

Several small, plain tents will be erected, to rent to persons or families desiring to hire, either furnished plainly or entirely unfurnished. Unfurnished tents, nine by thirteen feet, at $5, and nine by twenty-five feet, at $10 for the encampment week. For the same plainly furnished with cots, pillows, sheets, etc., a reasonable additional charge will be made.

Arrangements have been made with the railroad companies for the conveyance of passengers to the camp ground and back at half the usual price of fare.

Taking the New Orleans, Mobile and Texas railroad, Morgan's Louisiana and Texas railroad, and the Attakapas Mail Transportation Company, at any of their stations, parties will pay full fare and receive return tickets free. By the New Orleans, Jackson and Great Northern railroad parties will pay full fare and retain their tickets, which, indorsed at the camp meeting by the secretary, will be good for return fare. Beyond New Iberia, by the stage routes, a liberal deduction on usual fares will be made by the proprietors.

From this city tickets can be purchased at the office, upper corner of Camp and Common streets, or at ticket office at the depot, at the head of Canal street.

The trains from this city will leave the Canal street depot at 8 o'clock A. M., 3.15 P. M. and 5 P. M., the first two trains stopping at all the way-stations, the 5 P. M. train stopping only at the principal stations, but all stopping at camp meeting station during the continuance of the encampment. The freight trains leave the depot, corner of Levee and Girod street, at 8.50 A. M. and 6.30 P. M.

The trustees recommend to all who desire to attend the meeting to address either of the undersigned, and make arrangements for their comfort before the date of the camp meeting.

Brethren of the Methodist Church and of other churches, and the communities of the adjacent cities and country, are invited to attend the camp meeting.

Ministers of talent and distinction, from far and near, are expected to be present and assist in conducting the exercises.

W. H. FOSTER, President.
PHILIP HALLAHAN, Secretary.

CAMP MEETING.—The camp meeting at Crystal Springs camp ground, Copiah county, Mississippi, will commence on Wednesday, the third of September next. Ministers and members of the Methodist Church, with all others who wish to be benefited by the exercises of the occasion, are respectfully and cordially invited to be present. We sincerely hope that Methodist preachers will not wait for further invitation. We cannot think of the names of all whom we would be glad to have with us, and may therefore fail to invite each one personally. But, brethren, come to the help of the Lord. Come and help us with your prayers and exhortations.

The camp ground is within the corporate limits of Crystal Springs, one mile from the depot. Conveyance at hand at a trifling expense, and ample boarding and sleeping accommodations for all who come.

It is understood, of course, that the camp meeting is upon the self-sustaining plan of last year, which is, indeed, the only practicable plan. The Camp Meeting Association expect, of course, to provide accommodations, free of charge, to all ministers coming to labor with us. We hope to make accommodating terms with the railroads for excursion tickets.

Extensive improvements are being made in the boarding department, and the fare is put down as low as it can be afforded.

Let everybody come to the Crystal Springs camp meeting—singers, preachers and all praying people especially.

All who desire to erect tents will please speak soon. The ground is rapidly taken up.

H. A. HARRIS, P. C.,
Crystal Springs Station, Mississippi Conference.

CAMP MEETING.—There will be a camp meeting at the Line Wood camp ground, Spring Hill circuit, Meridian district, commencing on the twenty-sixth of September, 1873, which is Friday before the fourth Sunday in September. We invite all ministers who can do so to assist us. Line Wood is about twenty-two miles from Lauderdale station, Mississippi. Brethren wishing to attend will please address me at Dalcville, Lauderdale county, Mississippi. J. D. HAY, P. C.

THE JACKSON DISTRICT SUNDAY SCHOOL CONVENTION, M. E. CHURCH SOUTH.—This convention, which embraces the ministers, traveling and local, the superintendents and teachers of this district, as well as others interested in this great cause, will be held in Canton, Mississippi, beginning on Wednesday, the twenty-seventh of August next.

The committee appointed by the Jackson District Conference to secure speakers for the above occasion, without attempting to prescribe a programme for the same, would respectfully suggest the examination and discussion of the following subjects: What is the great end of Sunday school instruction? Is our literature adapted to meet the end of the Sunday school? What is the best mode of securing attendance on Sunday schools? What are the true relations of children and of Sunday schools to the church? Are denominational schools important to success? Can our Sunday school music be improved? THOS. F. HORTON,
Chairman of Committee.

CAMP MEETINGS.—Our camp meetings will take place at the following times and places:

Bethel will commence on Friday night before the third Sabbath of September next.

Beulah will commence on Friday night before the first Sabbath of October next.

All are urged to come, but come prepared to take care of yourselves. Of course the preachers and their families will be cared for.

JAMES E. RHADLEY, P. C.,
Pleasant Hill Ct., Louisiana Conference.

Appointments for Quarterly Meetings.

NOTICE.—The Publishing Committee of the ADVOCATE gave it as their opinion that the insertion of the notices of Quarterly Conferences once or twice was sufficient, and, as the space of the paper is valuable, they passed a resolution recommending that they be not inserted more than once or twice. Our friends who are interested in these appointments will take due notice thereof, as we propose to be governed by the resolution in future.

News of the Week.

DOMESTIC.

NEW YORK, July 30.—It is stated that unofficial advice has been received at the War Department that the court has found all the Modocs guilty of murder, and ordered all of them to be shot. General Davis is said to be only waiting for the indorsement of the verdict to carry out the sentence.

WASHINGTON, July 30.—One million postal cards were shipped from the factory at Springfield yesterday. The company is now printing nine hundred thousand daily.

The President has confirmed the pardons of the North and South Carolina Kuklux prisoners, recently recommended by the Attorney General. The papers have been sent to the State Department, and orders for the release of the prisoners will be issued immediately.

FAYETTE, Mo., July 30. There have been fourteen deaths by cholera here since last Saturday, out of a population not exceeding twelve hundred. The disease originated at a picnic of negroes, which occurred last Saturday, and was caused by over-eating unwholesome food and drinking impure water from a small stream near by. Nine negroes died, and a number are still sick. Three white railroad laborers and two citizens have also died. Large quantities of tar, rosin and gunpowder have been burned by the authorities, and other means taken to stay the progress of the scourge.

There was only one death yesterday. It is believed the disease has spent its force.

MARSHALL, TEXAS, July 31. The road through from Marshall to Dallas was completed yesterday at half-past six P. M.

The point of meeting was sixty-four miles west of Longview and sixty east of Dallas.

The road will be turned over by the contractors to the company in a day or two, when through trains will be put on from Shreveport to Dallas; distance, one hundred and ninety miles; running time, twelve hours.

Shreveport gives a barbecue this month in honor of the event.

LOUISVILLE, July 31.—Two deaths by cholera occurred at Lagrange, Kentucky, to-day. The disease has entirely disappeared from the other Kentucky towns; and no case, originating here, has appeared in Louisville for a week.

BOSTON, July 31.—Vice President Wilson is much better than he has been at any time since his illness, and is steadily improving. No operation whatever is or has been contemplated.

SAN FRANCISCO, July 31. Only two hundred and seventy Chinese came by the last steamer. The smallness of the number is significant, showing the effect of the dispatches sent by the six companies here to China, warning their countrymen not to come.

BATON ROUGE, July 31.—The Hon. James E. Elam, son of the late Hon. James Madison Elam, and ex-mayor of this city, died at eleven o'clock this morning. Mr. Elam was frequently elected mayor, and filled other positions of trust.

KEY WEST, FLA., Aug. 1.—Mail advices from Havana of the twenty-ninth ultimo contain the following intelligence:

The government has obtained possession of important documents, revealing clandestine labors of the Carlists in this province, and criminating Quijano, counsel for the Transatlantic Steamship Company, and legal agent for several wealthy merchants of Havana.

Other persons are implicated and are under the surveillance of the courts. The arrest of some prominent men is rumored.

In searching the house of Quijano $500,000 in gold was found, which, it is said, was collected here to be sent to England to further the cause of the Carlists.

TITUSVILLE, PA., August 1.—At half-past six o'clock this morning a northward-bound freight train and a southward-bound oil train on the Alleghany Valley railroad collided near Cunningham. Two brakesmen named Borland and Bonner, and an unknown boy were killed. An engineer had his thigh broken. The oil ignited, and fifteen cars burned, together with the bodies of the persons killed.

PHILADELPHIA, Aug. 1.—A number of delegates from a southern part in Prussia, after a trip over the Northern Pacific railroad, favor a settlement on that line. They number forty thousand. They propose emigration to avoid the military service which their tenets forbid.

NEW YORK, Aug. 3.—It is rumored in the city to-night that three hundred men, chiefly Americans, have been enlisted, by General Quesada for service against the Spanish in Cuba.

The cholera has appeared at Union Hill, opposite New York. Two cases reported, one fatal. One fatal case reported at Pleasantville, on the Harlem railroad.

LOUISVILLE, Aug. 3.—Mrs. West shot her husband in a street car in this city yesterday morning, inflicting a severe wound. The husband asserts that his wife is subject to attacks of emotional insanity, and went her ball. The ball ranged around the hip, and has not yet been found.

SANTA FE, N. M., Aug. 3.—A slight shock of an earthquake was felt in this city about ten o'clock last night.

It is reported that the Southern Apaches have left their reservation, on account of one of their chiefs having been arrested for theft. The troops are after them.

NEW YORK, Aug. 4.—A detective and the deputy surveyor of the port yesterday met the steamer City of Mexico and arrested Antonio Tueri y Alvez, clerk of the Commercial Bank of Havana, who robbed that Institution of bills of exchange to the amount of $67,000 and $20,000 gold. Nearly all the money was recovered. Two others concerned in the robbery were also arrested.

A Herald special, dated London, August 4, says advices from Cadiz to-day state that the United States steamer Shenandoah is in that harbor, and has ordered the frigate Ville de Madrid to abstain from hostilities. The frigate remains under the guns of the Shenandoah.

ST. LOUIS, Aug. 1. The Texas cattle plague prevails in northwestern Missouri. Within the past two weeks several thousand have died in Nodaway county alone. Loss estimated at $50,000.

SALT LAKE CITY, Aug. 4.—The territorial election passed off quietly to-day. The Mormon ticket was unanimously chosen, the Gentiles not voting. The usual number of women and children voted.

SAN FRANCISCO, Aug. 4.—The loss by the Portland fire is estimated at $1,125,000. The loss in proportion is greater than those of the fires at Boston or Chicago.

NEW YORK, Aug. 5.—The captain and part of the crew of the schooner Nellie J. Densmore died of yellow fever at quarantine station. The captain's wife died of the same disease on the voyage from Havana.

FOREIGN.

PARIS, July 30. It is commonly reported that Marshal MacMahon will retain the presidency but six months longer, when he will resign and return to the command of the army. It is considered certain that the republican form of government will be succeeded by a monarchy, and it is deemed essential that MacMahon, who possesses great influence with the army, should be in command on the occasion of the change.

The extreme Left Center are to agitate the question of the dissolution of the Assembly in the provinces during the recess.

VIENNA, July 31.—The international congress, called to discuss the means of the protection of patent rights, will assemble on the fourth of August.

MADRID, Aug. 1.—A dispatch has been received at the ministry of war, announcing that a sharp fight has taken place near Maluga, between the Republicans and insurgents, in which the latter were defeated and driven from the field. Eighty-seven insurrectionists were killed.

PARIS, August 1.—The cities of Nancy and Belfort were evacuated yesterday by the German troops, who burned all the goods which could not be carried off. The inhabitants of both cities remained in their houses while the Germans were leaving.

LONDON, Aug. 2.—A dreadful accident occurred this morning on the Northwestern railway, near Wigan, to the express train from London. Twelve persons were instantly killed and three were wounded. Among the killed is Sir John Anson. Many of the injured persons will die.

PARIS, Aug. 2.—Disturbances are reported at Rouen Letope, in the Department of the Vosges. The subprefect was beaten by the mob, who cried: "Vive Thiers," "Vive Gambetta."

During the evacuation of the Vosges by the Germans there were cries of "Vive la Commune!"

A Carlist force one thousand strong attacked Portugalite, seven miles from Bilboa, this morning. The garrison made a vigorous and successful defense. The Carlists were defeated with heavy loss, and driven over the Salindo river.

VIENNA, Aug. 2.—A fire occurred in the Exposition building this morning, and was not extinguished before the Alsace-Lorraine peasant dwelling was destroyed. The agricultural department was threatened with destruction, but was saved by the energy of the firemen.

VIENNA, Aug. 3.—The Shah and suite have arrived here, and have been received by the Emperor. The Shah visited the Exposition to-day.

PARIS, Aug. 4.—There is no longer any doubt that the Count de Paris has gone to visit the Count de Chambord. He arrived at Vienna to-day, and was received by the Emperor Francis.

There is much excitement over these circumstances, in view of the union of the Bourbon and Orleans branches, to which this proceeding points.

BERLIN, Aug. 5.—Captain Werner, who recently seized the Spanish insurgent gunboat Vigilante, will be removed from the command of the German squadron in the Mediterranean.

LONDON, August 5.—Parliament was prorogued to-day. The Queen's speech was read by commission.

The Shah of Persia at Home.

BY PROF. WILLIAM WELLS.

While a host of "Our Owns" are doing up the Shah on his travels, and finding a secret enjoyment in exposing his whims and his foibles, we propose to take a peep at the "Mountain of Light"—for this is one of his titles—in the distant regions of his Persian home, where we fear he will be found no more amiable than on his visits to his European cousins of the throne.

Of his height and his weight, of his beard and complexion, of his clothes and his jewels, we need say nothing, for lo! are not these the subject of many epistles to the Occidentals? We propose to sit down and have a chat with the famous Oriental-Hungarian traveler, Vambery, and also with the Austrian doctor, Polnik, who was for some time private physician to the Oriental monarch, and both of whom know a little more about his home than any other living men. Now, since the Shah has consented to present himself to profane eyes, the accounts of these favored ones have a double interest to the world.

They declare Nassir-ed-Din to be a man of extraordinary culture for an Oriental, and Vambery, who made his acquaintance during a visit to Persia in 1862, unhesitatingly pronounces him to be the most intelligent and cultured man in all Persia. He is well read in the Arabic and in the literature of his own land, handles his own pen with an easy and flowing style, is a handsome penman, and not bad at drawing. He amused himself one day in making an outline sketch of Dr. Polnik's person, and handed it to the highly-favored physician. He understands French well enough to maintain an ordinary conversation in it, and is remarkably well posted in geography; this is, indeed, his favorite study, and he is very familiar with Asia, and passably acquainted with the other portions of the earth.

He is not very fond of the cares of government nor of his residence in the capital, both of which he will gladly flee from to enjoy the retirement of his hunting-lodge, of which he makes a veritable sans-souci. At the chase he is a genuine Nimrod, and counts his booty like an old hunter. It is not at all uncommon for him to sit down and write out an exact diary of his day's hunt, in which he is quite careful to note what game he has brought down while on the run, and the birds that he has shot on the wing. His hunts are sometimes engaged in by a perfect army of attendants, who are allowed, as a favor, to be in his train, though more to witness his skill than to join in the sport. He spends about three-fourths of the year at the chase, and this long-continued exercise in the open air during the heat of summer and the cold of winter has given him an iron constitution.

The royal family in Persia is widely spread through the realm, from the singular fact that the ruler chooses his wives in the midst of his subjects, without any regard to royal blood; youth, beauty, grace and vivacity of person find favor in his eyes, and an entrance to his household. The result of this arrangement is a numerous host of royal princes, whose relations are in no way regarded by the court; and their descendants are forced to look out for themselves, so that in Persia one may find carpenters, cooks and even grooms of royal blood.

The private treasury of the Shah ordinarily contains some ten millions of dollars in cash, to say nothing of his vast estates, castles, etc., and his jewel-chamber is the richest in the world. It is just now pretty well depleted to provide him with the precious stones with which he is dazzling the eyes of Europe. Very few Europeans ever gain access to it; but Vambery's perfect acquaintance with the language, and his marvelous familiarity with all Oriental and Asiatic questions, secured him the favor, and he thus tells the story of his visit:

"The first and most beautiful stone is the great diamond known as the 'Sea of Light,' which Nadir-Shah brought home from his campaigns in India, and which to-day has but a single rival in the Koh-i-noor, or 'Mountain of Light,' of the English crown jewels. Next to this is a valuable ruby sold to the Shah by a French dealer, and then come innumerous brilliants, and three great emeralds brought from India by Nadir-Shah. A breast-sash of pearls and emeralds alternating, worn on great occasions, is of immense value, as are other articles of personal adornment, such as coats and shawls, and collars with diamonds in place of buttons; and as for scepters and swords and belts, beset all over with diamonds and precious stones, there is no end to them."

The Shah controls his private fortune of his dynasty in the most unbridled manner; and the remaining members of the family must be satisfied with what he chooses to grant to them. His wives, for example, are said to enjoy so small an income that they can scarcely provide themselves with respectable toilets; and for this reason his harem is by no means popular, many women regarding it as a misfortune to be informed that they are expected or bidden to enter it. And the present Shah is an exception to Oriental rulers in being no great friend of women; he prefers the manly pleasures of the chase to the effeminate pastimes of the harem. And he is very inconstant in his love, for without the least twinge of conscience he divorces himself from one wife to marry another, and many a beautiful Persian woman, who has regarded herself mistress of his heart, has been cruelly driven away to make room for a new favorite. These royal ladies dress very plainly in blue sack-like garments, and are seldom allowed the liberty of leaving the palace; and when they do so the only indication of their presence in the streets of Teheran are the servants that accompany them to guard them from intrusion or the gaze of profane eyes. And when they are divorced it is ordinarily without the least dowry, so that the fate of such a Persian queen is not at all enviable. Doctor Polnik relates the story of two rejected ones who were afterward reduced to marry even among mechanics to obtain a home. These facts are fully fulfilled by the manner in which the Shah treated the wives whom he brought with him as far as Moscow, and then sent back again because they desired to see some of the sights that he was enjoying.

Oriental monarchs, and those of Persia especially, are extremely cruel in executions. Nassir-ed-Din has followed the tradition of his race but once in this respect. The sect of the Babs have given him a good deal of trouble, and some of the adherents even made an attempt against his life. A noted one of these was put to death by the most cruel and revolting torture, and whole families have been executed on mere suspicion of being affiliated with them. The European embassadors at Teheran have endeavored to intercede for these poor wretches, but without success. There has been a great deal of friction between all the embassadors of the foreign powers and the Shah in regard to the manner in which they should appear in his presence. The Russian has at last gained the permission to appear before him booted and spurred, which is considered a great concession.

But the Shah is now destined to grant a great deal more than this, for the lessons that he is learning in Europe he must take home with him, along with the railroads, telegraph and other modern inventions. And, again, he must submit to have the veil lifted from a good deal of his privacy, without banishing from his dominions those who do it, as in the case of several of the attaches to the foreign embassies. He has tried in vain to carry some of his home manners with him on his travels, but finds it difficult to get along with them. It is only in Teheran that he can find giraffes trained to make obeisance to him, and we predict that when he gets home he will no longer feel like a "mountain of light." New York Christian Advocate.

A Slanderer Unmasked.

MR. EDITOR: In a recent number of the Christliche Apologete of Cincinnati, German organ of the Methodist Episcopal Church (North,) Rev. J. C. Hartzell, presiding elder of that same church in New Orleans, writes:

"During the last session of the Louisiana Conference Rev. Ph. Barth was assigned to the German mission-field in the northwest of this State. He extended his mission to Marshall, Texas. Here he was gladly received by the Germans, and he soon succeeded in securing subscriptions to the amount of $500 toward building a church edifice. But it was not long till the spirit of persecution was awakened against him, as the representative of the Northern, or, as we are here called, the Yankee Church, and that was enough to frustrate his plans and undo his work. Those who had subscribed for the church received intimations that if they would not withdraw their names they would be ruined in their business. Under the circumstances Bro. Barth thought it best, for the time being, to abandon the field."

As it appears at first sight to every reader acquainted with our Southern people, so Rev. Daniel Morse, presiding elder of the Marshall district, Methodist Episcopal Church South, brands the foregoing as untrue and slanderous. Let it be remembered that this Ph. Barth is the same man who for a number of years professed allegiance to our church, coming near being hung in Missouri as a rebel by Northern Methodists—so he, at least, repeatedly asserted—and was three years ago apprehended by Bishop Keener, then presiding elder, in the attempt of stealthily steering Soniparu Street German congregation into the haven of the Church North. He had secretly joined the Northern Church, and continued preaching at the place to which he had been assigned but a few months previous, at the session of the Louisiana Conference, Methodist Episcopal Church South, at Shreveport, and at which time he had been readmitted into the itinerancy, having previously been a member of the St. Louis and Tennessee Conferences of our church.

We give these facts to show that Mr. Ph. Barth can act the part of a traitor as well as that of a slanderer. Here is the letter from Bro. Morse:

MARSHALL, TEXAS, July 16, 1873.

REV. L. PARKER, D. D., NEW ORLEANS—My Dear Brother:—After receiving a copy of an article published in the Christliche Apologete, Cincinnati, written by Rev. Ph. Barth, a German missionary of the Methodist Episcopal Church (North,) in which he complains of opposition to consummating his plans in building a church at Marshall, saying that "the spirit of persecution was awakened against him, as the representative of the Northern Methodist Church," etc., I went to Marshall and procured the following facts, which, from the known veracity of the parties consulted, I can indorse as strictly true. The Rev. Ph. Barth was kindly received when he came to Marshall, was tendered the use of the C. P. Church two Sabbaths in each month, which he accepted before he called on the pastor of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, Bro. T. W. Rogers. When Bro. Rogers made his acquaintance he offered him the use of his church and pulpit on Sunday evenings, and at such other times as the pulpit was not occupied with his regular ministrations, assuring him, at the same time, that in the event of his organizing a German Methodist Episcopal Church at Marshall he would oppose no barrier in the way to the German members of his charge uniting with his branch of the church, provided they desired to become members. He further assured Bro. Barth that he wished him success in his mission to the Germans, a portion of our population who had not hitherto been reached, to any considerable extent, by our American preachers. I learned further, upon inquiry, that responsible brethren from the Methodist, Presbyterian and Baptist churches offered to act as trustees, in the event of his having a church built, until he could effect an organization and procure others. He was introduced to the citizens, by members of other churches, with a view of furthering him in carrying out his plans. By this means, aided by these influences, he succeeded in procuring some subscriptions. The only opposition, so far as I can learn, with which he met was from the German element, except one man (who subscribed a mere nominal amount, and was not a member of any church) who requested him to erase his name from the subscription list. Owing more to the stringency in money matters than to any opposition to the building of said church, the prerequisite amount required to be raised, before aid could be received from their Church Extension Society, could not be secured. The mission of the Rev. Ph. Barth, so far as Marshall is concerned, proved a failure, not because, as he asserts, threats were made, or intimations given that "if they would not withdraw their names they would be ruined in their business." Our people are not so easily intimidated. Indeed, if such threats had been made, knowing the people of Marshall as I do, I am of the opinion that outsiders and insiders, including the colored people (of whom there are not a few,) would have rallied at once to the assistance of the persecuted man. The charge of persecution, as he has represented it, is not true, as can easily be established by competent witnesses. I am sorry to know that the good people of Marshall have been misrepresented, and their kindness to Bro. Barth not appreciated. So far from it, he has made their courtesy and kindness to him, during his brief stay among them, an occasion for misrepresentation and slander. When will the preachers operating in the interests of the Northern Methodist Church learn to "do justly, love mercy, and to walk humbly with their God," and speak the truth in their hearts? Not until they stop the machinery which they have set in motion to manufacture sectional hate and political capital. Whenever they come among us as true ministers of Christ, imbued with the spirit of their Master, they will be received and recognized as brethren beloved. If actuated by motives foreign to these, they may not hope to succeed. "Let us have peace," not the sword of political strife.

Your brother in Christ,

DANIEL MORSE,
P. E. of the Marshall district.

Ethics of Christianity.

The superiority of the Christian code is practically acknowledged, and often confessed, in a most significant way, by the mode in which the enemies of Christianity taunt its disciples. When they speak of the vices and corruptions of the heathen they blame, and justly blame, the principles of their vicious systems, and ask how it could be otherwise? When they blame the Christian, the first and the last thing they usually do is to point in triumph to the contrast between his principles and practice. "How much better," say they, "is his code than his conduct!" It is as a hypocrite that they censure him. It is sad for him that it should be so; but it is a glorious compliment to the morality of the New Testament. Its enemies know not how to attack its disciples, except by endeavoring to show that they do act as it bids them. Surely this uniform excellence of the Christian ethics, as compared with other systems, is a peculiarity worth nothing, and utterly incomprehensible upon the hypothesis that it was the unaided work of man. That there are points on which the moral systems of men and nations oscillate is most true; that there should have been certain approximations on many most important subjects was to be expected from the essential identity of human nature in all ages and countries; but their deviations in some point or other—usually in several—from what we acknowledge to be both right and expedient, is equally undeniable. That when such men as Plato and Aristotle tried their hands upon the problem, they should err, while the writers of the New Testament should have succeeded—that these last should do what all mankind besides had in some points or other failed to do—is sufficiently wonderful; that Galilean Jews should have solved the problem is, whether we consider their age, their ignorance or their prepossessions, to me utterly incredible.

Louisiana Institution for the Instruction of the Blind.

We commend the following communication to the attention of our readers. The Rev. P. Lane, principal of the Institute for the Blind, is a Christian gentleman, with the best endowments and qualifications for the position which he occupies.

To the Friends of the Blind, and to all who are True and Brave Enough to Help in Noble Work.

The Louisiana Institution for the Instruction of the Blind is located at Baton Rouge, and is designed to train the young blind of the State to vigorous intelligence, robust morality and self-helping ability. The law establishing the institution requires that it shall be thoroughly organized in its academic, musical and mechanical departments; that it shall be open to all blind persons of sound mind and good moral character, and that the pupils shall receive such instruction as the institution can afford or their capacities permit.

It is further declared that the institution shall not become an asylum or almshouse. It is also provided that to the educational institution there shall be attached an industrial home, in which the adult blind persons may work at a trade and earn their own support. Instruction, board, medicine and medical attendance are gratuitously furnished to all pupils. Indigent blind persons who desire to become pupils must have the fact of indigence certified by the mayor of the town or by a member of the police jury of the parish in which they reside. When provided with such certificate the institution will clothe them. In all other cases it is required that the friends of pupils shall furnish them with a sufficient supply of comfortable clothing.

The school term will commence on the seventeenth of September next. It is intended that at that time the institution shall be thoroughly organized in its academic, musical and mechanical departments, and be ready to do full and efficient work. All blind persons capable of instruction are cordially invited to enter this institution. "The parents and guardians of the blind are earnestly solicited to place their children and wards in this institution; and assurance is given that they will receive that fullness of care and minuteness of attention which a wise kindness can suggest, and which competency and faithfulness can bestow. Parents ought not to permit reluctance to separate from their blind children to deprive such children of the benefits which this institution can confer. To aggravate the evils of blindness by enforced ignorance and uselessness is a monstrous cruelty. It is the right of the child to be allowed means and scope for development into usefulness and worth. It is the duty of the parent to place him where such development is practicable—his duty to the child, to society and to God.

No sectarianism is taught; pupils freely attend the churches of their own choice. All priests, ministers, parochial officers and others are earnestly requested to seek out the young blind and persuade them to enter this institution. Of the four hundred and forty-seven blind persons now in this State it is fair to assume that at least one hundred are qualified to enter this institution, and this one hundred ought to be at the school which the State has established for their benefit.

This circular is issued in the hope that it will awaken an interest proportionate to the magnitude of the subject presented, and evoke a response commensurate to the requirements of the blind and to the generosity of the State. P. LANE,

Handwriting.

Was Chesterfield correct when he said that "every man who has the use of his eyes and his right hand can write whatever hand he pleases?" If so, would Byron have put his burning verse into such a miserable schoolboy scrawl, Emerson write so sprawling a hand, or Napoleon the First have written the worst hand on record—so bad that his letters to Josephine from Germany were sometimes mistaken for maps of the seat of war? No doubt the vileness of his pothooks was aggravated by the speed with which he wrote. Jacob Bryant said of Archdeacon Coxe's hieroglyphics that they could be called neither a hand nor a fist, but a foot, and that a club one. Sydney Smith's hand, with the exception of Jeffrey's, was the worst that Constable's printers had to puzzle out for the Edinburg Review. He himself compared it to the hieroglyphics of a swarm of ants escaping from an ink-bottle, and walking over a sheet of paper without wiping their legs. When his wife inclosed to him an illegible passage from one of his letters from London, containing directions about the management of his farm, and asked for an explanation, he simply returned it with the remark that he must decline ever reading his own handwriting twenty-four hours after he had written it!

Rufus Choate's handwriting could not be deciphered without the help of a pair of compasses and a quadrant. The best specimens look like the hieroglyphics on a Chinese tea-chest. Having been invited on a certain occasion to address a public meeting in New Hampshire, he replied by letter; but the committee, after puzzling for hours over the scrawl, despaired of deciphering it, and were obliged to send a special messenger to learn his answer.

THY WORK IS DONE.

The sunlight sheds its glory
About the city's ways,
And joy and peace and gladness
Catch life beneath its rays.
But in a bleak, cold garret,
What sees the noontide sun?
One working, wan and weary;
Her work is not yet done.

And when the shadows gather
There, by the moon's soft light,
She plies her task. But hearken!
Strange voices of the night!
They seem to whisper round her
"Rest thee, thy crown is won;
Soon shalt thou rest from labor,
Soon shall thy work be done."

And in the morn's glad sunlight
She lay there cold and dead
To the great God who gave it
Her weary soul had fled.
She heard the angels singing
From ways beyond the sun:
"Come home, come home to heaven;
Rest thee, thy work is done!"

My Experience in the Higher Life.

MR. EDITOR: Observing the prominence given the "higher life" in an editorial in your issue of June 5, I ask the privilege of giving a brief sketch of my experience, through your columns, for the benefit of others.

I was brought up under religious influences, being of Methodist parentage. In my eighteenth year I was converted and joined the Methodist Church. The evidence of my conversion was clear and satisfactory; but the day after I fell into doubts about it, and, stopping to reason with the enemy, I yielded to the suggestion that I was under a mistake—that I was deceived. I left the encampment and retired some considerable distance out in the grove and spent a long time in prayer, but realized no further change. The following night I went forward to the communion table, and after discharging the duty, for the first time, of commemorating the death of the blessed Savior, my doubts were all dispelled in reference to my conversion. From that day to this, now some forty years, I have never had a doubt of its genuineness.

I went forward in the discharge of ordinary Christian duties, reading the Scriptures daily, private and public prayer, and the regular attendance on the public means of grace. It was not long, however, before I felt that it was my duty to preach the gospel; but, like many others, I excused myself on the ground of a want of gifts. It was not until seven years after my conversion that I was enabled to take upon myself this very responsible calling, and not until I was brought to it by calls which I could no longer resist nor disregard. In August, 1841, I was licensed to preach.

Being incapacitated for manual labor to any great extent, I turned my attention in my youth to literary pursuits, spending some years in teaching. I was fond of religious literature, and after a few years I became familiar with the doctrines and tenets of Methodism, being particularly attached to the peculiarities of Methodism, her prudential means of grace, such as camp meetings, class meetings, love-feasts; and from the very beginning I entertained a desire to be a true Christian and a thorough Methodist, having but little respect for that shallow, superficial religious experience to be met with in many professed Christians.

I married three years after my conversion. On becoming the head of a family I erected a family altar, around which the daily offerings of praise and thanksgiving were offered ever after. I endeavored to make religion and the service of God an every-day business. I never read a novel, and I abstained from visiting places of amusement, endeavoring to set an example of piety before my family and the world. I have had the satisfaction to see my children, as they have grown up, following my example—becoming members of the church.

I have ever held that it is the privilege of believers to so live as to enjoy the life and comforts of religion daily. I have been accustomed to preach and enforce this as a duty upon all from the pulpit, believing it to be much easier and less difficult to so live than otherwise, in view of the trials and besetments of the Christian life. I suppose I have enjoyed about as much of the life and power of religion as falls to the lot of most persons who neglect the scriptural injunction to "go on unto perfection." But, notwithstanding all this, I ever found my religious experience to be fluctuating—rising and falling like the mercury in a thermometer. I have often been upon the mountain summit, but oftener in the valley, below—never uniform for any great length of time. This was not owing to an unstable turn of mind; for my temperament is quite the opposite—uniform in habits, methodical and regular in everything. In revivals I have always enjoyed a refreshing season, which I was careful to nourish and cultivate by a close and uniform attendance upon the means of grace, private and public. But, despite my efforts, these refreshing seasons would always pass off after a few weeks, when I would involuntarily relapse into a state of comparative indifference in spirituality. A dearth of religious enjoyment never failed to succeed a season of refreshment; and they were usually of much longer continuance—sometimes for many months. With all my efforts for thirty-seven years, I never could reach a point in my religious experience from which there was not a tendency to a spiritual declension after a brief period of a few weeks or months. It seemed to be natural, as it were, and with all my efforts I never could overcome it. During some of those soul-refreshing seasons through which I have passed, so full of religious life and enjoyment, I have thought, and sometimes declared in my heart, that I never would "go back" upon my Savior again in religious indifference. But I ever found my inability to retain this blessed state of religious enjoyment long at a time. Spiritual declension gradually came, and was succeeded by worldly-mindedness and a leaning to the creature. I had my besetments, the sins which so easily beset me, after betraying me into improprieties of speech and temper, grieving the Holy Spirit—anger, vindictiveness, evil-speaking, pride, impatience. But with the light I had I did not expect ever to attain to any degree of spirituality in this life that would free me from these besetments. My only hope and expectation was to overcome them, in some degree, by what is usually termed getting and having more religion.

In my pulpit efforts and labors I always made it a point to obtain divine aid in earnest prayer before going into the pulpit, sometimes continuing in prayer till my physical energies were exhausted as much as the labors of a sermon would produce. I dare not go into the pulpit as an embassador for Heaven without a prayerful preparation for its duties and responsibilities. O it is hard work to preach without the endowment of power from on high! The whole routine of Christian duties is an up-hill business, so to speak, while one is in a half-saved state. They become burdensome and irksome, except now and then when the soul chances to get into the sunshine of spirituality. They are usually performed and attended to as a matter of duty, by which the Lord is served more as a Master than as a Father and a precious Savior, who has loved us and washed us in his own blood. In common with others, this kind of service I performed during these long years of my life, knowing nothing of the blessedness of being "made free from the law of sin."

The Blessings of the Sabbath.

MR. EDITOR: Having read in the ADVOCATE of May 1 an important and practical article on "Sabbath-Keeping," which clearly defines our duty as to its holy observance, and which, when thus practiced, will not only promote our happiness in this life, but will secure to all true and faithful followers of Jesus that Sabbath of eternal rest which is reserved in heaven for them.

How important, then, it is for us often to contemplate and apply this holy type of divine love which was set apart from the beginning for our future happiness. Who that will thus reflect but will feel his heart swell with love and gratitude to the Giver of all good for his ever-unchanging and his heavenly love toward us? How many and varied are the blessings and privileges of this sacred institution in which the great Architect of the universe made himself the recipient, that the example of Omnipotence might thus secure to mankind all of that rest and peace which the command so sacredly enjoins.

"The seventh day is the Sabbath of the Lord thy God; in it thou shalt not do any work." Rest was thus assigned—rest for all, for each, for vigorous manhood, for tranquil age, for the pilgrim of threescore and ten—for him it is rest and joy as he contemplates that Sabbath of heavenly rest which never ends. For joyous childhood this one day in seven is at the present era of Christian advancement a Sabbath of happiness indeed. Its early morn is welcomed by an host throughout all Christendom, where they meet in the sanctuary of worship, and with their united voices swell the anthem for its "happy greeting." The beautiful, the serene Sabbath morning, how calmly it steals upon us after the busy week is over! How much of adoration, as we look abroad at the countless objects of nature, is presented to our view, silently proclaiming to us that, if our minds and hearts are properly and prayerfully directed at this sacred hour, nothing more is requisite to awaken our gratitude, for the Author of all good is himself present, and it is he who now spreads out before our view this prospect of beauty and love.

"Come, bless the Lord, whose love assigns
So sweet a rest to wearied minds,
Provides an antepast of heaven,
And gives this day the food of seven."

The mind of youth, having been trained thus to study the works of his Maker, will be benefited in all coming time. His destiny may be to reside in a far distant land, away from the home of his sunny childhood, where, immersed in the busy throng, he has but little time for reflection; yet amid its perplexities he looks forward with pleasure to the coming Sabbath. Then it is his heart's best affections go out in gratitude for the pious training of his early youth. "Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy;" "My son, if sinners entice thee consent thou not," were the safeguards with which he left the paternal roof and entered upon the broad theater of action. Thus we see the fatherly admonition is heeded, the maternal counsel is treasured up as a shield against all the consequent evils of life, and ever and anon—it may be while in the sanctuary of God—there steals a calm within his breast which is to him a pledge of glorious and happy rest.

Let parents, then, not be weary in well-doing, for we shall reap if we faint not. Let us who are the favored recipients of Sabbath training and teaching ever be ready to assist in the advancement of its institutions. Let us study the sacred writings in order to more fully understand our obligations and privileges in regard to the Sunday school, which is now claiming the united attention of the Christian world as one of the strongest braces which upholds and sustains the great fabric of the Christian church as it exists at the present day. Then let those of us who have children far away from our own altars and churches be diligent in this cause, feeling assured that as we instruct others, so will the good Lord influence the hearts of strangers to do likewise unto ours. Let us, then, be prompt to meet in our respective school-rooms on Sunday morning, and there, with pastor, pupils and teachers, unite in singing:

"Come, let us join, with one accord,
In hymns around the throne;
This is the day our risen Lord
Hath made and called his own.

"This is the day that God hath blest,
The brightest of the seven—
Type of that everlasting rest
The saints enjoy in heaven."

Unity.

God is unity; and though in accommodation to our limited understanding this unity is presented to us as embracing many attributes, these all focalize and fill out, so to speak, the perfection of Deity. As in his nature, so in his acts do we see the same unity manifested. If we turn to the plan of salvation for man we behold a perfect harmony between it and the perfect God. Man trampled under foot a law reflecting the perfection of God, and from this act one of two things must result—either the eternal destruction of man, or an amend equal in its perfectness to the perfection of the violated law. Man, the sinner, could not meet the demand; but Christ, the sinless one, could; and because his sacrifice of himself met the holy requirements of the law, and honored its unity and perfection, God was able to justify the ungodly, and the law retain its perfect character.

Every act of favor, under this divine method, extended to the sinner accords with the unity of God, for every attribute is honored. In the exercise of faith we are required to conform to this unity, for the objects of faith are units. They originate in and abide in God; they are reflexes of his person and essence. Our faith must therefore conform to his character, and move in harmony with his will. Less than this, on our part, bars us from being hid with God in Christ.

Revelation is an object of faith. Now suppose we receive parts thereof and reject others, can it be said that we rise in our faith to the standard of God's requirements? When we read, "be not conformed to this world," and in the face of this divine command we abate not one jot in our pursuit of worldly honor, and ape the world's folly in dress, and yield to its rules of conduct, and excuse and palliate the world's idolatry, do we manifest a true faith in the teachings of that word of revelation which, we teach, came from God and truly reflects his being?

The Trinity of God is a subject of faith. If denied, is not the doubter out of harmony with God, and a despiser of his word? Again, God has ordained certain ordinances which are to be observed, and practically employed or used; are or can these ordinances in any way be opposed to his unity, or can they be administered otherwise than in perfect keeping with his unity? As they are typical of his divine mode of conferring, granting or administering spiritual blessings and gifts, should not their mode of administration in his earthly kingdom correspond with his revealed mode of administration?

John says: "And there are three that bear witness in earth—the Spirit and the water and the blood; and these three agree in one."—First John v, 8. If this be so—and who dare gainsay it?—how important does it become that we should in all things conform our doctrine, our practice and our mode of life to this oneness taught in revelation, redemption, grace and ordinances.

Palliatives never cure. Decision and specific action overcome difficulties and settle modes of action, and often defects of thought. The want of this quick apprehension of the virtue of decision and action has led the church of God over many a weary period of darkness, and lodged in her articles of faith much of superstition and error; and as in the past, so it may be in the future. God reveals duty in the clearest manner, and this revelation is in keeping with his unity: therefore, when we perceive his revealed will, our duty is to walk in harmony with that will, human views and antiquity to the contrary.

Class Meetings.

MR. EDITOR: During the session of a District Conference in Alabama Bishop Doggett urged, and the ministers present unanimously resolved, that class meetings should be revived. This seemed to all interested in the welfare of the church a movement in the right direction, though it is to be feared that it cannot be carried out successfully. The present generation, in some localities, seem to have forgotten, if they ever knew, the design of such meetings. Many professing Christians, intelligent enough on other matters, think that those who attend them go to confess their sins as the Catholics do. Confession of sin on such occasions is not unscriptural, for we are commanded to "confess our faults one to another."

Others are accused of going to tell how good they are. Perhaps this is confounded with the command: "Be always ready to give to every man a reason for the hope within you." But as iron sharpeneth iron, and heart answereth to heart, so a class meeting, rightly conducted, is well adapted to solve any doubts as to the validity of our title to a heavenly home.

A traveler in a strange country not only consults the "travelers' guide," but often asks direction of other wayfarers. So may pilgrims on the great thoroughfare of life converse with profit and pleasure on the country to which they are going, and the probability of their being in the way leading thereto. When Bunyan's pilgrims to the Celestial City were on enchanted ground, Christian said to Hopeful: "To sleep here is death; let us keep ourselves awake by talking together;" and in reply to the question, "On what shall we talk?" the answer was, "Let us begin where Christ first began with us." Such a relation seldom fails to put the heart in a proper state.

In such meetings, however, a "leader" not eminently spiritual is worse than none, for he will throw an awful constraint on the assembly, and formal dullness will be the inevitable result. In vain will one not having the love of God in his own heart endeavor to inspire confidence in others. He may clap his hands to express joy, but the effects of the Holy Spirit never have been and never will be successfully counterfeited. Often in his class there are earnest but timid hearts longing to give expression to their love for the Savior, while more experienced Christians are hungering after something higher than that to which they have already attained, and the language of their hearts is: "Oh, that we had some one to guide us!" Too often is this clamor of the soul after its rightful King, even Jesus, satisfied with fanaticism; but we love to think it a harbinger of the latter-day glory, when the kingdoms of the world shall be given to their lawful Sovereign. Whether class meetings will ever be made by God an instrumentality in hastening the fulfillment of this glorious promise remains to be tested.

East Mississippi Female College,

MERIDIAN, MISSISSIPPI.

MR. EDITOR: This institution closed its second term, July 15. The exercises were highly satisfactory to the patrons and friends.

Measles invading the school some two months ago, the attendance was reduced to less than half the usual number. On this account Prof. Rice decided that he would make no attempt at display in the closing exercises. The commencement sermon and literary address were omitted; two days were deemed sufficient for examination, and one evening for reading essays and the musical entertainment.

Nevertheless, it was manifest in the examination of classes, in the essays of the young ladies, in the musical performances, and in the finely-executed paintings adorning the college walls, that great progress had been made by the pupils, and that the instruction and mental training in this school are of the most thorough and satisfactory character. It will be regarded by the friends of education a fortunate circumstance that this substantial sort of work has been inaugurated in our new college in the beginning of its history. It is the purpose of the trustees and faculty to maintain the standard of thoroughness.

Prof. Rice, after doing a noble work in organizing and conducting to success this institution of learning, retires from the school to return to his old home in Florence, where he will have charge of the State Normal School of Alabama. Rev. J. W. Adkisson, of the Missouri Conference, succeeds to the presidency of East Mississippi College. He is here. He is highly recommended by his brethren in Missouri. He has had years of experience at the head of Shelby High School, Shelbyville, Missouri. His scholarship is unquestioned. He is possessed of qualities fitting him eminently for the position he has accepted.

The prospects of East Mississippi Female College are more cheering than at any previous period. Its steady growth, its ninety matriculates of the last term, the proficiency of its pupils and the character of its teachers excite to greater zeal and confidence the friends of the school. The buildings, it is apprehended, will not be adequate to the demands of another term. The trustees are maturing measures, however, to provide additional room. Meridian is a fine location for the college—in a high, healthy region, accessible from all quarters, not a place of great extravagance, and possessing religious and social advantages.

Prof. Adkisson has a full faculty, and will open the next term on the second of September next.

Whitworth Female College.

MR. EDITOR: The late commencement exercises of this flourishing institution came off the last week of June and first day of July. The crowd attending them was large—immense at times.

The faculty is large, numbering fourteen in all the departments. They have been devoted to their work, and energetic in its discharge. The progress of the pupils, as evinced by their examinations, essays and compositions, and musical performances, is evidence of their skill as teachers.

The usual English course of colleges is taught, embracing the higher mathematics, and Latin, Greek, French, drawing, painting, needlework and music. The catalogue shows that fifty-six were in the preparatory department, and one hundred and forty-five in the college department. Fifteen young ladies graduated to the degree of mistress of English literature.

Among the items of interest, and somewhat novel in the South, was a debate by six young ladies of the Calliopean Society on the question: Ought the elective franchise be extended to woman? I doubt whether any six young men of any college would have shown their powers of debate to better advantage than did the young ladies on that occasion. May they cultivate those powers.

During the year President Johnson has erected a new two-story building for the music and art departments and for the literary society. The Rev. H. F. Johnson is doing a noble work in the cause of education. His attention, labors and zeal in this good work deserve the success which he has achieved, and entitle him to the confidence and patronage of the public.

ONE OF THE VISITING COMMITTEE.

Not long ago the old hippopotamus at the London Zoological Gardens suffered much from a decayed tooth. In former times he would have been shot, as was poor "Chunee," the elephant at Exeter 'change. Mr. Bartlett, superintendent of the garden, however, determined to pull out the tooth. He ordered the blacksmith to make a pair of "tooth forceps," and a tremendous pair they were. The "bite" of the forceps just fitted the tooth of the hippo. By skillful management Bartlett managed to seize Master Hippo's tooth as he put his head through the bars. The hippo, roaring frightfully, pulled one way, Bartlett and the keepers pulled the other, and at last out came the tooth, and Hippo soon got well again.

Obituaries.

TATUM BORING, son of Joseph T. (deceased) and Sielly A. Boring, was born in Claiborne parish, Louisiana, November 8, 1851, and died at the residence of his mother, near Belleyue, St. Landry parish, Louisiana, July 9, 1873, of congestive chills, after an illness lasting eight days.

Bro. Tatum removed here, with his widowed mother and others of the family, in January, 1871, and since his residence here united himself with the Methodist Episcopal Church South, in which church he was dedicated to God in his infancy. Of him we can truly say: "He was beloved by all who knew him." He was a most affectionate and dutiful son, and of deep piety; in a word, he was a Christian. The blessed Bible was his constant companion, especially during his sickness, and so interested was he in the word that when unable to read himself he would request one of the family to sit by his bedside and read to him. And thus it is not surprising that he showed such indescribable patience during his severe illness. His trust was in Jesus, and therefore his end was peace.

MRS. LOCKEY ANN BAKER, daughter of James and Lockey Ann Wynn, was born in Warren county, Georgia, October 17, 1837, and died near Kymulga, Talladega county, Alabama, June 29, 1873.

She was married to Mr. William Baker January 30, 1855. Some six months before she died she made a profession of religion, and on the twenty-sixth of June was baptized and received into the Methodist Episcopal Church South, after which she received the sacrament of the Lord's Supper. She talked freely about her spiritual state, and said if it were God's will to take her she was willing and prepared to go. A short time before she died she called her husband, children and friends around her bed and bid them, one by one, farewell; after which she was quiet for a short while; then her spirit, without a struggle, passed into the world of bliss. Mrs. Baker was much beloved by her neighbors and friends, and will be missed very much by all the neighborhood. We deeply sympathize with the bereaved husband and friends. Mrs. Baker had been for years a constant reader of the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

MR. J. A. T. MASON died at his residence, near Pine Ridge, Mississippi, May 7, 1873. As the sun had just calmly set in the West our brother's spirit took its flight quietly from us.

He was converted in Jackson, Mississippi. The evidence of a change at that time was very satisfactory, and his emotions so great that he shouted the praises of God. These joyous feelings ever after were cherished by him, and in the social meetings of the church he often gave vent to the rapturous joys of his soul. He served the church in the capacity of trustee, steward, Sunday school superintendent and class-leader. In sickness, as in health, he delighted in the society of Christian friends, and in meetings for prayer. At first the thought of leaving his family, who needed his care and advice, so troubled him that he had a hard struggle at that point, and he also dreaded the pain of dying, and often asked his friends to pray that he might die easy. Both prayers were answered. He was enabled to give up all, and rejoiced in the prospect of so soon getting to his heavenly home. When the messenger came he passed away gently, peacefully, without a groan or a struggle.

W. WADSWORTH.

MRS. OLIVIA J. SIMS, widow of the late Rev. Louis A. Sims, and daughter of the late Rev. Stephen Ellis, died, at her home near Franklinton, Washington parish, Louisiana, June 30, 1873, aged forty-one years.

Trained up, by pious parents, in the way she should go, at an early age she chose religion's ways and sought the better part. From the time of her marriage till her husband's death she followed the fortunes and shared the joys and sorrows of an itinerant Methodist minister. When left to tread alone the rough paths of the world, with three children mainly depending on her for support, trusting in him who promiseth to be "a father to the fatherless and friend to the widow," she cheerfully performed life's duties and patiently met its trials. For more than twelve months previous to her death she was the subject of severe affliction, which she bore with Christian meekness and patience. Conscious, for many months previous to her death, of the approach of the "last enemy," his coming brought no terrors. Her last message to absent friends was: "Tell them I am going home to sin no more." Her end was peace. As a summer cloud fades away, and a wave dies along the shore, so sank her weary soul to rest. "Blessed are the dead that die in the Lord."

"Blessed, for the Lamb shall feed them,
All their tears shall wipe away,
To the living fountains lead them
Till the Father's perfect day."

TRIBUTE OF RESPECT.

The students of Centenary College of Louisiana met in the college chapel, July 2, 1873—W. L. Tilery, chairman, and C. G. Steadman, secretary—and adopted the following resolutions:

Whereas, It has seemed best to our heavenly Father, in his all-wise providence, to take from us our beloved fellow-students, W. THOMAS BOYARD and EDWARD W. HINES; therefore, be it

Resolved, That as students of Centenary College of Louisiana, while we humbly bow to Heaven's decree, we can but express our deepest sorrow at the death of our companions, who are thus cut down in the bloom of youthful manhood.

Resolved, That we respectfully tender to the families and friends of our loved but departed companions the expressions of our sincere condolence and profound sympathy, assuring them that they do not mourn alone, and praying that he who doeth all things well, who is the only sure stay of the afflicted, may give them strength and consolation in their hours of affliction.

Resolved, That as a tribute of love and respect to the memory of our deceased fellow-students we will wear a badge of crape for thirty days.

DIED, at the parsonage in Pleasant Hill, Louisiana, July 14, 1873, Mrs. ELENOR BRADLEY, in the seventy-ninth year of her age.

My dear, loving mother was born in Greene county, Kentucky, January 15, 1795. She was the devoted daughter of a Revolutionary father and mother named Boyliss. She professed religion at about the age of fifteen years, and joined the Baptist Church, but finally preferred and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, where she spent most of her life very happily, and where she triumphantly died. She was married, about her twenty-first year, to George Bradley, originally of South Carolina, by whom she had ten children, three only of whom survive her. She was an old-fashioned mother, and hence knew but little of the need of physicians and medicines till near the close of her life. Her example before her children and others was a great fact in favor of Jesus and heaven. All were impressed that her "hoary head was a crown of glory, being found in the way of righteousness." She spoke of her departure calmly and with great confidence; said that she had lived all her life in view of that hour, and was victorious over the fear of death. No murmur escaped her lips, although her attacks at times (heart disease) were very severe and protracted. In this way she gently closed her eyes in sleep, till the resurrection of the just.

Her son, J. E. B.

W. W. MILLSAPS, ESQ., died, at his residence in Hazlehurst, Mississippi, July 6, 1873, in the sixty-ninth year of his age.

He was the son of William and Rebecca Millsaps; born in the State of South Carolina; removed with his parents to Mississippi; was married to Miss Mary Wright, and settled in Copiah county, and engaged in the pursuits of agriculture, in which calling he was very successful, and succeeded in gathering around him a considerable fortune. He was powerfully, happily converted to God while alone in the woods. He joined what is now called Pleasant Valley church, in which communion he remained until his death.

Bro. Millsaps, helped and encouraged by his pious wife, reared his family for God and the church. Two of his sons were ministers of the gospel, and all the living are members of the church, and striving for the "better land," and those that have died went in great triumph.

God in his providence saw fit to send upon him many heavy bereavements and afflictions. He was called upon to give up the wife of his youth and the mother of his children. In a few months after, while bowed down with sorrow on account of his great loss, a dispatch came that his son, Rev. W. R. Millsaps, of the Mississippi Conference, had died with yellow fever. This was a terrible stroke and seemed at first more than he could bear, but divine grace was given him and he raised his eyes to heaven and said: "Though he slay me, yet will I trust in him." He was called upon to give up three other sons, just starting out in life, with the promise of usefulness and success.

It was my privilege to visit him often, and talk with him about his prospects for a better life, after he became too feeble to attend church; with other friends had the sacrament of the Lord's Supper several times with him, which he always enjoyed, for he delighted to dwell upon the atonement made by Jesus.

He possessed fine social qualities and conversational powers, and enjoyed the society of his friends. It would be considered a very remarkable omission, even in this short sketch, to pass unnoticed one of his most prominent traits—his hospitality—to which, however, I only refer because in him more than almost in all others it rose to the dignity of a Christian virtue. His house was nearly always full of family and religious friends. Few such examples remain among us of such free, genial hospitality.

His death just at the time was rather unexpected to his friends. He was convalescent from a severe attack, and was able to sit up and walk about the room. Suddenly taken worse, he became irrational and died in a short time.

Although no triumphant words fell from his lips, yet God delights in the happiness of his children, and esteems their death precious. God shall be their sufficient, their eternal portion. This crowns the whole, for, whether in life, in death or in eternity, it will ever be true: "The best of all is, God is with us." May God prepare each one of us, dear reader, to die the death of the righteous, that our last end may be like his.

AFTER a voyage of fifty-two thousand miles, taking four hundred and ninety days' sailing, the British ship Zealous has just returned to England. She was dispatched in 1865, by the way of the Straits of Magellan, for the Pacific, to become the flagship of the squadron. She is believed to be the largest ship that ever passed through the intricate straits, and, in passing, ran upon a rock off the land of Fuego. After being relieved from duty in the Pacific she proceeded homeward by the way of the Cape of Good Hope.

"JAMES," said a young wife to her husband, a few days after marriage, "you were honest enough to tell me that the chimney smoked, but why didn't you tell me that you smoked yourself?"

MY MOTHER KNELT IN PRAYER.

BY THOMAS M'KELLAR.

Once, in my boyhood's gladsome day,
My spirits light as air,
I wandered to a lonely room,
Where mother knelt in prayer.

Her hands were clasped in fervency;
Her lips gave forth no sound;
Yet, awe-struck, solemnly I felt
I stood on holy ground.

My mother, all entranced in prayer,
My presence heeded not;
And reverently I turned away
In silence from the spot.

An orphan wanderer, far from home
In after-time I strayed;
But God has kept me, and I feel
He heard her when she prayed.

BE STRONG.

Take thy staff, O pilgrim!
Haste thee on thy way;
Let the morrow find thee
Farther than to-day.

If thou seek thy city
Of the golden street,
Pause not on thy pathway—
Rest not, weary feet.

In the heavenly journey
Press with zeal along;
Resting will but weary,
Running make thee strong.

Ministers and Preaching.

We make the following extract from a powerful address recently delivered in England by the learned and eloquent Rev. Henry Allon, D. D.:

The criterion of preaching, he said, was not its intellectual force or exact truth or artistic beauty, but its living result. The workman was to be judged not by his tools, but by his product. Still there were constant changes in social conditions which affected the exercise of preaching. Much of the ignorant feeling which surrounded all things pertaining to religion had passed away. Men were no longer disposed to listen to a preacher simply because he was a preacher, and to receive his teachings simply because he uttered them. Thank God, this was gone, even although some wholesome reverence might have gone with it. Preaching must now, far more than heretofore, justify itself by its own intrinsic qualities. The preacher must stand upon the authorization of his work, not of his office. He might not hope to gather or retain hearers by mechanical sermon-making or perfunctory preaching. Men who were raised intellectually to the level of the literature of the day rightly demanded intelligence and power in their religious teachers. The work of ministers now might be more arduous than that of the ministers of past generations; but there was no help for it. They would succeed in the future only by their intrinsic merits, their spiritual goodness, truth and earnestness, and by the degree in which they could inspire with these the life of their hearers and of society. The press and education had largely superseded the teaching functions of the pulpit. They need no longer preach theological treatises as the only means of theological knowledge. Through a thousand literary channels theological knowledge was acquired, and they were freer to apply theology to its religious ends; they might assume more knowledge, conduct their practical arguments along a higher level, and point their appeals with a wider and richer reference; so that instead of sermons becoming more timid in rhetorical appeal by reason of their freedom from metaphysical arguments and critical exegesis, they might be less so. A richer body of thought was held in solution, the conscience was urged by more complicated forces, the rhetoric was charged with a finer combination of thought and passion; a more affluent literature, intuition, a higher element of passion itself entered into every sermon. Their ministry, moreover, was not merely that of the preacher; it was that of the pastor, and, still more arduous, that of the congregational pastor. No ministry demanded qualifications so high and varied. It was not only the first duty, but the greatest difficulty of a minister to "take heed unto himself." Amid the literary ardors and emulous strivings of student life especially, personal godliness had to maintain a sore struggle, and often to suffer a lamentable waste. And yet it was the fundamental condition of ministerial calling, sanctifying by its presence or invalidating by its absence every other qualification. Above everything else it determined ministerial efficiency. The ministry was not a profession the duties of which might be discharged by any person of adequate ability; it was a spiritual influence which only fervid sanctity could constitute. Their work was not merely to teach men godliness, but to make them godly. One very common cause of ministerial inefficiency was an inadequate estimate of ministerial work. Were men preparing for the ministry or consecrated to it adequately conscious of their great vocation, indolent habit, flippant thought, loose conversation, undevout life, egotistical self-sufficiency, the mournful lack of spiritual sensibility, humbleness, tenderness, prayerful solicitude, such as was sometimes seen, would be morally impossible. The ministry was regarded with too much of professional feeling as an office to which mere faculty and a discerning church had called them. It was an ill augury to see the indications of such feeling in a young man. It not only augured a distempered mind; it foreboded a disappointing, yes, an appalling issue. It was bad enough to find cold officialness, ignorant self-sufficiency, unspiritual levity, and self-indulgent indolence in more advanced life; but to see these in the very novitiate of God's consecrated minister, where one might expect the trembling solicitude of a first calling, and the fervent consecration of a first love; to see confidence before experience warranted it, and indifference before habit had wrought it, was ever a terrible augury for the future. Every position in life had its peculiar moral perils, and student life was no exception. There was peril in the entireness, intensity and monotony of study. They held intercourse with the world's thought rather than with its heart or work. For awhile the Bible to them was a theology rather than a religion. Might they not so study the science of spiritual life as to forget its experience—supersede religion by theology, become insensible to the force of truth just in proportion as they became familiar with its philosophy? so pluck the tree of knowledge as to forfeit the tree of life? There was peril again in optional hours and measure of work, lest giving way to indolence they be unfaithful to the great purpose for which they studied at all. The liberty of college life might be abused to a luxurious indolence or frivolous reading or laborious trifling. They were to be teachers of God's great revelations to men. Could they think that a minimum reading for classes and examinations would sufficiently qualify them for this? Could a rapid, superficial college life be suddenly transformed into grave pastoral experience and matured spiritual power? Only once in a human life was preparation-time given. The habits they formed now would be the abiding form of their ministerial character. Did ministerial history furnish an instance in which the promise of the student had not been fulfilled in the minister? Let then their appreciation of college life be high, their purpose serious, their pursuit of it earnest. The chief preparation for the ministry was character, a devout spirit, a tender sensibility, a quick sympathy, a self-sacrificing zeal. Spiritual truth could be ministered only by spiritual sympathies.

Courage in the Pulpit.

Evidently a false standard has been set up in regard to what constitutes true courage in the pulpit. An able preacher discoursed upon the fashionable sins and amusements of the day. An admiring hearer remarked, It evinced great courage in the preacher to present such a sermon to that congregation. Doubtless it did. But probably not half so much as it would to so wield the sword of the Spirit as to slay the pride of the human heart. To ordinary preachers there are no themes which demand courage, in presenting and enforcing them, like those which reveal the lost and ruined state of man without grace. When Thomas Chalmers preached, "He that believeth not shall be damned," it was thought that he would not dare to utter such a doctrine before a refined audience without making an apology.

Much depends on temperament, past social position and various other things. Some men never know fear; others are distrustful, diffident always. Some enjoy to bit right and left—the flutter in the congregation is perfectly charming; others have such tender sensibilities that it becomes a positive pain to them to present truths which they know to be unpalatable to their hearers. The great apostle makes such admissions as go to show that even he did not escape the bondage of fear; while Peter seems never to need such confessions. It was not grace but nature that made the difference.

It is the cross of Christ which awakens the enmity of the human heart always, everywhere; and to preach that cross faithfully and fully ever has challenged and ever will challenge the loftiest and truest courage of the preacher. There are those claiming to be men of eminent courage, who dare not preach the doctrines of sin and salvation as Christ preached, as Paul preached. Who would not stand up and proclaim in the audience of the people: "He that believeth not the Son shall not see life, but the wrath of God abideth on him?" Many a man is very bold in preaching "temperance" who dares not speak of the "judgment to come." There are always circumstances such as appeal to a man's ambition and vanity when preaching on the topics of the day, which are not offered in the direction of plain, pungent exhibitions of truths directly drawn from the doctrines of grace. The world is disposed to attribute great talents to the former, and who does not exalt in the thought of being talented, while the latter seems indeed to be of the nature of foolishness, if not, indeed, the genuine article. It needs much grace to be regarded a fool for Christ's sake.

It is extremely unfortunate for the ministry and the people too that this false view of courage in the pulpit is abroad. What the people need more than anything else is to be made conscious of the great damning sin of rejecting the Lord who has bought them, and what the ministry needs is not a reputation for courage derived from the presentation of great sermons on the topics of the day, but from fidelity to every trust committed to them. If ever the ministry needed to call upon the church as Paul did upon the Ephesian Christians to intercede, and the church needed heartily to respond, it is now; "that utterance may be given unto me, that I may open my mouth boldly to make known the mystery of the gospel, that therein I may speak boldly as I ought to speak."—New York Observer.

Castor-Oiling.

There are but few who will not appreciate the subjoined sketch of one of childhood's ills: With all our vaunted discoveries we have never been able to produce an agreeable article of castor-oil or a specific for sea-sickness. Breathes there a man with soul so dead that he does not recollect the castor-oiling which his poor machine used to undergo at stated periods of his youth?

To castor-oil a child of two to seven years of age requires three or four strong women, a spoon, a magnum bottle of the fluid, a lump of sugar, a towel, a jumping-jack and a seraphic temper. The first motion is to endeavor to ring in the medicine on the unsuspecting babe, thinly disguised in milk. This maneuver failing, you parley with the enemy and attempt to corrupt its infantile integrity with bribes of pa's gold watch, imperial revenues of small change, and Hesperides of small oranges. After having tempted it thrice to put the spoon of Tantalus to its lips, it refuses point blank to touch the nasty thing. Thereupon your surcharged indignation finds vent in corporal chastisement of the rebellious infant. It howls. Peace being restored, you bring up reinforcements, and, diplomacy having failed, determine to accept nothing but unconditional surrender, and prepare to march at once upon the enemy's works. A grand combined attack is made. The left wing firmly holds the child's hands, the right wing pinches its nose so as to compel it to open its mouth, into which the center pours a deadly fire from the spoon.

Meanwhile the reserve holds up a lump of sugar, commiseratingly saying: "Poor 'ittl tootsy pootsy, was it nussy medicine, eh?" and keeps the towel ready. The baby yells and chokes, the young mother, afraid of killing it, lets go of its nose, the infant, catching breath, discharges the whole dose upon her, and rubs all the front breadths of her black silk, and follows up the advantage by so heartbroken a yell that the attacking party surrenders at discretion, and calls it a poor, injured, mamsie's own toofsens, and it won't take nuy nassy cassy-oil, if it don't want to. A treaty of peace is then ratified, whereby the infant is ceded immunity from castor-oil and an ample indemnity in lollipops, and then the young mother enters into a war with the infant's grandmother, who vigorously reprehends the weakness exhibited in dealing with children nowadays. People have tried all sorts of expedients—take it in milk, in soda water, from a hot spoon, every way. But no later Franklin has ever been able to overcome and annihilate the nastiness of castor-oil. It has a sluggish, cold, aperient look about it, like an ill-omened pool in a deadly swamp. It uncoils itself into the fatal spoon like a coiled rattlesnake. It tastes like molten graveyards, and one's gorge rises at it, as if it were one of Mrs. Woodhull's lectures. But the feeling, when it has been achieved, is that one's inside is full of earthworms and corkscrews.

Pre-Eminence of Prayer.

Prayer hath a two-fold pre-eminence above all other duties whatsoever, in regard of the universality of its influence and opportunity for its performance. The universality of its influence: As every sacrifice was to be seasoned with salt, so every undertaking and every affliction of the creature must be sanctified with prayer; nay, as it showeth the excellency of gold that it is laid upon silver itself, so it speaketh the excellency of prayer, that not only natural and civil, but even religious and spiritual actions are overlaid with prayer. We pray not only before we eat or drink our bodily nourishment, but also before we feed on the bread of the word and the bread in the sacrament. Prayer is requisite to make every providence and every ordinance blessed to us; prayer is needful to make our particular callings successful. Prayer is the guard to secure the fort-royal of the heart; prayer is the porter to keep the door of the lips; prayer is the strong hilt which defendeth the hands: prayer perfumes every relation; prayer helps us to profit by every condition; prayer is the chemist that turns all into gold; prayer is the master workingman: if that be out of the way, the whole trade stands still, or goeth backward. What the key is to the watch, that prayer is to religion; it winds it up and sets it going. It is before other duties in regard of opportunity for its performance. A Christian cannot always hear or always read or always communicate, but he may pray continually. No place, no company can deprive him of this privilege. If he be on the top of a house with Peter, he may pray; if he be in the bottom of the ocean with Jonah, he may pray; if he be walking in the field with Isaac, he may pray when no eye seeth him; if he be waiting at table with Nehemiah, he may pray when no ear heareth him. If he be in the mountains with our Savior, he may pray; if he be in the prison with Paul, he may pray; wherever he is, prayer will help him to find God out. Every saint is God's temple; "and he that carrieth his temple about him," saith Austin, "may go to prayer when he pleaseth." Indeed to a Christian every house is a house of prayer, every closet a chamber of presence, and every place to which he comes an altar whereon he may offer the sacrifice of prayer.

THERE is danger lest there be an attempt to solve the problem which our Lord said cannot be solved, namely: the combining together of devotion to Christ and to mammon. He says there may be an apparent devotion to the faith, yet still they will hold to the one and despise the other. And here is the danger: holding the faith in outward profession, while our heart is given to the world. Now the true safeguard us to these dangers which beset us is the maintenance of a single eye—a pure motive. If we ask ourselves these questions: Why should I not do this or that? Where is the harm in it?—if these are the questions we ask, then I think it is hardly probable that the solution will be truly a Christian life. The questions we are to ask are these: What can I do most for the honor of my dear Lord? What is the best for me to do in this short life, which can lead many to that Lord who redeemed me? The mind to put the question is, after all, the solution of the question. Our thought is not to be careful to go as near the dangerous line as we can without crossing it, but rather to be sure we are so safely distant from the dangerous line that there is no danger of our crossing it at all. The true mark of a Christian life, after all, is the mark of self-denial. This is the test to which we should put our mode of living. Has it the marks of the crucifixion of Christ? Here I am reminded of one of the legends of the middle ages. They give us no guidance in their literal expression, but legends often have the truth expressed in a most poetical manner, and be of as true benefit as a poem. It is said of St. Martin of Tours that once he was meditating in his cell, when there appeared to him a form radiant with beauty, bearing on his head a jeweled crown, with a countenance glorious and persuasive, and with a manner so austere that it seemed to require homage and love. The heavenly vision said to St. Martin: "I am Christ; worship me!" And, the story goes on to say, the saint looked upon this glorious and beautiful form in silence; that he gazed upon the hands, and then said: "Where is the print of the nails?" The vision vanished, and St. Martin was left alone in his cell, and he knew it was the tempter. Now let me ask you to turn in thought sometimes to this legend, and when some things overtake you about which there might be doubt, and you are not quite sure whether it be Christian or not, then with St. Martin look hard at these attractions in silence, and ask for the print of the nails.—Dean Howson.

Story of an Oriental Miser.

A miser, living in Kufa, had heard that in Bassora there dwelt a miser more miserly than himself, to whom he might go to school, and from whom he might learn much. He forthwith journeyed thither, and presented himself to the great master as an humble commencer in the art of avarice, anxious to learn, and under him to become a student.

"Welcome," said the miser of Bassora; "we will straightway go to the market to make some purchases."

They went to the baker.

"Hast thou good bread?"

"Good, indeed, my masters, and fresh and soft as butter."

"Mark this, friend," said the man of Bassora to the one of Kufa; "butter is compared with bread as being the better of the two; as we can only consume a small quantity of that it will also be cheaper, and we shall therefore act more wisely, and sayingly too, in being satisfied with butter."

They went to the butter merchant, and asked if he had good butter.

"Good, indeed, and flavory and fresh as the finest olive oil," was the merchant's satisfactory answer.

"Mark this also," said the host to his guest; "oil is compared to the best butter, and therefore by much ought to be preferred to the latter."

They next went to the oil vendor.

"Have you good oil?"

"The very best quality; white and transparent as water."

"Mark that too," said the miser of Bassora to the one of Kufa; "by this rule water is the very best. Now at home I have a pailful, and most hospitably therewith will I entertain thee."

And, indeed, on his return home nothing but water did he place before his guest, because they learned that water was better than oil, oil better than butter, and butter better than bread.

"Heaven be praised!" said the miser of Kufa. "I have not journeyed this long distance in vain."

THE CHRISTIAN'S HOME.—We make our best use of this world when we regard it as the basis from which to survey the other. Without heaven poetry could have no existence. The key-note of the poetic is future perfection, and the heaven of the Christian is the highest perfection. I know of no better illustration of these truths than a simple expression which fell from the lips of a godly friend of mine. Through perseverance and industry he had been able to build himself a house. But his chief boast was that from his fireside he could see his father's house on the distant hill. "No matter the weather," said he, "whether winter or summer, spring or autumn—no matter the sky, whether cloudless or stormy—when I sit by my east window, father's roof and chimney-tops, the gleam of his lamp at night, are always visible to my sight." His words contain the philosophy of life, and inclose, as in a nutshell, the principles of holy living. Enviable—yea, thrice enviable—is the man who can pierce the clouds of social darkness which surround our earthly homes, and see his Father's house, with its many mansions, in the distant heaven.

IN THE Bank of England is a curious machine, into which sovereigns are poured, like grain into a mill. As they pass on, one by one, all that are light weight are thrown to one side, those of full weight to another, so that the distinction is made with unerring certainty. So will it be at the last day. No sin will pass the great Judge undetected. He knows the secrets of all hearts. Whatever has lain undiscovered by men will stand forth in naked reality then. Counterfeit Christianity and spurious philanthropy will be exposed.

SHERIDAN was much annoyed in the House of Commons by a member who kept constantly crying: "Hear, hear!" The witty orator described a fellow who wanted to play rogue, but had only sense enough to play fool, and exclaimed with great emphasis: "Where shall we find a more foolish knave or a more knavish fool than he?" "Hear, hear!" shouted the troublesome member. Sheridan turned round, and, thanking him for the prompt information, sat down amid a general roar of laughter.

THE genius of the gospel is liberality. Itself the most amazing instance of the divine munificence, its advent into a human soul is marked by an instantaneous expansion of its feelings and affections. When it comes in its fullness and tells in its power, the churl becomes bountiful, the miser turns out a philanthropist, and the sluggard issues forth a sleepless evangelist.—Hamilton.

THE wages that sin bargains for with the sinner are life, pleasure and profit; but the wages it pays him with are death, torment and destruction. He that would understand the falsehood and deceit of sin must compare its promises and its payments together.

Religious Intelligence.

IT IS EXPECTED that the new Protestant Episcopal chapel in Rome will be completed for the opening service on Christmas day.

THE ceremony of washing the feet was this year observed with all due form at Vienna by the Emperor and Empress of Austria, says the Catholic Review, very approvingly, as though it were an eminently religious act!

THE Irish Episcopal Synod is now at work upon a revision of the Prayer-Book. In the communion service it has been decided to alter the words "eat and drink our own damnation" to eat and drink judgment to ourselves.

THE Chinese are flocking into California faster than ever. Already they number one-quarter of the male adults in the State. What most manifestly needs to be done is to Christianize the other three-fourths of the people there.

THE secretary of the British and Foreign Bible Society estimates that during the present century about 116,000,000 copies of the Scriptures, in whole or in part, have been put into circulation by Bible societies alone in various parts of the world.

MR. G. EBERS, a distinguished Egyptologist, has purchased at Thebes a remarkable sacred medical papyrus. Its 155 pages treat of most maladies of the flesh from an Egyptian point of view. More reliance is placed on exorcisms than medicines.

A WRITER in the Churchman denies the report of the Catholic Register concerning the large number of conversions from the English to the Catholic Church, and asserts that more reverts have come to the Anglican Church than have gone over to Rome, two to one.

THE foreign committee of the Protestant Episcopal Church in the United States announce that since the day of prayer for an increased supply of missionaries, in December last, a missionary physician has been raised up and appointed for Japan; five young men in the Theological Seminary in Wisconsin have expressed an earnest desire to be sent to the foreign field; two presbyters and four deacons in Hayti, colored men, are waiting for appointment; and from some others also, in seminaries and elsewhere, the response comes: "Here am I; send me."

THE last Canadian census gives the following statistics with regard to the religious denominations of the Dominion: There are, of Adventists, 6,179; Baptists, 255,543, of whom 11,415 are "Tankers," though what that is I confess my ignorance; Bible Believers, 226; Christian, Plymouth and Moravian brethren, 3,534; Catholics, 1,492,021; Christian Conference, 15,153; Episcopalians, 494,049; Congregationalists, 21,829; Evangelical Association, 4,701; Greek Church, 18; Irvingites, 1,112; Jews, 1,115; Lutherans, 37,935; Mohammedans, 13; Methodists, 567,061; Mormons, 534; Pagans, 4,886; Presbyterians, 543,998; Protestants, 10,146; Quakers, 7,345; Swedenborgians, 854; Unitarians, 2,275; Universalists, 4,896; and of other denominations, 4,870. There are 20 Atheists, 5,146 Deists, and 17,055 persons who failed to give their religious preferences.

SANDWICH ISLANDS.—Rev. P. J. Gulick, a venerable missionary of the Sandwich Islands, writes from Honolulu to the Juvenile Missionary an interesting letter. The following extract is of interest: "The King died, December 11, 1872, and died without a will, or any indication as to who should succeed him! A cousin of his, William Lunalilo, and probably the best of several candidates, was unanimously elected King, and crowned the next day. All this without the least disorder. There was much prayer by foreign and native Christians, and we believe the good Lord heard and answered them. It is said that some of the native churches of their own accord prayed daily, from the death of the King till the new one was elected, that the Lord would guide in the matter." The King is liberal, and has recommended changes which, it is believed, will be very beneficial to the people.

Last year twenty-one ministers were reported as having died during the twelve months. This year nineteen are reported by the presbyteries, and five have been called to their rest since the meeting of the Assembly.

INDIA.—A most interesting letter is received at the Mission Rooms, New York, from Rev. T. S. Johnson, M. D., from which we make the following extracts: "Work was commenced in the station between Nynee Tal and Paori some two years ago, but ceased a year ago. I visited the place, and found the children remembered portions of Scripture committed, also the catechism, and took great pleasure in singing hymns which had been taught them. The parents and children were very anxious the preachers should return. A small government school was taught in the village some years ago, in which three girls were taught to read. When the missionaries opened in Paori these girls were sent to the girls' school as boarders, and became Christians and married Christian men, one of whom is the preacher who commenced work here. The people came in crowds for medicines, they humbling up their sick and afflicted and bringing them in numbers. The preacher's wife brought her mother, who had just lost her eyesight, which gave me an opportunity to direct her and others to him who can open the eyes of the blind."

THE reports made to the recent Southern Presbyterian General Assembly indicate an increase in the contributions to some of the funds, and a falling off in others. The cause of sustentation seems to have been taken up with great fervor. The receipts for sustentation proper were $23,524.57, or $915.84 more than last year; and for the invalid $8,095.62, or $1,450.62 more than last year. Besides this, $23,524.54 were contributed for an evangelistic fund. Somewhat over a half of the churches had contributed to sustentation, one-tenth to evangelistic work, and one-fourth to the invalid fund. Appropriations were made to 144 pastors and supplies and 13 evangelists. Of 845 ministers reported from, 151 were engaged in part in secular employments as a means of support. The salaries of 144 ministers engaged exclusively in ministerial work were, apart from the sustentation fund, less than $600, and 82 received between $600 and $800. The average of salaries outside of the cities was less than $572. The contributions for missions have fallen off $4,000 or $5,000. The total receipts were $147,875.10. Three missions are sustained among the Indian tribes, one in Italy, two in the United States of Colombia, two in Brazil, two in China, the whole employing 45 laborers. A mission is to be established in Mexico. The receipts of the committee on publication were $63,200.35. Twenty new books were published during the year. A publishing house has been bought in Richmond, Virginia, costing $45,000, and a charter obtained from the Virginia Legislature. The assets of the committee are $41,000. From 45 presbyteries were reported 711 Sunday schools, 6,977 teachers and 47,313 scholars. An increase appeared in the number of schools, teachers and scholars; a decrease in the amount of collections in the schools. The theological seminaries are in an encouraging condition, but Columbia Seminary lacks money. A committee was appointed to correspond with the Reformed Church in America, and resolutions were adopted expressing an earnest desire for the establishment of more intimate relations with that body. But the use of terms signifying organic union was carefully avoided. Dr. Schmucker's invitation to participate in a confederation of churches was declined.

FROM THE annual report of the United Presbyterian Church (Scotch) we quote the following eloquent arithmetical sermon: "Every new step we have taken in multiplying our liabilities has led to the increase of our resources, instead of involving us in straits. In the year 1858, when our foreign missionary expenditure was £17,286 and our staff of educated agents abroad numbered 100, including 35 European missionaries, we entered into the Indian field; four years later, when our expenditure abroad was £20,461, and our educated agents were 137, of whom 43 were European missionaries, we entered China; and now, eleven years later, with an income of £33,081 (including what comes from reserved funds,) with an educated agency of 290 persons, no less than 51 of that number being European missionaries, we propose to go into the empire of Japan, with a guarantee of more than £10,000 for the first five years. During this period of progress our foreign fund has risen from £17,286 to £33,081. The number of our European missionaries has been raised from 35 to 51, and of our native agents (schoolmasters, catechists and evangelists) from 65 to 226. At the three dates specified our synodical income devoted to home objects by synodical committees has consisted of these three progressive sums: in 1858, £7,684; in 1862, £14,-993; and in 1872, £26,954. For the same three years the total contribution of the church for all purposes has been: in 1858, £171,757; in 1862, £202,875; and in 1872, £330,953—an income which amounts to £900 a day. These figures demonstrate that any financial difficulty connected with the new mission must be conjured up not by the experiences of the past, and not by any eminent faith either in God or in the resources or good faith of his people." This branch of the Presbyterian Church occupies already seven foreign mission-fields. These are Jamaica, Trinidad, Old Calabar, Caffraria, India, China and Spain. In these fields the Record reports an aggregate of 43 ordained European missionaries, eight European medical missionaries, five ordained native missionaries, two native licentiates, three European male teachers, besides two about to leave for Old Calabar, nine European female teachers, 62 native catechists or evangelists, 133 native schoolmasters, 25 native female teachers, 54 principal stations, 143 outstations, 6,630 communicants, 1,024 candidates, 157 week-day schools, with 9,183 pupils. The total educated agency consists of 290 persons. Of these, 17 ordained missionaries are employed in the Jamaica mission, where there are 113 stations and outstations, and more than 5,000 communicants, and nearly 5,000 pupils in the schools. The annual outlay on this mission is about £17,500. The Trinidad mission has two missionaries and 189 communicants. The Old Calabar mission has six ordained missionaries, 140 communicants, nearly 700 pupils in the schools, and costs about £15,000 annually. The Caffraria mission is carried on at about the same expense, has seven missionaries, and numbers nearly 700 communicants and 500 pupils. At Itaipootua 10 young missionaries are laboring. There have been 75 gathered into the churches, and 2,588 into the schools, and more than $50,000 is expended annually upon this mission. In Thifu, in North China, three missionaries are stationed, who number 31 converts in their church and eight pupils in their schools. While in Spain, with three missionaries, the church numbers 83, and the scholars number 176.

The Manner of Spirit.

If God were to intrust his thunderbolts to many who are seemingly most zealous for his honor, they would make short work with opposers. Those Samaritans who did not receive the Master were obstinate and contumacious in their unbelief. They deserved to be cut off suddenly and the example was needed. It was a most convenient method of dealing with evil-doers, and in the very track of a venerable antecedent. To be as good as Elijah would seem to be good enough, and it was doubtful, exceedingly, whether the two captains and their fifties, who were consumed, were anything like as great sinners as these rejecters of the world's Redeemer. If James and John had had their way the fiery tragedy of the captains and their fifties would have been enacted over again, and they would have enjoyed the affair very much, and set it down boastingly as a record of their pre-eminent zeal in the Lord's service.

Probably this same spirit has led to the martyrdom of thousands of saints, and to the cruel destruction of multitudes who have encountered the sword of bigotry. It is this spirit which has burned men and women at the stake, and subjected them to imprisonment and torture. Those sons of thunder who came with the request that "we command fire to come down from heaven, and consume them, even as Elias did," were most sincere in their motives and ardent in their devotion to the truth. They were not conscious of the fact that national prejudice and personal resentment predominated, and that their apparent zeal for Christ was largely mixed with a low, earthly and malevolent temper. If the deception did not chiefly lie in this, they were certainly ignorant of the benevolence which belongs to Christ and the gospel. They had not yet reached the love, the forbearance, the patient tenderness, and the submission to moral and spiritual means which distinguish the doctrines and precepts of Jesus.

They were still living in the Old Testament atmosphere, and their religion was of that type which belonged to the times of Elijah. It was even a distorted and exaggerated copy of the ancient and severer school of the law and the prophets, and at almost an infinite distance from the sublime spirit of Christ. The manner of their spirit, if clear to themselves, was not clear in its opposition to the dispensation of light and privilege upon which they were entering. They were ignorant of the essence of the gospel, and at the same time were religious exceedingly. If not altogether carnal, they were still lingering amidst the twilight shadows of the earlier dispensation, with no adequate realization of the compassion and tenderness which shine in the gospel. Their spirit, if anything above fallen, malicious human nature, might have been that of Judaism, but it was not the spirit of Christianity. Alas that there should still be so much of this hard, acrid and murderous spirit in connection with the Christian profession!

The basest motives and the most malignant tempers, and the most imperious coercion, are mixed up with the zeal of some of our modern Boanerges. If fire were at their disposal they would pour the burning torrent upon all who stand in their path. Not to receive them is to excite this spirit of intolerant hate and the desire for revenge. The sectional animosity of the two apostles was both political and religious, and here was a sanctified opportunity. Let these obstinate Samaritans now receive their merited punishment, for they are rebels and outlaws in every sense, and are arrayed against the Son of David. Is there nothing akin to this in these times and in our blessed land? There are those who are professedly foremost in sanctity and zeal for Christ, and who pretend to the deepest experience of gospel truth, and are yet ready to call for fire to come down upon those who are in the way of their arrogant claims. The gospel spirit does not always pervade enterprises which are avowedly for the salvation of souls. Men may preach, give their money, plan and labor with hearty self-denial, and be all the time actuated by a spirit of sectarian rivalry and sectional antipathy. It is a gospel of hate rather than love which imbues their minds and makes the spring of their efforts. To save sinners is a secondary matter—the main thing is to embarrass and humiliate, if they cannot utterly destroy, those who have preoccupied the field.

It is a fact for reflection that men of devoted zeal and personal sacrifice may yet be ignorant of the spirit of the gospel, and be actuated by a spirit that is utterly malignant and diabolical. It is a fact most humiliating that Christ has occasion thus to rebuke the most forward of those who profess to be jealous for his honor and for the advancement of his kingdom. It is a fact most perilous to us all, and demanding self-examination, that we may be consciously enlisted for Christ, and actively engaged in his service, and yet be wrong in spirit, and without the grand essential—charity.

Revival Seasons.

It is mentioned in one of our Northern exchanges, as a matter of surprise, that at some point they were having a revival in the summer. Usually the protracted meetings in that section are held in the winter, and revival influences are scarcely looked for in the churches at any other season of the year. In the South revivals rarely occur in the winter, but abound more in the summer and autumn. Each section has its special meetings and makes its extraordinary efforts at a season when the outward conditions are most favorable, and God is pleased to bless the means and to honor the faith of his people. There may be a manifestation of divine sovereignty in many instances of great religious awakenings, but ordinarily the refreshings depend upon conditions which are within the reach and control of the people. Winter and summer must be all the same to God, and the spring and the autumn are alike to the movings of the Holy Spirit. But they are not the same to us, because we are affected and influenced most seriously by the circumstance of leisure, by the state of the weather and by the facilities of travel.

Whether North or South, winter or summer, the blessings come when the churches set themselves about the work in earnest, and with a strong faith and a persistent zeal come boldly to the throne of grace. There are certain means which are often connected with remarkable outpourings of the Spirit, and there are certain seasons above others in which these manifestations of gracious power occur. Protracted services are often opened with no favorable indications before or at the beginning, and yet the most astonishing results have followed; and again, when everything previously seemed ripe for a revival, the protracted meeting led to no unusual interest, and to no remarkable harvest of souls. Times and seasons are related to the human side, and to those influences and conditions which surround us here; and God simply co-operates and works in harmony with them when he puts the seal of his mercy upon one period rather than another. Then we must consider that revivals have to do with responsible and free agents, and that the conversion of souls is a subject which touches this point of human liberty. If there is any invariable law of influence, human or divine, by which the conversion of souls will always be secured, we do not know what it is. Certain means in connection with the operations of the Holy Spirit are usually followed by the reviving of believers and by the awakening and conversion of sinners; but the extent of the work varies, and sometimes the apparent fruits are limited.

Instead of attributing our failure to God's unconditional sovereignty, we must remember that there is a sovereignty in the human will, and that our own instrumentality calls for great searchings of heart. If Christians do their part as laborers in the field, God will doubtless do his. We must look for revival work for them, pray for them, and, chiefly, live for them. The holy, consistent life of love and communion is the main qualification, and perhaps the most vital condition of revival power in any church. Let us also beware of the possible abuse of the revival idea. The normal condition of the church should be that of soul-saving. The usual preaching should aim at the immediate conversion of sinners, and the sanctification of believers. The Lord's hand is never shortened that it cannot save, and his ear is never heavy that it cannot hear. If not at high-water mark, still the stream should not be dry. There may be high and low tides, but it is a sad state of things when there is no tide at all. And it is a most lamentable and not unfrequent thing to be seen—a church like a dismantled hulk ashore, and waiting with fatalistic patience for the rising waters.

The ordinary means must not be depreciated by this dependence upon the extraordinary. Some of our pastors and churches seem to expect almost nothing in the line of conversions, except at the protracted meetings and the hoped-for revival. They are always praying for a revival, and seemingly with no thought or expectation that the work of salvation may be going on in their midst. This is a grievous abuse of the doctrine of revivals, and leads to death and barrenness, instead of an abounding fruitfulness. Much depends upon the religious habits and usages, as well as the direction and training of our faith. If we look for Christ to be present at every service, and statedly in all the meetings, it will be unto us according to our faith. We cannot have revivals at will, nor can protracted services be continued beyond a certain length to profit, but we may always enjoy a comfortable measure of the Holy Spirit, and witness some tokens for good in the conviction of the ungodly, and the growth of believers in knowledge and righteousness.

That Parsonage.

We published an account of it, written by the presiding elder, Bro. Pipes, two or three weeks ago. And now, as if to dispel the last lingering doubt of its existence, Bro. Wilkinson sends us a photograph of an imposing octagonal mansion, adorned with spacious verandas, and surmounted by ladustrades and cupola, and surrounded by ornamental grounds, and looking more like a nobleman's villa than a Methodist preacher's lodge. It must be a reality, as the pastor, with wife and baby, is plainly visible on the veranda, and a very good likeness, which no one can well mistake. This is probably the parsonage not only of Louisiana, but of nearly everywhere; and the Shreveport people—the Methodist ladies there in particular, and the preacher in charge—are entitled to all the honorable mentions, blue ribbons and first premiums in the Methodist connection. We hope this parsonage will stimulate many other circuits and stations to rise up and build, and that it will key them up to a high point of liberal devising and architectural taste. Why not manifest a generous refinement in providing homes for our pastors and their families, instead of dooming them to dwell in dilapidated, ill-furnished barns, or to spend the best of their time in hunting houses or seeking—boarding-places? We believe the Shreveport parsonage has a roomy study for the preacher. Let our parsonage-builders always have an eye to this. Remember that your pastor needs a study—exclusively a library and study—just as much as he needs a house at all, and that it is a positive cruelty and outrage to put him where it cannot be had. To expect a preacher to study and to preach, with no place for absolute retirement and uninterrupted reading, is more unreasonable than Pharaoh's demand of the bricks without straw. Then in this model parsonage, two stories high and comely in all its appointments, are presiding elder's room, a place for guests, and everything appertaining to a well and elegantly arranged home; and the photograph reveals trees and shrubbery about, and the very fences are for beauty, as well as for use. We wish every circuit and station could have a copy of the photograph, and that it might lead them to action in building parsonages.

Gloomy Religion.

To some persons religious duties are irksome tasks, and the privileges of the gospel a wearisome round of labor. Such persons plod heavily along, enveloped in the gloom of doubt and perplexity. They go through life with a shade on their countenances. They are not sure of the possession of the earnest of the heavenly inheritance. To them the Lord is a hard, exacting taskmaster. They regard Jesus Christ only as an angry Judge. They see nothing in the Bible but unbending law. They see nothing in nature but unyielding force. The flash of the sunshine is nothing but a scorching flame. The flow of the starlight is but cold brilliance. The grand harmonies which the material universe sends up in an anthem of praise to God, produce discord on their ears. The wondrous beauties of earth, which so powerfully attract the hand and mind of a master Artist, awaken no thrill of pleasurable emotion in their souls. Why all this gloom? Because the promises of truth have been made a nullity by unbelief. These people live in the dark because they have closed their eyes. What would be thought of a man, possessed of good eyes, who would deliberately close them and go blundering about, quarreling with everything and everybody about his mishaps? What shall be thought of him who shuts his eyes to the exceeding great promises of God, which are intended to enlighten him and to enlighten everything with which he comes in contact, and who pursues his way through life, quarreling with himself and with his fellows, and with God's providence, about the mishaps that come upon him because he will not keep his eyes open? To say the least, he is unwise. In the Christian life, as in the secular life, a man must keep his eyes open to get along well. He must see everything and everybody, and he ought to give everything and everybody a kindly recognition. But these gloomy Christians see nothing but themselves. They scarcely ever give even a nod of recognition to those they meet. Consequently it soon turns out that people avoid them and pass by on the other side. This is perfectly natural, for human nature has an instinctive aversion to that which is gloomy, and especially to a gloomy Christian.

But this gloomy religion is not found in the book which the Lord has given to his children. Do not the sacred writers bring religion before our minds under the similitude of a feast? Is it not compared to a marriage festival? Does not Paul say that it is "righteousness and peace and joy?" Are we not told "to rejoice evermore, and in everything give thanks?" Does the Lord recommend religion to men under the similitude of a funeral? Are the songs of Zion dirges? Do the "ransomed of the Lord return to Zion" clothed in sackcloth, and filling the air with lamentation? No, no. Whence, then, comes this gloomy religion, this somber piety which checks joy and drives away pleasure? What is it that throws this dark shade on the "beauty of holiness?" It is unbelief. It comes from a failure to appreciate and appropriate the precious promises which accompany religion, and make it a joy in the human heart. These gloomy Christians "have forgotten the exhortation which speaketh unto them as unto children;" they misconstrue the teachings of Providence, they misapply the precepts of the divine word, they have lost sight of the faithfulness of their heavenly Father, and this want of faith tinges their whole religious character with melancholy. But why should this be so? Is there any reason for a Christian to flounder about forever in the "slough of despond?" Shall a man sit down at the foot of the mount of beatitudes and sigh his life away to the winds, when by laying hold of the faithfulness of God he can climb up to the top and look out upon a boundless region of blessedness, and that region all his own? Must a Christian's tongue utter nothing but complaint, and give forth no sound but that of wailing? No, no. Let this gloomy religion be cast out. It does not come from a God of goodness and a heaven of brightness. Let these gloomy Christians open their hearts to the vitalizing and inspiriting influences of the Lord's promises, and the dullness of life will fly away and the bitter of life will be sweetened! Let them look through these promises into the great future, and see it filled with the rich gifts which a provident Father is keeping safely for his faithful and loving children. OUTIS.

Comforted Together.

How Christian communion enlivens one's faith, enkindles zeal and enlarges love! This is a felt necessity from the very constitution of our being. Congenial spirits, as by magnetic power, are drawn toward each other—their affinities are great, their union is complete. Whatever may interpose obstacles to this assimilating process of Christian character hinders development and growth of character, arrests the progress of grace, prevents the due maturity, symmetry and perpetuity of the kingdom of grace in the soul.

While this doctrine of "communion of saints" symmetrizes, systematizes and consolidates the members of Christ into one complete and compact brotherhood, it affords ample scope for the exercise of every grade of talent and skill in saving souls and edifying believers; it also wraps the soul in a glow of comfort and peace that is akin to that stream of joy that thrills the bosom of angels.

This "community interest" in the spiritual things of God harmonizes every jarring element, removes all cause of friction from the wheels of Zion, and at once imparts concord and gives oneness to the church, imbuing the whole body with an interest in each part that insures its healthy action. United in Christ, the "living Head," "from whom the whole body, fitly joined together and compacted by that which every joint supplieth, according to the effectual working in the measure of every part, maketh increase of the body unto the edifying of itself in love."

Paul Romans i. 11, 12 uses language relevant: "Comforted together with you by the mutual faith, both of you and me." Hearts assimilate; our natures stamped with a higher mold; old affinities strengthened; new discoveries breaking on the vision in the land of faith, to encourage and animate; sweeter and more ecstatic experiences in "the things of God."

This "mutual faith, both of you and me," constitutes the element of strength and power; for "by faith we stand," "walk," "overcome," "put to flight the armies of the alien," "are justified and have peace with God," "have access by faith into this grace, wherein we stand and rejoice in hope of the glory of God." This "mutual faith" not only "comforts us together," but imparts that invincibility and power of resistance against our enemies that at once clothes us with a coat of mail that is impervious to his fiercest and most persistent assaults. Herein lies our infallibility.

> "Happy the souls that first believed
> To Jesus and each other cleaved:
> Joined by the unction from above,
> In mystic fellowship and love."

There flows from this "mutual faith" reciprocal obligations and offices, according to our special graces and gifts, which contribute to growth and maturity, the beauty and perfection of the whole.

This fellowship being "mutual," it respects the bodies and temporal interests of others, as well as the soul, relieving those who are of the "household of faith, or groaning so to be." To "feel another's woe" is an eminent Christian trait.

This "mutual" fellowship is in doctrine and the essentials of faith, leaving non-essentials to take care of themselves. It is "mutual" love and sympathy. It is the unbroken tie that links the body of believers on earth to those in heaven, and constitutes an unbroken household, "of whom the whole family in heaven and earth is named"—the church of the living God.

> "A part of which have crossed the flood,
> And part are crossing now."

It looks forward to the time when their union in glory will be complete, as "one fold and one shepherd."

> "Where all the ship's company meet, > Who've all been sealed with their Saviour beneath."

Inferences: 1. If the strength, perpetuity, aggressive power and ultimate success of the church, in her high vocation in the world's conversion, is thus increased, then how important that the whole visible church encourage, cultivate and extend that "mutual faith."

2. For this to be so, ought not Christian ministers and all Christian people extend and cultivate those amenities, courtesies, sympathies and love as individuals, that the church may be one in the concrete, possessing all the aggregated power of its segregated hosts?

3. If Jesus' valedictory prayer was, "Holy Father, keep through thine own name those whom thou hast given me, that they all may be one, as thou, Father, art in me, and I in thee, that they all may be one in us," have we not the highest divine warrant for Christian union? Shall his last prayer be in vain?

SIR ISAAC NEWTON AND VOLTAIRE ON RAILROAD TRAVELING.—Sir Isaac Newton wrote a work upon the prophet Daniel, another upon the Book of Revelation, in one of which he said that in order to fulfill certain noted prophecies before a certain date was terminated, namely, 1260 years, there would be a mode of traveling of which the men of this time had no conception; nay, that the knowledge of men would be so increased that they would be able to travel at the rate of fifty miles an hour.

Voltaire, who did not believe in the inspection of the Scriptures, got hold of this and said:

"Now look at that mighty mind of Newton, who discovered gravity, and told us such marvels for us all to admire. When he became an old man, and got into his dotage, he began to study that book called the Bible; and it seems that, in order to credit its fabulous nonsense, we must believe that the knowledge of mankind must be so increased that we shall be able to travel at the rate of fifty miles an hour. The poor dotard!" exclaimed the philosophic infidel, Voltaire, in the self-complacency of his pity. But who is the dotard now!

IN MIDDLE LIFE we hesitate to sit in judgment upon any one; we read slowly and reverently the untranslated scripture of another's heart; but in youth we are confident, and assign motives and intentions as glibly as children pretend to read nursery tales which they have learned by rote.—Celia Burleigh.

Turning-Points in Life.

The Rev. Frederick Arnold, in his capital book of this name, thus happily illustrates the difference between the "Providence that shapes our ends" and what men call "luck" and "chance":

"What we call a 'turning-point' is simply an occasion which sums up and brings to a result previous training. Accidental circumstances are nothing except to men who have been trained to take advantage of them. Erskine made himself famous when the chance came to him of making a great forensic display; but unless he had trained himself for the chance, the chance would only have made him ridiculous.

"There is the story told of some gentleman who, on a battle-field, happening to bow with much grace to some officer who addressed him, a cannon-ball just went through his hair, and took off the head of one behind him. The officer, when he saw the marvelous escape, justly observed that no man ever lost by politeness.

"There is a man in Berkshire, England, who has a park with a walled frontage of seven miles, and he tells of a beautiful little operation which made a nice little addition to his fortune. He was in Australia when the first discoveries of gold were made. The miners brought in their nuggets, and took them to the local banks. The bankers were a little nervous about the business, uncertain about the quality of the gold, and waited to see its character established. This man had a taste for natural sciences and knew something about metallurgy. He tried each test, solid and fluid, satisfied himself of the quality of the gold, and then, with all the money he had or could borrow, he bought as much gold as might be, and showed a profit of £100,000 in the course of a day or two. His 'luck' was observation and knowledge, and a happy tact in applying them. The late Joseph Hume went out to India, and while he was still a young man he accumulated a considerable fortune. He applied himself to the hard work of mastering the native languages, and turned the knowledge to most profitable account. On one occasion, when all the gunpowder had failed the British army, he succeeded in scraping together a large amount of the necessary materials, and manufactured it for the troops. When he returned to England he canvassed with so much ability and earnestness for a seat in the East India Directorate, that he might carry out his scheme of reform, that, though he failed to get the vote of a certain large proprietor of stock, he won his daughter's heart, and made a prosperous marriage. And marriage is, after all, the 'luckiest bit of luck,' when it is all it should be.

"There is, then, in truth no 'luck.' There are turning-points in life, moments, critical moments, that are worth more than years; nevertheless, a great occasion is only worth to a man what his antecedents have enabled him to make of it, and our business in life is to prepare for these supreme moments, these hours when life depends on the decision of the instant. Whatever of truth is veiled under the popular idea of luck and chance is, rightly considered, no incentive to the busiest industry, not an excuse for folded hands and idle dreams."

WE HAVE RECEIVED the following card from Dr. Deems, and publish it with pleasure. The doctor made a first-rate paper once, and we have no doubt the Christian Age will be a journal worth having. We wish it abundant success and a long and useful career.

A CARD.

> 760 BROADWAY, CORNER OF 10TH STREET,
> New York, July 29, 1873.

It has been announced that I am to edit a new paper, to be called the Christian Age. The last of the "copy" for the first number has been handed to the printer. Many friends will desire to know why I add this to my other labors, and what kind of paper it is to be. Let them read the first number for an answer. A specimen copy will be sent to any clergyman who will forward his address, and to any layman who will furnish his address and inclose a three cent postage stamp. Address Christian Age Publishing Company, No. 4 Winthrop place, New York.

CHARLES F. DEEMS.

CHAPPELL HILL FEMALE COLLEGE, Chappell Hill, Texas, opens its twenty-first annual session September 1, 1873. Rev. E. D. Pitts, the worthy president, has spent thirty years in school-room labor, and is well qualified for the important post to which he has been called, and he has the assistance of a competent corps of teachers. We direct special attention to the advertisement of the institution, which appears in our columns this week.

UNIVERSAL ASPIRATION.—Every man is born with aspiration. It does not develop in every man. Neither do half the buds on trees blossom. But they are there. And there is aspiration in every man, whether you suspect or not, and though it may not bloom. Aspiration means tendril, twining, or anything else by which one rises upward, holding on by the way to whatever will give it support. Some plants take hold by winding round, some by little roots, some by tendrils, some by hooks, and some by leaves that catch like tendrils. But these things take hold not for the sake of staying where they take hold, but only that they may climb higher. And so it is with men. We clasp things above by every part of our nature, one after another, not for the sake of remaining where we take hold, but that we may go higher. In other words, when in the ordinary experience in life we gain satisfaction, we do it almost only by feeding on each other. When we attain development, we do that in the same way. The soul feeds on soul, whether for satisfaction or development.

Living With Ben.

"I can't be a Christian and live with Ben."

Mrs. Moore said it.

And Ben. was her husband.

She told her minister so; and the next Sunday he preached about it. That was our old minister, Father P., who had been settled over the parish twenty-seven years. He used to preach right at us, not over our heads. He never shot at random; he never wasted any of his arrows; they all went straight home to the mark—they hit. When he came round calling on us in the week, if he heard us complain that Bro. A. or Sister B. did not do as they ought to, he came down upon us the next Sunday. He did not allude to Bro. A. or Sister B. though. Not a word about their shortcomings; but he took us, on Christian charity and forbearance, and made very plain to us the beam in our own eyes.

On this occasion he might just as well have said: "My hearers, my subject this morning is, living with Ben. Moore—the impossibility for a Christian to do it."

Mrs. Moore was a kind of intermittent Christian. Or, as one of the deacons said, she "did not seem to be converted all through." She seemed to think that religion was something that belonged with Sundays and prayer meetings; something too spiritual for every day. It did not appear to occur to her that her life ought to be regulated by it; that there was a principle in it which was able to keep her steadfast. It was a state of mind, an experience, which came and then was all over with, as a dream is. When she was in meetings, and was with Christian people, and when nothing especial crossed her, she "enjoyed her mind," as she called it; and nobody doubted that she did try to live a Christian life.

But her "thorn in the flesh" was Ben. He had an irritable temper; and she never appeared to think that it was a part of her discipline to bear it. He was often absent for many weeks at a time on business; and then she was a good Christian, consistent, cheerful, contented. But when he came home she said she "fell from grace;" and if she had not once had clear evidence to that effect she should be afraid she never had been converted at all.

He found fault, and she retorted; and they had some bitter experiences of recrimination, till neither of them had any respect for her character as a Christian, which was the saddest part of all to her, for somewhere in the woman's consciousness was a feeling, which at times amounted to a conviction, that she truly had repented of her sins and accepted Christ, and she would not for the world have been shut out from her hope in him.

"And oh!" she said to Father P., "if I was differently situated I think I could live a consistent life. But I can't be a Christian and live with Ben."

So the dear old man preached about it. He had a homely, direct way, and the first thing he said was: "We have among us some of the old-fashioned kind of saints, who speak about how they 'got religion.' And nobody doubts but they did get it. But what was it? What do they mean by it? They are in possession of something, which has not only given them great comfort and support all the way along, but has made them better than they were before. A woman may have a hope in Christ, and still not be any more lovable for it; a man may have faith enough to save him and yet be no kinder, no more considerate; but in such a case religion is not doing its work.

"And the excuse of some, that they have many provocations, that they are in a hard place, is of no avail. Is it any merit to be amiable where there is nothing to hinder? There are families in which it is so easy to be good that it would be proof of utter depravity not to be. In the homes where all are Christians there are so many mutual helps that the members full of some of the strangest tests of their Christian life, and likewise of some of its deepest and richest experiences. And I apprehend that our Savior watches with a more tender solicitude the sorely-tried ones whom he has set solitary in irreligious households."

And he went on to say: "I have failed in one of the most vital points in my ministry if I have failed to make it plain to my people that the spiritual life cannot be a separate thing from the natural life; the two must go along together; they must be incorporated till the divine element, working all through the other, like the leaven, shall be constantly making us more and more like him into whose image we shall one day be changed."—Congregationalist.

Solomon's Temple.

Some interesting facts are given in an article in the Edinburg Review respecting Solomon's Temple. In size the Great Pyramid of Egypt is the only structure on the earth which could be compared with it.

"The Great Pyramid demanded, indeed, a larger amount of inked human labor; but in Moriah there is a compulsion of the features of nature herself to the service of the builder. In actual bulk the Great Pyramid is to the Temple Rock as five to nine. If we descend but as far as the sills of the five double gates of the mountain of the house. If we carry the comparison down to the level at which the lowest foundation of the walls is inlaid in the rock at the angles of the inclosure, the bulk is three times that of the Great Pyramid. The cubic contents of the masons' work may not amount to a tenth part of that piled up by Souphis. But the hill has been honeycombed with chambers and galleries; and the declining part to the south covered with vaults and arches, to which Gizeh can show no parallel. The length of the eastern wall of the sanctuary is rather more than double that of one side of the Great Pyramid. Its height from the foundation on the rock at the south and near the northern angles was nearly a third of that of the Egyptian structure. If to this great height of one hundred and fifty-two feet of solid wall be added the descent of one hundred and fourteen feet to the bed of the Kedron, and the further elevation of one hundred and sixty feet attained by the pinnacle of the temple porch, we have a total height of four hundred and twenty-six feet; which is only fifty-nine feet less than that of the Great Pyramid. The area of the face of the eastern wall is more than double that of one side of the pyramid. Thus the magnitude of the noble sanctuary of Jerusalem far exceeded that of any other temple in the world. Two amphitheaters of the size of the Coliseum would have stood within its colossal girdle and left room to spare."

It is estimated that the temple, when all its parts were filled, would hold two hundred and ten thousand persons. A careful examination of the probable site of the brazen altar has led to the discovery of an apparatus for furnishing a current of air to the fires, on which the best devices of modern science can suggest no improvement. In connection with this fact "it is remarked by the rabbinical writers, as a matter partaking of the nature of miracle, that during the whole continuance of the first temple not only were the three fires that burned day and night on the hearth of the Great Altar unextinguished, but that, whatever was the weather or the current of the wind, the smoke always rose straight toward heaven."

The sanctuary is neither square nor rectangular, but trapezoidal in shape. The inquiry is suggested as to what circumstance determined its form. The question is answered by the survey. The north and south lines correspond with the meridian. The east and west lines do not run exactly east and west, but with a variation of ten degrees nine minutes north of east. The line points to the place where the sun rose on the morning of the day the temple was founded.

Power of Sunbeams.

The greatest of physical paradoxes is the sunbeam. It is the most potent and versatile force we have, and yet it behaves itself like the gentlest and most accommodating.

Nothing can fall more softly and more silently upon the earth than the rays of our great luminary—not even the feathery flakes of snow, which thread their way through the atmosphere as if they were too filmy to yield to the demands of gravity like grosser things. The most delicate slip of gold-leaf, exposed as a target to the sun's shafts, is not stirred to the extent of a hair, though an infant's faintest sigh would set it into tremulous motion. The tenderest of human organs—the apple of the eye—though pierced and bulleted each day by thousands of sunbeams, suffers no pain at the process, but rejoices in their sweetness, and "blesses the useful light." Yet a few of those rays, insinuating themselves into a mass of iron like the Britannia tubular bridge, will compel the closely-knit particles to separate, and will move the whole enormous fabric with as much ease as a giant would stir a straw.

The play of those beams upon our sheets of water lifts up layer after layer into the atmosphere, and hoists whole rivers from their beds only to drop them again in snow upon the hills, or in fattening showers upon the plains. Let the air drink in but a little more sunshine at one place than another, and out of it springs the tempest or the hurricane, which desolates the whole region in its lunatic wrath.

The marvel is that a power which is capable of assuming such a diversity of forms and of producing such stupendous results, should come to us in so gentle, so peaceful and so unpretentious a guise. It is as great a wonder as if the cannon-balls which were to batter down a fortress danced through the air on their mission of death-like notes in the sunbeam, or as if shrapnell shells were buried in the atmosphere like drops of dew, and demeaned themselves as meekly too, until they exploded.—British Quarterly Review.

A WIFE'S POWER.—The power of a wife, for good or evil, is irresistible. Without one, home must be forever unknown.

A good wife is to a man wisdom, courage and strength; a bad one is confusion, weakness and despair. No condition is hopeless to a man where the wife possesses firmness, decision and economy. There is no outward propriety which can counteract indolence, extravagance and folly at home. No spirit can long endure bad influence. Man is strong, but his heart is not adamant. He delights in enterprise and action, but to sustain him he needs a tranquil mind; and especially if he is an intellectual man, with a whole head, he needs his moral forces in the conflicts of life. To recover his composure, home must be a place of peace, of comfort. There his soul renews its strength, and goes forth with fresh vigor to encounter the labor and troubles of life. But if at home he finds no rest, and is there met with bad temper, sullenness, jealousy and gloom, or is assailed by complaints and censure, hope vanishes and he sinks into despair. Such is the case with too many who, it might seem, have no conflicts or trials of life; for such is the wife's power.

HOW A PAPER IS MADE.

A PARODY.

"Pray, how is a newspaper made?"
The question is easy to ask,
But to answer it fully, my dear,
Were rather a difficult task;
And yet (in a bantering way,
As the whippowill sings in the glade,
I'll venture a bit of a lay
To tell how a paper is made.

An editor sits at a desk,
And ponders the things that appear
To be claiming the thoughts of the world
Things solemn and comic and queer
And when he has hit on a theme
He judges it well to parade,
He writes, and he writes, and he writes,
And that's how a paper is made.

An editor sits at his desk,
And puzzles his brain to make out
"Telegraphic" so squabbled and talked,
It is hard to tell what it's about.
Exchanges are lying around—
Wide wielding dispatches delivered,
He clips, and he clips, and he clips,
—And that's how a paper is made.

An editor out in the town!
In search of the things that are new
The things that the people have done,
The things they're intending to do—
Goes peering and prying about,
For it's of many a grade;
He tramps, and he tramps, and he tramps,
And that's how a paper is made.

And all that these workers prepare,
Of every conceivable stripe,
Is sent to the printer, and he
Proceedeth to stick in type.
His lines, all respecting his will,
In showy-long columns parade
He sticks, and he sticks, and he sticks
And that's how a paper is made.

In short, when the type is all set,
And errors cleared up, more or less,
'Tis "locked in a form," as we say,
And hurried away to the press.
The pressman arranges his sheets,
His inks gives the requisite shade,
Then he prints, and he prints, and he prints,
And that's how a paper is made.

JUST AS IT SHOULD BE.—Many of our correspondents seem to find enough to keep their Book and Advocate business separate. They never write about the business of the two on the same sheet. Although they may inclose the two letters in the same envelope, they are dated, signed and addressed separately, and distinct from each other. This enables it to be acted upon promptly to each. When the business is asked the book-keeper of one department must confine himself to what of it has passed through the other departments—order filled, goods shipped and letter answered—before the business of his department can be attended to; and as the book-keepers and clerks of the two branches of business are separate, and their letters separately, it must be apparent to every man of reflection that much perplexity results from writing all on the business of both on the same page. When money is remitted it should be distinctly stated what for; and if for two or more purposes, how much for each. Write nothing in business letters except that which has reference to business.

The Child's Corner.

MEASURING THE BABY.

We measured rioting baby
Against the cottage wall;
A lily grew at the threshold,
And the boy was just as tall!
A royal tiger-lily,
With spots of purple and gold,
And a heart like a jeweled chalice,
The fragrant dew to hold.

Without the blackbird whistled,
High up in the old red trees,
And to and fro at the window
The red rose-rockets nodded;
And the wee pink pets of baby
Were never a moment still,
Snatching at shine and shadow
That danced at the lattice-sill.

Ah! in a darkened chamber,
With the sunshine shut away,
Through tears that fell like bitter rain,
We measured the baby to-day.
And the little bare feet that were dimpled,
And sweet as a budding rose,
Lie side by side together
In the hush of a long repose.

Up from the dainty pillow,
White as the risen dawn,
A fair little face lay smiling
With the light of heaven thereon;
And the dear little hands, like rose-leaves
Dropped from the rose, lay still,
Never to catch at the sunshine
That crept to the shrouded sill.

We measured the sleeping baby,
With ribbons white as snow,
For the shining rose-wood casket
That waited him below.
And out of the darkened chamber
We went with a childless moan,
For in the height of the sinless angels
Our dear little one had grown.

A Dream Fulfilled.

Dora was a dreamer. She liked nothing better than sitting by the fire with little to do but to think. She would sit with folded hands, looking into the blaze, and thinking of many strange fancies for hours together, if she were not disturbed. Those who spoke to her then would sometimes smile at the absent look in her eyes and the vague answers which she gave to simple questions. The fact was that, when she was dreaming, it was difficult to recall her thoughts, and fix them upon the commonplace subjects to which the questions referred. The consequence was that some very absurd things were occasionally uttered.

"Dora, what is the time?" asked her mother once.

"A blue mountain lake," replied Dora dreamily.

Of course there was a merry laugh at Dora's expense, which brought the color to her cheeks, and caused her to put away her dreams for that day. But she loved them too well to deprive herself of them for long together. Indeed they were constantly in her thoughts. The first thing in the morning, as soon as she was awake, she commenced her castle-building. All the day her fancies were not far from her. When she was at work her mind was roaming far and wide; and you will not be surprised to learn that often her work was not as well done as it should have been. When she went to bed at night she often lay thinking instead of going to sleep, which would have been the more sensible way.

And yet her thoughts were good ones. She was all the time dreaming not of her own pleasure, but of what she might do for others. The only thing was that she lost much time and was no nearer to the accomplishment of the good that she wished to do. But Dora had a cousin, who came to visit her just at the time when her coming was of a very great service. She did not laugh at Dora nor call her names, as her brothers did. But she quietly watched her, and noticed all that she said and did until she understood what was passing in the dreamer's mind. And then she spoke to her:

"Dora, dear, they are very happy thoughts which you have when you are so quiet?"

"Yes; they make me happy."

"But you do not mean to be always content with dreaming, do you?"

"No. I hope some day my dreams will be realities."

"But if they are you will have to do much of it yourself, and at present you do not seem to have begun to accomplish what you wish."

"But can I begin, Mary?" asked Dora wistfully. "I should be so thankful if there were any way, but I see none."

"There is always one way, Dora. It is the only way known to me by which we can accomplish any of the works which we long to do—it is to do faithfully and conscientiously the duty that lies nearest to us."

"But I do not see how that can help me," said Dora.

"It will do so, nevertheless, dear. But will you tell me your secret?"

Dora blushed. She did not like to talk about the thing that was so frequently in her thoughts. She had never told any one, partly because she was afraid of being laughed at, and partly because she liked to keep her own secrets. But she knew that her cousin would not laugh at her, though she might think her very ambitious and even presumptuous.

"Do not tell me if you would much rather not, dear," said Mary, seeing that she hesitated.

"Yes, I will tell you," said Dora; "and then perhaps you can advise me what to do. Ever since I went to the seaside with mother I have thought of a good work which I should like to do, and which I will do if ever I am rich. You know we went into Wales, and saw the glorious mountains and lakes and waterfalls, as well as the beautiful sea. I was not well when I went, but I got well almost directly after I arrived. I think it was partly the sea air, and I am sure it was partly the beauty of the place that did me good; and I wished I could take every invalid whom I knew to the same place; and then I sat and thought how tenderly I would nurse them, and what nice things I would provide for them, and how delightful it would be to see the color come into their faces and the brightness to their eyes, and know that they were almost certain to recover. This is what I think of still. In my thoughts I can see the place, with shady glens, and happy people resting in them. I can see them round my table, too, and sometimes I can almost hear them singing hymns in the evening. O Mary! it is lovely, lovely! I feel as if I would almost give my life to have it come true. Do you think God will let me do it some day? Or is it wrong of me to think so much about it?"

"I do not think it is wrong, dear," said Mary gently. "I cannot, of course, tell whether God will let you do it. I hope he may, if it would be a good thing. But I am sure it is not right of you to do nothing but dream, and as long as you can content yourself with that you will be as far as ever from what you wish."

"Tell me what to do, Mary."

"I have told you already. Do as well as you can every duty which God sends you. Tell him what you wish, and ask his blessing upon it. Then read books about nursing when you have the opportunity to do so, and when any people round about you are sick try to nurse them. By these means you will be preparing for the work which you hope to do in the future."

"Thank you, Mary, I will try to do as you say."

Years afterward Dora remembered this conversation with gratitude. There came a day of great joy to her. She had by this time not only read but written several books about the best ways of nursing sick people, and the doctors said that she herself was a very gifted nurse, and that if any one could bring those who were ill back to life again it would be Dora. That was because she always prayed for her patients, and also because by hard work and unwearied study she had made herself thoroughly efficient.

It was in consequence of this that several ladies and gentlemen gladly gave their money to help Dora establish just the home in just the place of which she had often dreamed. So it all came true; only Dora felt even more happy and thankful than in her girlhood's days she knew how to feel.

I have told you this story in case any of you should be dreamers. Our day-dreams are not always of the right kind, and they are not always fulfilled. But when they are, it is certainly because we ask God's blessing upon them, and then conscientiously and patiently do the duties that lie the nearest to us; for if we use the opportunity we have God will give us others, and help us to perform even greater works.—London Christian World.

A Capital Maxim.

Lady Mary Wortley Montagu relates the following story:

One day, as an ancient king of Tartary was riding with his officers of State, they met a dervis crying aloud: "To him that will give me a hundred dinars (small pieces of money) I will give a piece of good advice." The king, attracted by this strange declaration, stopped and said to the dervis: "What advice is this that you offer for a hundred dinars?" "Sire," replied the dervis, "I shall be most thankful to tell you as soon as you order the money to be paid me." The king, expecting to hear something extraordinary, ordered the dinars to be given to the dervis at once, on receiving which he said: "Sire, my advice is: Begin nothing without considering what the end may be."

The officers of State, smiling at what they thought ridiculous advice, looked at the king, who they expected would be so enraged at this insult as to order the dervis to be severely punished. The king, seeing their amusement and surprise, said: "I see nothing to laugh at in the advice of this dervis; but, on the contrary, I am persuaded that if it were more frequently practiced men would escape many calamities. Indeed, so convinced am I of the wisdom of this maxim that I shall have it engraved on my plate and written on the walls of my palace, so that it may be ever before me." The king, having thanked the dervis, proceeded toward his palace; and on his arrival he ordered the chief Bey to see that the maxim was engraved on his plate and on the walls of his palace.

Some time after this occurrence one of the nobles of the court, a proud, ambitious man, resolved to destroy the king and place himself on the throne. In order to accomplish his bad purpose he secured the confidence of one of the king's surgeons, to whom he gave a poisoned lancet, saying: "If you will bleed the king with this lancet I will give you ten thousand pieces of gold, and when I ascend the throne you shall be my vizier." This base surgeon, dazzled by such brilliant prospects, wickedly assented to the proposal.

An opportunity of effecting his evil design soon occurred. The king sent for this man to bleed him. He put the poisoned lancet into a side pocket and hastened into the king's presence. The arm was tied, and the fatal lancet was about to be plunged into the vein, when suddenly the surgeon's eye read this maxim at the bottom of the basin: "Begin nothing without considering what the end may be." He immediately paused, as he thought within himself: "If I bleed the king with this lancet he will die, and I shall be seized and put to a cruel death. Then of what use will all the gold in the world be to me?" Then, returning the lancet to his pocket, he drew forth another. The king, observing this, and perceiving that he was much embarrassed, asked why he changed his lancet so suddenly. He stated that the point was broken; but the king, doubting his statement, commanded him to show it. This so agitated him that the king felt assured all was not right. He said: "There is treachery in this! Tell me instantly what it means, or your head shall be severed from your body!" The surgeon, trembling with fear, promised to relate all to the king if he would only pardon his guilt. The king consented, and the surgeon related the whole matter, acknowledging that had it not been for the words in the basin he should have used the fatal lancet.

The king summoned his court, and ordered the traitor to be executed. Then, turning to his officers of State, he said: "You now see that the advice of the dervis, at which you laughed, is most valuable; it has saved my life. Search out this dervis, that I may amply reward him for his wise maxim."

THE sweetest face is only the rounded cushion with which health covers a grinning skeleton.

Farm, Garden and Household.

Vinegar-Making.

Vinegar is produced by the transformation of alcohol to acetic acid. The alcoholic mixture must not be too strong, else the transformation is retarded or too weak, and it will putrefy. The higher the temperature, and the greater the quantity of air brought in a given time in contact with the cider or other alcoholic mixture, the quicker is its transformation to vinegar. If, however, the temperature is above one hundred degrees alcohol is wasted by evaporation. Nearly all the vinegar sold in the market is made by what is known as the quick process, but as this method requires considerable experience and some expensive apparatus it is not adapted to household manufacture. By this process cider or other alcoholic mixtures are converted into good vinegar in from three to ten hours, during which it must drip through twenty feet of wood shavings, corn-cobs, stems of grapes or other similar substances, and a constant draft of heated air passing through the shavings, keeping up a fermentation and coming in contact with every drop of the mixture, completely changing the alcohol to acetic, and the more ferment present the quicker is the vinegar made or the souring process completed. For family use one barrel is usually enough for one year.

When cider is made it is easy to have pure, healthful vinegar, but even then it is not always to be found. It should be borne in mind that air, heat and fermentation are necessary to ascetification. If you have one-half or one-third of a barrel of good vinegar at cider-making time, and fill the cask with new cider and leave the bung open, the new cider will produce the ferment, and the old vinegar will change the whole in six weeks by keeping moderately warm. If no old vinegar is at hand to start with, add ten gallons of pure rain or river water to thirty gallons of cider, put in a cask painted black, and let it stand with the bunghole open or only closed by a patch of canvas tacked over it to keep out insects. To make from common whisky add to it pure soft water in the proportion of one pint of whisky to one gallon of water, which should be poured while hot into a barrel to ferment. There should be a cask also for storage, and every two or three weeks, or as needed, a few gallons may be drawn out and added to the generating or fermenting barrel. Sorghum sirup or molasses may be used in the place of the whisky, if desired.

TO DRIVE RATS AWAY WITHOUT POISON.—The Old French Plan.—This is followed chiefly in Paris by men who make it a special business. They take a deep tub with water on the bottom, and a little elevation in the middle like an island, on which is only place for just one rat to sit on. The top is covered and has a large balanced valve opening downward; on the middle of this valve a piece of fried pork or cheese is fixed, and when a rat walks on it to get the cheese the valve goes down, drops the rat in the water, and moves back in position. A road is made from a rat-hole to the top of the tub by means of a piece of board rubbed with cheese, so as to make the walk attractive for the rats. In the course of a single night some ten, twenty or even more rats may go down, and if the island was not there they would be found most all alive in the morning, quietly swimming round; but the provision of the little island saves the trouble of killing them, because their egotistic instinct of self-preservation causes them to fight for the exclusive possession of the island, on which in the morning the strongest rat is found in solitary possession, all the others being killed and drowned around him.

PRESERVING MEAT WITHOUT BRINE.—For salting meat of any kind take a hog weighing say two hundred pounds, cut it down each side of the back-bone, first removing the leaf lard and tenderloins and all parts containing blood; then cut the legs off close to the ham, and lay the whole side on a board prepared for the purpose, and rub thoroughly all parts except the skin with fine Liverpool salt; then place the other side on the one already salted, and treat in the same manner. I keep up this process of turning and salting for three or four days, always rubbing salt on the bare places. In three or four weeks the sides may be hung up in a dry room and require no further attention. The salting must be done within twelve hours after the animal is killed, before decomposition can begin. The fine salt answers every purpose, and preserves the flavor of the meat so well that in six months after, by placing a piece of it in a pot of cold water, and just allowing it to boil, then bake, it has nearly as fine a flavor as a piece of fresh baked pork. Two small sacks of salt are sufficient for two hundred pounds of meat.

APPLYING ASHES TO POTATOES.—My experience in applying ashes to potatoes, with the best results, has been to put on a single handful to each hill soon after they are planted, and before they get out of the ground. I have increased my crop one-half by so doing. By making an experiment in the same field, by leaving a row without ashes, I have seen the result. I consider ashes better than plaster for potatoes; worth to me twenty-five cents per bushel.—J. D. Randall.

RICE PUDDING.—One quart of rich milk, one-half cup of rice, one-half cup of sugar, a little salt. Bake in a slow oven, and keep stirring occasionally until you wish the crust to form. Flavor with nutmeg; add raisins, if you choose. This makes a small pudding.

PURE WATER.—We should let the water standing in our water-pipes run a minute before we take a drink or use for cooking in the morning, and in going into a new house, or into one in which water-pipes have just been placed.

MACHINERY, TIES, ETC.

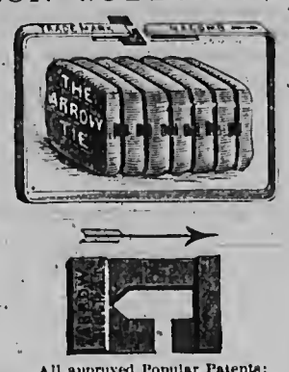
THE DUBOIS FLANGE COTTON GIN.

By the Flange the Cotton is kept in contact with the teeth on each side, until the fiber is taken from the seed, without allowing them to be taken up by the return motion of the roll, as in other Gins.

The Flange prevents hulls, stems, sticks and hard substances from being cut, superseding making a better sample out of roughly-picked cotton than other Gins.



We have sold more from this point than any agency of any other Gin for the crop of 1872-73; consequently we can furnish more and better references, and they are warranted to come up to all that is said of them.

We keep constantly on hand all sizes, from 40 to 80 SAW STANDS, left or right. Price, $5 per Saw.

REV. A. R. HOLCOMBE, A. M., Professor of Mathematics and Adjunct Professor of Natural Science.
G. H. WILEY, A. M., Professor of Ancient and Modern Languages.
T. S. JONES, M. D., Professor of Natural Science.
REV. R. D. NORSWORTHY, A. M., Principal of the Preparatory Department.

CHARGES.

Tuition, per session of forty weeks, in College.....
Tuition, per session of forty weeks, in Preparatory Department.....
Contingent expenses.....

A matriculation fee of $5 must be paid on entering any regular college class. One-half the charge must be paid when the student enters; the other half on the beginning of the second term, March 1.

BOARD.

Board, including lodging, washing, lights and fuel, can be had in the best families for $20 per month. Day-boarding with the same families, $14 per month. Rooms provided in the dormitories free of charge. Board to be paid in advance at least one month.

LOCATION.

This institution is located in the legely village of Jackson, about twelve miles from Baton Rouge, in a grove of live oak, magnolia, oak and beech. The location is remarkable for its beautiful wood and healthful atmosphere, its pure water, its unrivaled healthfulness, and its advanced social society.

WHEN FOUNDED.

The college was established by the State of Louisiana in 1825, and ceded to the Methodist Episcopal Church in 1845.

ALUMNI.

Its Alumni numbers two hundred and three, and they are to be found in the most honorable and useful stations in the land.

APPARATUS AND CABINET.

The college possesses a valuable set of Philosophical, Astronomical and Chemical Apparatus, also a well-selected Mineralogical and Geological Cabinet. The apparatus includes a Theodolite, a Transit, Compass, Chronometer, Atwood's Machine, Whirling Tables, Electrical Machine, Air Pump, Collections illustrative of the Mechanical Powers, Batteries, Chemical Tests, etc., sufficient for a thorough and extended course of observations and experiments. Steps have been taken by the Board of Trustees to put these in thorough repair.

LITERARY SOCIETIES.

There are two regular Literary Societies connected with the institution. These are of great value to young men acquiring a liberal education—improving them in the art of public speaking, making them in some degree familiar with the proceedings of deliberative bodies, and in cultivating systematic business habits. Each Society has a convenient hall and a well-selected Library—about one thousand six hundred volumes each, which, added to the College Library of two thousand volumes, make the whole five thousand volumes in the college.

BUILDINGS.

The Trustees are determined to continue the repairs on the buildings till completed. The main Center Building is a fine specimen of architectural beauty and adaptation to the purposes of its location. The wings, built of solid brick, present each a front of two hundred feet, with upper and lower galleries the entire length, supported by Tuscan columns, and with the center making in the perspective a continuous front of seven hundred feet.

PREPARATORY DEPARTMENT.

In the Preparatory Department students are fitted for regular college classes, or may obtain a thorough English or commercial education. ITS FACULTY are men of experience and success in teaching.

New Orleans Markets.

From the New Orleans Price Current.

On Friday, the first instant, two bales new crop of cotton were received by Messrs. Warren & Atkinson, from Manny, Sabine parish, in this State, shipped by the St. Mary from Grand Lecore. This is the first of our own crop this year and is three days earlier than last year.

The river is 9 feet 3 inch below high water mark.

COTTON.—The following are the arrivals since the first instant:

| | |
|---|---|
| Louisiana and Mississippi | bales |
| Lake | |
| Mobile | |
| Total | 1,621 |

On Saturday the market opened with some inquiry, but subsequently exhibited very little movement, and the business was confined to 25 bales; six brokers participating in the limited business. Factors showed no disposition to relax their pretensions, and it was difficult to find other ordinary or good ordinary at the inside quotations for the grades, unless dusty, some ordinary of this kinds of as low as 10½c., and good style good ordinary commanded 11½c. On Monday the market continued quiet throughout the day, with a limited demand, and operations were restricted by scant supplies; the sales were consequently confined to 75 bales. Nothing transpired to indicate any change in prices; the lower grades continued irregular and easy and the better qualities firm, low middling selling as high as 12½c. and at a fraction under that and ordinary of high style commanding the outside rate of the. On Tuesday the demand was more active, and although operations were restricted by scant supplies, yet the sales amounted up 1,275 bales, which is a liberal business in proportion to the stock on sale. Nothing transpired to indicate a quotable change in prices, but the advantage, if any, was on the side of the factors. Strict ordinary, dusty, sold at 12¾c., do., clean and good style, at 13½c., low middling at 13c., strict low middling, high style, at 13½c., strict low middling to middling at 13½c., and middling 13 3-16 at 13c. The demand was partly for Liverpool, principally for the North.

The above makes an aggregate for the past three days of 2,400 bales, against 2,476 for the corresponding time last week and 2,476 the week before.

The receipts proper at this port since the first of September, exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas, are 1,273,240 bales, against 963,847 bales to the same date last year, and the increase in the receipts at all the ports up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 309,393 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same date last year, there is an increase of 155,161 to Great Britain, of 66,145 to France, and 14,180 to other foreign ports. We quote:

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| Inferior | | |
| Low ordinary | 10½ | @ 10¾ |
| Ordinary | 11¾ | @ 11 |
| Good ordinary | 11¾ | @ 12 |
| Low middling | 12¾ | @ 13 |
| Middling | 13 | @ 13 |
| Strict middling | 13½ | @ 13 |
| Good middling | 13¾ | @ 13 |

On Tuesday there was a better demand, and 367 bbls. mess sold, in three lots, at $16.75 ₱ bbl. It is retailing at 17.25 ₱ bbl. An offer of $16.87½ ₱ bbl. was refused for 200 bbls. mess.

MONETARY.

Gold opened on Tuesday at 115⅝@115⅝ (against 115⅝ at New York,) and closed at 115¼@115⅜ (against 115⅜ at New York.)

We have not heard of a sale of silver, except $1,000 in American half dollars on Saturday at 109. We quote American half dollars at 108@109. Mexican dollars are quoted at 97 ₱ cent, premium in gold for new and 1½ for old, showing a decline of ½, in agreement with the New York market.

Special Notices.

THE DISTRICT CONFERENCE of the Alexandria district, Louisiana Annual Conference, will convene at Pineville, Louisiana, beginning on Thursday, September 4, 1873. All official members of the Alexandria district are members of this conference, and it is the duty of each to attend. Homes and ample accommodation will be made for ministers and official members. Turn out, brethren, and let us reason together. The introductory sermon will be preached on Thursday night, at eight o'clock, by the Rev. William N. Taylor, M. D. Ministers and members will be cited homeis by applying at the drug store of W. C. Tich, in Alexandria, or to myself in Pineville.

Bishop Keener is expected to be present.

FRED. WHITE, P. E.
CHRISTIAN KEENER, P. C.

CAMP MEETING.—The camp meeting at Crystal Springs camp ground, Copiah county, Mississippi, will commence on Wednesday, the third of September next. Ministers and members of the Methodist Church, with all others who wish to be benefited by the exercises of the occasion, are respectfully and cordially invited to be present. We sincerely hope that Methodist preachers will not wait for further invitation. We cannot think of the name of all whom we would be glad to have with us; and may therefore fail to invite each one personally. But, brethren, come to the help of the Lord. Come and help us with your prayers and exhortations.

The camp ground is within the corporate limits of Crystal Springs, one mile from the depot. Conveyance at hand at a trifling expense, and ample boarding and sleeping accommodations for all who come.

It is understood, of course, that the camp meeting is upon the self-sustaining plan of last year, which is indeed, the only practicable plan. The Camp Meeting Association expect, of course, to provide accommodations, free of charge, to all ministers coming to labor with us. We hope to make accommodating terms with the railroads for excursion tickets.

Extensive improvements are being made in the boarding department, and the fare is put down as low as it can be afforded.

Let everybody come to the Crystal Springs camp meeting—singers, preachers and all praying people especially.

All who desire to erect tents will please speak soon. The ground is being rapidly taken up.

H. J. HARRIS, P. C.,
Crystal Springs Station, Mississippi Conference.

CAMP MEETING.—There will be a camp meeting at the Line Wood camp ground, Spring Hill circuit, Meridian district, commencing on the twenty-sixth of September, 1873, which is Friday before the fourth Sunday in September. We invite all ministers who can do so to assist us. Line Wood is about twenty-two miles from Lauderdale station, Mississippi. Brethren wishing to attend will please address me at Daleville, Lauderdale county, Mississippi.

J. R. RAY, P. C.

THE JACKSON DISTRICT SUNDAY SCHOOL CONVENTION, M. E. CHURCH SOUTH.—This convention, which embraces the ministers, traveling and local, the superintendents and teachers of this district, as well as others interested in this great cause, will be held in Canton, Mississippi, beginning on Wednesday, the twenty-seventh of August next.

The committee appointed by the Jackson District Conference to secure speakers for the above occasion, without attempting to prescribe a programme for the same, would respectfully suggest the examination and discussion of the following subjects: What is the great end of Sunday school instruction? Is our literature adapted to meet the end of the Sunday school? What is the best mode of securing attendance on Sunday schools? What are the true relations of children and of Sunday schools to the church? Are denominational schools important to success? Can our Sunday school music be improved?

THOS. F. HORTON,
Chairman of Committee.

CAMP MEETINGS.—Our camp meetings will take place at the following times and places:

Bethel will commence on Friday night before the third Sabbath of September next.

Beulah will commence on Friday night before the first Sabbath of October next.

All are urged to come, but come prepared to take care of yourselves. Of course the preachers and their families will be cared for.

JAMES E. BRADLEY, P. C.,
Pleasant Hill Ct., Louisiana Conference.

Appointments for Quarterly Meetings.

NOTICE.—The Publishing Committee of the ADVOCATE gave it as their opinion that the insertion of the notices of Quarterly Conferences once or twice was sufficient, and, as the space of the paper is valuable, they passed a resolution recommending that they be not inserted more than once or twice. Our friends who are interested in these appointments will take due notice thereof, as we propose to be governed by the resolution in future.

News of the Week.

DOMESTIC.

NEW YORK, Aug. 6.—A private dispatch from Liverpool states that Captain Phillips and the officers of the wrecked steamship City of Washington have been dismissed from the employ of the company for not casting the lead during the voyage.

LITTLE ROCK, Aug. 7.—The first passenger train south to the Little Missouri river, on the Cairo and Fulton railroad, went down to-day. The Little Missouri is twenty-seven miles below Arkadelphia and ninety-two below Little Rock. Track-laying is progressing at the rate of a mile and a half per day, and it is the intention of the workmen to reach Fulton, on the Upper Red river, in twenty days.

FREDERICKSBURG, VA., Aug. 8.—The steamer Wawassett, running on the Potomac river between Washington and Curleman, took fire about twelve o'clock to-day, at Chatalatan landing, and was destroyed. She had about one hundred and fifty passengers on board.

Between forty and fifty lives were lost. Six bodies had been found up to two o'clock—those of three white ladies and one child, and two colored children. Miss Virginia Marbury, of Glymont, Miss Bettie Saunders and a child from Curleman are among the dead. The others have not been recognized. George W. Cooke, of Warsaw, Virginia, is missing. Captain Wood did not leave the boat until forced to do so by the flames. The fire was first discovered in the engine-room.

SHREVEPORT, Aug. 8.—Considerable excitement has prevailed here for two days, occasioned by the arbitrary and tyrannical conduct of Mayor Joseph Taylor, appointee of Kellogg, who, by his course, has aroused the feelings of every white citizen and a great number of the negroes. For a time a collision was feared, as both parties were armed; but wiser counsel finally prevailed and bloodshed was prevented.

A petition was circulated to-day, and signed by nearly every one, asking Taylor to resign. Finding affairs getting complicated he finally concluded to yield, and handed his resignation to the council this evening.

Policeman Johnson, who was one of the chief promoters of the trouble, was notified last evening that his absence would be acceptable, and left this morning for Texas.

MEMPHIS, Aug. 8.—The cholera has again made its appearance in the northeastern portion of this county.

PORTLAND, ME., Aug. 8.—A large fire is raging on Galtz wharf. The steamer Diregо has been burned to the water's edge; the Boston boats and the steamer Chase are in great danger. The sheds of the New York steamers are all burnt.

TOPEKA, KANSAS, Aug. 10.—The delegation of Russian Quakers who have been hunting a location for a large colony of their people have determined upon locating in Harvey county, in this State, and will return to Russia at once. The colony they represent is large, intelligent and wealthy.

LOUISVILLE, August 11.—The recently-elected General Assembly of Kentucky will be composed as follows: Senate, thirty-two Democrats and six Republicans. House of Representatives, eighty-one Democrats and nineteen Republicans. The Republicans gain two in the Senate, and the Democrats one in the House.

SAVANNAH, Aug. 11.—The first bale of the Florida crop and the second bale of the Georgia crop of cotton were received on Sunday, the tenth instant.

WASHINGTON, August 12.—Additional reports from the scene of the Wawasset disaster now place the number of persons lost at seventy-two.

FOREIGN.

LONDON, Aug. 6.—Emigration from Russia to the United States is increasing. Four hundred Russians sailed to-day in one steamer. The movement threatens to depopulate some districts in Russia.

PARIS, Aug. 7.—A Vienna dispatch says that in his late interview with Count de Chambourd Count de Paris acknowledged the former to be the head of the house of Bourbon, and of the royal line of France. On the return visit of Count de Chambourd to the Count de Paris the latter met Count de Chambourd at the door of his hotel and escorted him within.

PARIS, Aug. 8.—Henry Rochefart was examined by a physician yesterday, and pronounced able to bear the fatigue of a voyage. He was accordingly sent on board the transport Virginie this morning, with eighty-nine other convicts, for New Caledonia.

DUBLIN, Aug. 12.—A desperate riot occurred yesterday at the military camp in the borough of Kildare, between two Irish regiments. Several of the participants were killed and many received injuries.

THE first bale of new cotton from Louisiana arrived yesterday per steamer Fleta. It was grown on Mr. C. A. Pearson's plantation, Cane river, R. R., and consigned to Oscar Chopin, 26 Union street. It will be sold at auction this morning by Messrs. Nash & Hodgson.—Picayune, August 13.

A LADY returning from an unprofitable visit to church, declared that "when she saw the shawls of those Smiths, and then thought of the things her own poor girls had to wear, if it wasn't for the consolation of religion she did not know what she should do."

From the Work.

NORTH WARREN CIRCUIT, MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.—Mr. Editor: The Lord hath done great things for us, whereof we are glad. We closed a meeting at Wesley chapel, last Sunday, of ten days' duration, which resulted most gloriously. The membership was generally revived, with thirty accessions to the church and between thirty and forty conversions. Among the converts were some excellent young men, some of whom we pray God to call to the work of the ministry. Rev. H. R. Singleton, of Rocky Springs circuit, assisted us. We were also assisted efficiently by the resident local preachers of the neighborhood. That community is much favored in having resident in it three faithful, humble, efficient local preachers. All the social meetings of the church have been revived. We hope to be able to send you another cheering report before long. Pray for us.

Your brother in Christ,

IRA B. ROBERTSON, P. C.

JULY 30, 1873.

SHUMTA STATION, MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.—Mr. Editor: This place was made a station at the last session of the Mississippi Conference. Several of the brethren met us at the depot. Myself, wife and two children were amply provided for by Brother and Sister Copland. I visited, prayed and preached up to two weeks previous to the protracted meeting, when the members of the church covenanted together to pray once a day specially for a revival of religion. The meeting commenced on Saturday before the fifth Sabbath in June, and closed at night on the second Sabbath in July.

Some twenty-five were converted, and thirty made application for membership. Fifteen were received before. Total this year, up to this time, forty-five. I can say: "Thanks be to God, who giveth us the victory." "Bless the Lord, O my soul." We have organized a young men's prayer meeting. Some of the new converts are praying in public. I hope to get them all to take up the cross.

Mr. Editor, if you will allow me, through your excellent paper, I will say to the brethren of the Mississippi Conference that if they are not careful I will report more money per member paid to the church than any other charge in the Conference. The church here has already met heavy expenses in fitting up and furnishing a parsonage and supporting the pastors. Heavy assessments have been made for missionary and Conference money, also for the support of the Bishops; but we are going to pay it.

One more item. After the meeting had been in progress some three days the request was made for the business men to close their doors, that they and those in their employ might attend divine worship at eleven o'clock each day. Stores, shops, offices and retail liquor establishments closed—Jew and Gentile, all closed. Nearly all attended church. The good accomplished will scarcely be known in this world. I have no doubt it will tell upon the happy destiny of many in eternity.

JAMES M. GANN.

A VISIT TO AN ICEBERG.—A recent letter from a gentleman on board the United States steamer Juniata, at St. John's, New Foundland, contains this paragraph:

"On the third instant a large iceberg became stranded at the mouth of the harbor, and the captain wishing some of the officers to go out with him and see it, I gladly accepted the invitation, and as soon as our party was made up we started out in the steam launch. As we approached the berg the air grew sensibly colder, and we found it necessary to put on our overcoats. We ran alongside of it and measured it with our eye, which gave us thirty-five feet high, one hundred and eighty feet broad, and four hundred feet long, and as that portion below the surface bears the proportion of seven to one, we can calculate the depth of thickness of the berg to be two hundred and eighty feet, equal to eleven million two hundred thousand cubic feet, or two hundred and eighty-six thousand two hundred and twenty-five tons. The berg was melting so rapidly that water was flowing from it in every direction, preventing us from approaching very close to it, so we decided to go to a smaller one and cut some ice for our own consumption. We were very successful, as we brought on board in the neighborhood of half a ton. About five minutes after leaving the large berg we heard an explosion, and, looking around, saw that one end of the berg had burst off, and an area of about three hundred feet in length of the width of the berg, so we escaped an unpleasant dampness just in time."

A CURIOUS calculation has been made and published in a French paper in regard to hens. It reckons the number of hens in France at forty million, valued at $20,000,000. Of these about one-fifth are killed annually for the market. There is an annual net production of eighty million chickens, which in market yield $24,000,000. The extra value to be added for capons, fattened hens and the like is put at $2,200,000. The production of eggs is reckoned at an average of one hundred eggs to each hen, which are worth $48,000,000. In all it is reckoned that the value of the hens, chickens and eggs sold in the markets of France amounts to $80,000,000.

A Bishop's Death.

PARTICULARS OF THE ACCIDENT TO THE BISHOP OF WINCHESTER.

By an accident which befell the Bishop of Winchester on Saturday evening England has been suddenly deprived of one of the ablest and certainly the most popular member of the Episcopal bench. The Bishop was thrown from his horse while riding in company with Earl Granville, and his death appears to have been instantaneous. From inquiries made upon the spot we have been able to glean the following particulars relative to this melancholy event: His lordship left London on Saturday afternoon by the South-western railway, and, accompanied by Earl Granville, alighted at the Leatherhead station. Here they were met by a groom who was in charge of the saddle-horses, upon which it was their intention to proceed to the house of Mr. F. Leveson Gower, at Holmbury, near Dorking, where they contemplated making a short visit prior to proceeding onward to Mr. Gubitt's, at Denbres. It may be added that they were to be met at Holmbury by Mr. Gladstone. The horse that had been provided for the use of the Bishop is said to have been specially recommended by Earl Granville on account of its being a very quiet and sure-footed animal. The distance from Leatherhead to Holmbury is about seven or eight miles, and the route selected by the horsemen passes through one of the loveliest portions of this picturesque district. Keeping the highroad as far as Buford Bridge, the riders turned their horses to the right, and took the bridle-path, which follows the windings of the valley at the foot of Ackhurst Downs, leaving the town of Dorking a mile or so to the left. At a point of this road where it passes over the farm occupied by Mr. Evershed, about half a mile from Abinger Hall, the path becomes somewhat rough and stony; but there is a smooth stretch of mossy turf running in a line parallel with the horse-track, and upon this the three horsemen pursued their way. Unfortunately, however, the grassy strip on which they rode is broken here and there by an occasional dip or hollow; and one of these, forming a sort of natural basin in the bank, is just opposite some farm buildings belonging to Mr. Evershed, near what is known as "Evershed's Rough." Just at this point also a peculiarly charming bit of scenery bursts upon the view, and whether it was that the Bishop, while admiring the landscape, was riding with a somewhat careless rein is uncertain, but the fact is that, getting its fore feet into the hollow, his horse stumbled forward, and, before it could recover itself, the Bishop was thrown from his saddle head foremost upon the turf. His lordship being somewhat a heavy man, fell with great violence, and his death must have been as sudden as was the accident which caused it, for it was afterward found that his neck was dislocated. At the moment of the occurrence Earl Granville was riding a little in advance of the Bishop and the groom was following at a little distance behind. Slight as was the noise made by the Bishop's fall and the clattering of his horse's feet as it strove to prevent itself from going completely down, it caught the ear of the noble Earl, who saw the right reverend prelate lying motionless on the ground. Although he showed no signs of life, Lord Granville at first supposed that his companion was only stunned, and, alighting at once from his horse, the Earl endeavored to restore the Bishop to consciousness. Alarmed by the ill success of his efforts, Earl Granville dispatched the groom to Abinger Hall, the seat of Mr. Farrer, secretary to the Board of Trade, a few hundred yards from the spot, with a request for assistance. His lordship remained by the body until Mr. Farrer, who happened to be at home at the time, arrived with some of his men. The body was then placed upon a sort of hand-barrow, on which some cushions had been arranged, and was at once conveyed to Abinger Hall, Earl Granville lending his help in the melancholy task. Mounted messengers were at once dispatched for medical aid to the adjacent village of Shire, and also to Dorking, and Mr. Furnival, of the former place, and Dr. Clark, of Dorking, were speedily in attendance. Their services, however, were of no avail, as a slight examination at once made it apparent that, although there were no external marks of injury, the vertebrae of the neck had been broken. Yesterday morning, however, marks of extravasation made their appearance under the right ear. The relatives of the deceased prelate were communicated with through the medium of the postal telegraph, and yesterday morning Rev. Mr. Wilberforce, the youngest son of the Bishop, arrived at Abinger Hall, which in the course of the day was also visited by Earl Granville and Mr. Gladstone.—London Standard, July 21.

"THIRTY years ago," says an exchange paper, "a young man entered the city of New York, in an almost penniless condition, and without a single acquaintance in the great wilderness of houses. To-day his name is known wherever humanity breathes. It is spoken in every hamlet, is heard in every city, and is as familiar to the workers in the mines as to his brother in the mills, and wherever laugnago is known and ideas expressed the name of this penniless, unknown and uncouth lad of thirty years ago is uttered. It was John Smith."

Called to a Business Life.

It is an important consideration that you are permitted, if at all, to go into your business occupation by a really divine call. Not many, I suspect, ever think of such a possibility for a merely secular employment, or for any but that perhaps of the Christian ministry. Whereas the real and really grand truth is that God has a place for every man, in what is to be his particular employment, as he has a place for every rock and tree and river and star. And exactly this we assume, perhaps without knowing it, when we speak of this or that man's employment as being this or that man's calling. We use the word as in smothered meaning, tersigally only his engagement or life-occupation; but there lingers in it, we may see, a certain divine recollection, as if it were his privilege to be, as by God's personal and particular call. He may not so believe himself, but just as surely as he is in his own right place, he is in that to which he is called, whether he has ever thought of it that way or not. Some are not in their place, and it is their infelicity that they never can be. But the great majority of men I do think are led, drawn, beckoned, whispered into their calling, some pushed in by stern necessities, some by urgent wants or incapacities, some crowded in by providential circumventions. Meantime a blessed few find their places by going to God for them. And this most sublime and really glorious privilege is for all, and for all kinds of places and employments. There is such a thing as spiritual guidance for men. You can form some judgment of your calling by finding what others think of you; by considering also your tastes and temper and capabilities; what kind of loads you can carry; what kind of annoyances you can bear; also by considering what opportunities of good are afforded; and where you can make yourself of greatest consequence to mankind, and the salvation given to mankind; but then, when all such inquiries are ended, you can be absolutely sure of your calling by seeking unto God's oracle for it. Tided inwardly by his divine Spirit, as you may be, you will flow in sweetly, as by silent drift, into the very thing which is to be your calling, whether it be trade, manufacture or any other calling. And then having found your occupation, and come into it by the calling of God, what satisfaction will you have in it! How reverently, lovingly, safely will you invest your life in it! Dr. Bushnell.

The Prize Book.

The following report concerning the prize offered for the best Sunday school book has been kindly handed to us by the Sunday school secretary, to whom it was made:

"DEAR BROTHER: The committee appointed to award the prize of $300, offered by the Rev. A. H. Redford, D. D., agent of the Southern Methodist Publishing House, for the best Sunday school book, beg leave to report that, after a thorough examination of all the manuscripts submitted to them, judge that the one entitled 'Heirs of the Kingdom' deserves the prize.

ROBERT K. BROWN,
AARON L. MIMS,
MRS. MARY L. KELLEY,
MRS. MARG. H. MARSHALL,
JOSEPH D. HAMILTON,
Committee.

NASHVILLE, April 4, 1873."

Dr. Haygood informs us that he gave the manuscripts to the committee and kept the names of the writers to himself. The committee have worked faithfully during four months on eighty manuscripts. A number of them have been recommended by the committee to be published, constituting a valuable "prize series." The prize has been awarded to Mrs. F. M. Smith, wife of Prof. Smith, of the University of Virginia. In our judgment a better committee could not have been chosen. We doubt not they have made a just award.—Nashville Christian Advocate.

"HIWASSEE COLLEGE, in east Tennessee, is perhaps the cheapest institution in the country, as it is stated that the expense of a boy for one year, all told, is less than $150. We believe it has a farm connected with it, which the boys are required to cultivate. A good idea."—Brandon (Mississippi) Republican.

We can assure our contemporary, the Republican, that the boys do not cultivate that fertile farm. All the connection they have with it is to enjoy the products—the finest biscuits, beef, pork, poultry, eggs, milk, butter, apples, peaches, melons and garden vegetables. They may have to work their jaws!

"Only this, and nothing more."

See advertisement in another column.

To the Preachers.

Will the presiding elders and others who have received petitions respecting the government claim please return them, as requested, at their earliest convenience?

THERE are two sorts of timidity: timidity of mind and timidity of the nerves—a physical and moral timidity. The body may fear and tremble, while the soul remains calm and courageous, and vice versa. This gives us the key to many moral oddities. When both sorts of timidity are united in a man he will be a nullity all his life.—Balzac.

Daniel Pratt.

At the third Quarterly Conference, Prattville station, Greensboro district, Alabama Conference, held July 19, 1873, the committee, consisting of S. Mims, T. W. Sadler and C. S. G. Doster, appointed to draw up resolutions expressive of the feelings of the conference in regard to the death of Bro. Pratt, reported the following:

Whereas, Our venerated brother, DANIEL PRATT, whom it has pleased an all-wise Providence to take from our midst forever, has been the main support of the church at this place, having contributed largely, by material aid and by moral and religious example, to its foundation and support during the long period of its existence, having been one of its brightest ornaments, and most earnest, devout and useful friends; And whereas, He was a great benefactor, his life being a beautiful illustration of the Christian virtues, and eminently replete with noble charities, benefactions and good works; therefore, be it

Resolved, That we do deeply mourn the death of our beloved brother, whom we have ever loved as one of the founders of this church, and who from its organization has been one of the chief pillars of its support.

Resolved, That this Quarterly Conference regard his death as a calamity to the church at large, and more particularly as a great misfortune and sad bereavement to the church at Prattville, and that we feel that words are inadequate to the task of the expression of our appreciation of the overwhelming loss sustained by us.

Resolved, That our secretary be directed to furnish a copy of these resolutions to the family of our deceased brother, and that he transmit to the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE a copy of the same for publication.

Young Men's Christian Association.

MR. EDITOR: Doubtless your many readers will be glad to learn that in the rooms of the Young Men's Christian Association, No. 82 Camp street, a noon-day prayer meeting was inaugurated yesterday. There was a large attendance, and the young men felt greatly encouraged. The meeting lasts for but one-half hour—twelve to half-past twelve o'clock—and it is hoped that great spiritual benefit may result from even so short a time taken daily from the cares of business to "wait upon the Lord." It is earnestly desired that the Christian mothers, daughters and sisters of New Orleans will remember to attend our meetings as often as may be convenient for them.

Fraternally yours,

JOHN T. SAWYER,
General Secretary Y. M. C. A.

Incidents of a Pastor.

The relation the devoted pastor sustains to his flock is mutually pleasant and dear, and is intensified as their lives flow together, forming one of the most sacred bonds on earth. Volumes might be condensed and made up of these sketches of real life that would afford amusement, recreation and profit to the reader. If "history repeats itself," so life is a repetition of itself, history being only a concatenation of incidents in men's lives.

To show the animus of the church that claims greatest antiquity, and stands forth venerable in years, and sins too, let me relate two significant incidents that have occurred with this pastor within twenty days of this month. And let the people observe.

INCIDENT I.

My duties as pastor called me to visit a most excellent lady who was very ill. She had been a probationer in our church, but had lost her identity by moving from place to place, and so was among the unfolded sheep. I had, a year previously, visited the family—prayed with them and instructed the children, as usual. They determined at that time to reunite with the church. At the time alluded to the lady's illness continued and became more alarming. I repeated my visits with the usual religious exercises, having the comforting belief that her mind was clear and her faith in the Redeemer strong. A few days before her death a friend visiting her asked if she would not receive a visit from the priest, to which she replied in the affirmative, for the sake of her friend. Accordingly the priest came. Approaching the bed he said: "Will you be instructed by me?" She replied: "I believe we can be Christians in any church." The priest said: "Think about it, and you pray and I will pray. I will see you again." Next morning he came again and asked her: "Are you ready now to be christened?" She answered: "No; but, Father ——, pray for me." "No," he replied, "not unless you are in the church." He left instantly.

A few nights subsequently I was sent for, together with her children, who were at a neighbor's. She was thought to be dying. I arrived about midnight, found her somewhat better—calm, quiet, placid, a seraphic smile on her face, her faith strong in Jesus. After a few words of conversation, kissing her children and saying, "O what a happy family!" she said: "Bro. W., I wish you to baptize my little boy and receive us all into the church." I said: "Certainly." And there, at one o'clock A. M., the dear little boy was baptized and the family received into the church. It reminded me of the incident, rich in interest and doctrine, when Paul, "at midnight," baptized the jailer and his household. That occurred on Wednesday night. On Saturday, strong in faith, she met and triumphed over death, and on Sabbath, at four o'clock P. M., the funeral discourse was preached to a large and weeping audience.

INCIDENT II.

A dispatch came for me to go out to a village, sixteen miles distant, to see a young man who was dying. His mother and sisters, all out there, were members of my charge. When I got there I found him better, but still very sick. I conversed and prayed with him, and left him for the night in a very satisfactory frame of mind. Next morning I found him apparently still better, and, after suitable instruction, at his request I baptized and received him into the church, and left for home, thankful that I was not too late, and that the dear young man was so comfortable in body and mind.

After the lapse of a week he gained sufficient strength to be removed to this place to his mother's. I visited him yesterday; found him convalescing rapidly. He and his mother related to me substantially these facts: The Saturday before I was to see him on Monday the lady at whose house he was sick urged his mother to send for the priest who officiated at the village chapel. On coming in he approached the bed and said: "Are you ready to confess to me and be christened?" and asked his mother to leave the room, that he might make confession. The young man turned his eyes to his mother, as much as to say: "I cannot." His mother said: "Would you like for me to send for Bro. W.?" He said: "Yes." She then asked the priest to pray for her son. He said: "No, I will not, unless he comes into the church," and gruffly bowed out.

Comment is unnecessary. These priests agreed in the two instances. Is that the style of that "holy apostolic church?"

May almighty God save us from such bigotry, arrogance and exclusiveness from the heresies of auricular confession and priestly absolution and their legitimate cognates.

THIS laconic but sensible German ought to be sent out to lecture among the people on temperance:

"I sall tell you how it vas. I drink mine lager; den I put mine hand on mine head, and dere vosh vone pain. Den I put mine hand on mine body, and dere vosh anoder pain. Den I put mine hand in mine pocket, and dere was nothing. So I jine mit de temperance. Now dere is no pain more in mine head, and de pain in mine body vas all gone away. I put mine hand in mine pocket, and dere vas dwenty dollars. So I stay mit de temperance."

BY SARAH BOSBEY.

The Sabbath sun had set; another day
Would bring its weary strife and cares unknown;
But, while I mused amid the shadows gray,
The children called that twilight hour their own.

Gladly they gathered at their father's feet,
Telling their happy hopes and little cares;
Hearing that voice, to childish ears so sweet
Speak of a higher, better life than theirs.

Laying up comfort for the coming days,
Storing up strength to quell the foes unmet;
Learning unconsciously to tread the ways
Of that wide world so little known as yet.

So I will kneel before my Father's feet,
So will I call this twilight hour mine own,
Hearing the "still, small voice," so calm and sweet,
That bids me come and talk with Him alone.

So shall I gain, in these last Sabbath hours,
Strength for the morrow, courage for the strife,
And wake at sunrise, armed with lofty powers
To wage my warfare on the field of life.

Learning to bear what must be meekly borne,
Striving in simple faith to work and pray,
Until the sunrise of a fairer morn
Gives to the world an endless Sabbath-day.

The Southern Review and the Temperance Cause.

MR. EDITOR: The author of the ninth article of the April number of the Review, after arraigning temperance men and convicting them to his own satisfaction of "high crimes and misdemeanors,"—proceeds to give us his own creed in the premises, which is as follows: "Preach temperance, then, we say, but preach it in all things. Denounce drunkenness, but don't attempt to bring Christianity into contempt. If men can use wine temperately, let them do so; it is nowhere prohibited by our Savior. If they cannot, then let them abstain. Their own safety requires it." It is perceived that we have his permission to preach temperance, but it must be temperance in all things. With becoming gratitude we accept this measure of privilege. It is presumed that by temperance in all things the reviewer means temperance as a Christian virtue—that temperance of which Paul discoursed before Felix, and which he included among the fruits of the Spirit, and which Peter regarded as an essential link in that beautiful chain of graces which he constructed in his second epistle.

The Greek term which is rendered temperance in the English text of the New Testament is defined in the lexicon of Liddell and Scott as "moderation in sensual pleasures, self-control, abstinence from or in a thing;" and in Robinson's Greek Testament lexicon it is defined as "continence, temperance, self-control," while the corresponding adjective is rendered as "master of one's self, continent, temperate, abstinent." The Latin noun from which our term temperance is immediately derived is rendered by the lexicons, "moderation, sobriety, abstinence," and other kindred terms. Cicero is perhaps an unsurpassed authority as to the meaning of a word in his own language, and he tells us that what we call "temperance is the unyielding control of reason over lust, and over all wrong tendencies. * * * It means abstinence from all things not good, and entire innocency of character." Webster defines temperance as "habitual moderation in regard to the indulgence of the natural appetites and passions," while Worcester gives it as "moderation, especially in drink, abstinence." The philosopher Hobbes tells us that "temperance is the habit by which we abstain from all things that tend to our destruction; intemperance is the contrary vice." Temperance as a Christian virtue, Mr. Wesley tells us, and Mr. Benson adopts his definition, "implies the voluntary abstaining from all pleasure which does not lead to God;" while Dr. Clarke affirms that it is "a proper and limited use of all earthly enjoyments, keeping every sense under proper restraint, and never permitting the animal part to subjugate the rational."

In view of these authorities, we are justified in saying that the fundamental idea in temperance, as a virtue or quality, is self-government or self-control, and in its application to food and drink it means the moderate and proper use of those things which are suitable to the system and health, and which are not generally attended by ill consequences, and entire abstinence from those things which are of contrary character. "It is the moderate use of all good things, but total abstinence from all bad things." Water, "as it is the most ancient," is no doubt the most appropriate of beverages, quenching the thirst, supplying food for the tissues and aiding digestion. Yet this fluid, so suitable and so pleasant, may be taken in excess. It must be taken in moderate and proper quantities, even when it is pure. Sea-water, the waters of certain springs impregnated with peculiar mineral substances, and those of certain rivers, on account of the vast accumulations of vegetable matter through which they flow—as the Red river, for example—are unsuitable to the system, and even poisonous. In regard to such, total abstinence is the only plan, and is imperatively required by a true temperance. There are certain liquids which, when taken in small quantities and in certain morbid conditions of the system, are useful as remedies, but which in health and in large quantities are positively injurious and destructive, as laudanum, chloral hydrate, and croton oil. Temperance certainly requires entire abstinence from these, save when they are employed strictly as remedial agents. Suppose there are certain liquors which are used as beverages among men, which yet are unnecessary to health, strength, intelligence, morality, to the development of any virtue or the performance of any duty, which are peculiarly deceiving and seductive, and peculiarly liable to be taken in excess, and which, when so taken, lead to disease and death, to the supremacy of the appetites and passions, to ignorance, vice and crime; what would Christian temperance require in regard to such? The only possible answer is total abstinence, unless some of them may be used in medicine, under the conscientious direction of an intelligent physician.

Let us see whether the description just given is applicable to alcoholic liquors. Scientific and experienced physicians are, it would seem, peculiarly qualified to give a just opinion in regard to the nature and effects of these liquids. They have studied them as a part of their education; they have seen in their practice much of their moral and more of their physical effects, and they may be regarded as experts. Twenty-five years ago a careful declaration was prepared and signed by more than two thousand English physicians of all "grades and degrees," including "metropolitan surgeons" and "country practitioners," which was as follows: "We, the undersigned, are of opinion—1. That a very large portion of human misery, including poverty, disease and crime, is induced by the use of alcoholic or fermented liquors as beverages. 2. That the most perfect health is compatible with total abstinence from all such intoxicating beverages, whether in the form of ardent spirits, or as wine, beer, ale, porter, cider, etc. 3. That persons accustomed to such drinks may with perfect safety discontinue their use, either at once or in a short time. 4. That total and universal abstinence from alcoholic liquors and beverages of all sorts would greatly contribute to the health, the prosperity, the morality and the happiness of the human race." This document was signed by Dr. Neil Arnott, physician to the Queen, and author of "Elements of Physics;" Sir. W. Burnett, M. D., F. R. S., physician general to the navy; Dr. W. B. Carpenter, F. R. S., the celebrated writer on physiology; Sir H. Holland, M. D., F. R. S., physician to the Queen; Sir J. McGrigor, Bart., M. D., F. R. S., director general of the army medical department; Dr. J. A. Paris, president of the Royal College of Surgeons, and many others of eminence in the profession.

Eighteen months ago nearly three hundred of the most eminent members of the faculty in London, including George Burrows, M. D., F. R. S., president of the Royal College of Physicians, and physician extraordinary to the Queen, and George Busk, F. R. S., president of the Royal College of Surgeons, put forth another testimony, in which it is declared that "alcohol, in whatever form, should be prescribed with as much care as any other powerful drug;" that "many people immensely exaggerate the value of alcohol as an article of diet;" that "every medical practitioner is bound to exert his utmost influence to inculcate habits of great moderation in the use of alcoholic liquors;" that "the great amount of drinking among the working classes is one of the greatest evils of the day, destroying more than anything else, the health, happiness and welfare of those classes," and that "they would gladly support any wise legislation which would tend to restrict, within proper limits, the use of alcoholic liquors and gradually introduce habits of temperance."

Within the last three or four months a number of physicians of the city of New York and its vicinity, including Edward Delafield, M. D., president of the College of Physicians and Surgeons; Willard Parker, M. D., ex-president of the Academy of Medicine; A. Clark, M. D., professor of the College of Physicians and Surgeons; Alfred C. Post, M. D., LL. D., professor of surgery, University Medical College; Elisha Harris, M. D., secretary of the Public Health Association, and others of eminence, have issued a declaration, in which it is stated that "alcohol should be classed with other powerful drugs, and when prescribed medicinally it should be with conscientious caution and a sense of grave responsibility;" that "the use of alcoholic liquors as a beverage is productive of a large amount of physical disease, entails diseased appetites upon offspring, and is the cause of a large per centage of the crime and pauperism of our cities and country," and that "they would welcome any judicious legislation which would seek to confine the traffic in alcohol to the legitimate purposes of medical and other sciences, art and mechanism."

That these liquids are not necessary to strength, and to the endurance of heat or cold, exposure or fatigue, has been proved by an array of facts which is overwhelming. The most athletic and powerful men on record were among those who practiced total abstinence. The most famous navigators to the polar regions have testified that the use of such liquors is not only unnecessary, but actually harmful in the endurance of cold. The evidence of laborers in the harvest-field, of artisans in the manufacture of armor plates, and of workers in furnaces, shows that they are not necessary to the endurance of great heat. The experience of travelers to every clime and of soldiers in every region demonstrates that they are not necessary to the endurance of fatigue or the withstanding of miasmatic influences. Dr. Livingstone, the famous African explorer, says, from his own experience, that "the most severe labors or privations may be undergone without alcoholic stimulants;" and Dr. Hamilton, an eminent surgeon in the United States army during the war, and now professor in the Bellevue Medical College, in speaking of the lesson taught by his observation, says "that the regular routine employment of alcoholic stimulants by man in health is never, under any circumstances, useful."

Time need scarcely be taken to show that any use of these liquids is unnecessary to intelligence, to virtue, to domestic or social enjoyment, to elegance and grace of manner, to activity and usefulness of life. Let the matter be subjected to the test of experience, in almost every community there are those from every rank in society who are abstainers from alcoholic drinks, and are known as such. Are they less agreeable, less courteous or less joyful than those who pursue a different course? Are they less bright in their intellects, less literary in their tastes or less distinguished for knowledge? Are they less interested in their families, less devoted to their children, or do they take less pleasure in their homes and domestic associations? Are they less happy in social life, less attentive to its real claims, and less regardful of that graciousness and true benevolence which give to society its refinement and leading charm? Do they command less the confidence of their fellow-men, are they less solicited by the virtuous to take positions of honor and profit, or do they act less useful or distinguished parts in the arena of life? Are they, as professing Christians, less earnest or less orthodox in their piety, less efficient in their religious lives or less assured of the divine acceptance? Few, it is presumed, whose opinion is entitled to respect, would maintain the affirmative of any one of these questions.

Let us look for a moment at the seductive character of these liquors. There seems to be no special natural taste for them. At first they afford no pleasure; in many cases they are repulsive, and they may be touched rarely and lightly. With every potation the sensation is more pleasant, and the desire for them is enhanced. More is demanded and more too often is taken, until a fearful habit is formed. Prof. Upham, in his well-known treatise on Mental Philosophy, in describing the progress from the first touch to inebriation, tells us that the wine-bibber and the drinker of ardent spirits may not be aware of the process going on; indeed might suspect "that chains were gathering around them, whatever be the cause; but what objection had they to be bound with links of flowers, delightful while they lasted, and easily broken when necessary! But here was the mistake. Link was added to link, chain was woven with chain, till he who boasted of his strength was at last made sensible of his weakness, and found himself a prisoner and a degraded slave." Step by step the unhappy man advances, receiving in every fresh indulgence an addition to his infatuation and to the burden weighing him down, until that which he bore lightly, and thought that he could easily cast off, "now presses him like a coat of iron and galls like fetters of steel," and can only be put away from him by an extraordinary and too often impossible exertion of the will. Well did Prof. Johnston, the distinguished Scotch author, tell us, though himself an anti-abstainer, in his "Chemistry of Common Life," that "the peculiar danger attendant upon the consumption of intoxicating drinks arises from their extreme seductiveness, and from the all but unconquerable strength of the drinking habit when once formed."

It is not affirmed that all who touch these liquors come to drink them to excess, but it is a fearful fact that very many do so come, and that there are very few who are not liable to such excess. Many who were distinguished for intelligence and strength of character—the acute business man, the sedate judge and the reverend bishop—have yielded to the baneful attraction, sacrificed all that is valuable in life, and become wretched and irreclaimable slaves. Thousands of drunkards fall annually, and thousands pass from the crowd of such as claim to be only moderate drinkers to fill up the depleted ranks. Here the counsel of the apostle is pre-eminently applicable: "Wherefore let him that thinketh he standeth take heed lest he fall." There is no assured safety to any man but in entire abstinence.

Our reviewer tells us to preach temperance, and to preach it in all things. So say we with all our hearts. But, pray, what does temperance, the principle—temperance, the Christian virtue—require in regard to alcoholic liquors, so deceiving and seductive in their nature, so pregnant with woe and death? Entire abstinence, and nothing less, we say. Let us put the argument in the form of a syllogism. A Christian temperance requires a proper and moderate use of those things, as food and drink, which are suitable to the system, and of no hurtful tendency; and entire abstinence from those things which are unsuitable or unnecessary and hurtful. Alcoholic liquors as a beverage are unnecessary to the system, peculiarly liable to excessive use, and the cause of infinite calamity to society. Therefore a Christian temperance requires total abstinence from them, save as they may be used strictly as medicines.

Thus, after all that the reviewer has said in derogation of the temperance cause, his own creed, by a course of fair and legitimate deduction, leads to the great characteristic principle of that movement—a total abstinence from all intoxicating liquors.

Contrary to expectation, it is found that, to complete the plan of discussion, room must be asked for another communication. S.

Popular Preachers.

MR. EDITOR: Walker defines popular to mean "beloved by the people, pleasing to the people, studious of the favor of the people."

The Methodist Episcopal Church South claims to inherit the priceless legacy of "spreading scriptural holiness over these lands." Every ordained minister is under solemn obligation to make this his one all-absorbing work, and whenever he is "studious of the favor of the people"—"seeks to be beloved of the people"—it is at the cost of a violated vow. Jesus has said: "Woe unto you when all men shall speak well of you, for so did their fathers unto the false prophets." Paul says: "Yea, and all that will live godly in Christ Jesus shall suffer persecution."

Popular preachers are in great demand—every charge wants one. Their preaching is so delightful, chaste, rhetorical, latitudinarian. They use soft, euphonious phraseology when showing "Israel her sins." Sinners are comforted in their sins under the mantle of "universal fatherhood." Arrows for conviction find lodgment in the outer garments only.

As pastors they are charming. Well versed in Dickens, Bulwer and literature of like character, there is no lack of topics for conversation. After some forty minutes spent in sociable pleasantries, they leave as they entered, without one word of Christian counsel delivered in the fear of God, or prayer for the household, unless some mother in Israel makes special request for prayers. They have learned that it will not be "popular" to insist upon an attendance at class and prayer meetings, and a love-feast would be a novelty in some charges.

The "dear old Discipline" is a precious relic of frontier history, when men were rude and did naughty things. But religious culture and intellectual development readily dispense with its service. It is retained, but simply as a relic of the past.

"Heartfelt religion?" What an antiquarian you must be to ask such a question. That old notion of Moses, "Lord, teach us to number our days, that we may apply our hearts unto wisdom," might have answered in his day. Now wisdom comes through the intellectual faculties.

They are the champions of various doubtful practices, used at fairs to raise money for church purposes. The honor of men is precious to them, no matter if it is written: "Not unto us, but unto thy name be all the glory." It seems to me the prime cause of our present spiritual lethargy arises from the desire of our ministers to be popular—to "please the people, studious of the favor of the people."

It is well enough for lawyers, physicians and other professional characters to make the most of their position before the world, as their relation to men is fleeting and of an earthly character. Ministers of God should beware how they drink from the chalice of the world's applause, for a deadly poison has been distilled in it.

To be popular before God and the holy angels is a laudable ambition. It will require great grace to receive the world's approval and be innocent. The "popular" minister stands in a slippery place, and the church should pray for him. Let the aim of all be to merit the approval of Jesus and to have a clear conscience; then the church will be "a power in the land." RENWOOD.

Is the Love of Money the Root of All Evil?

So reads the A. V.; but is this true? All evil originated from the primeval transgression of our federal head. There are many evils growing out of our general depravity. The love of money is certainly not the root of all. Rage, malice, revenge, hatred may certainly exist apart from the love of money. The difficulty disappears when we examine the original. This is certainly an incorrect translation. We speak definitely in the Greek language by the use of the article generally by its omission. In the original there is no article "Riza gar panton," etc. This gives a very different meaning—a root of all evil being one source, among many, which has sprung from our depravity. The love of money, then, is a root or source of all evil, but not the source (the only source) of all evil.

W. S. W.

WAITING TO BE GATHERED.—In his address at the recent Home Missionary anniversary the chairman, Mr. Vanner, referring to Rev. Luke Wiseman, president of the British Wesleyan Conference, said: Mr. Wiseman had a beautiful sermon, which set forth this duty in its true bearing. He had heard that sermon more than once (a laugh,) and had enjoyed it every time; for, as Mr. Wiseman did not deal in stereotype, the sermon became better and better the oftener it was delivered. The subject of the sermon was the woman of Samaria, to whom Christ spoke at the well-side. He preached the truth to her, she was converted under it, and her conversion led the way to a rich harvest of souls in the city of Samaria.

The disciples marveled at their Master talking to such a woman. They were shocked; something like many persons nowadays—a certain respectable class of church-going people. Then the Savior said to his disciples in reference to the work that lay before them: "Say not ye, There are yet four months, and then cometh harvest? Behold, I say unto you, Lift up your eyes, and look on the fields; for they are white already to harvest." And so now the harvest was waiting to be gathered in. The harvest-fields might appear very unpromising ones, but how many such had been turned into the garden of the Lord through the work of Christ carried on in them by his followers! Who would be the reapers? There was a bit of work for everybody. Perhaps it was close at hand, near to our very door. Who would gather in the harvest? The fields were ripe and ready for the sickle.

AN ALLEGORY.—"Patience, until I become a butterfly, and then I shall laugh at all my enemies." This was a common saying with a caterpillar, while it was yet a caterpillar. At last the moment of its transformation came. On a beautiful summer's morning it arose out of its dark sepulcher, dressed in a rich golden attire, and strong in the strength of a new life. "Yes," said she, as she looked upon herself, "now that I am satisfied with nature, now I am safe!" But alas! she erred. A single leaf could screen the dark-hued caterpillar from many enemies, even from the sharp-sighted hunter of insects. Now, as a many-colored butterfly, she shone in radiant beauty, drew on her the eyes of a hundred pursuers, and saw only too soon the impossibility of eluding them all. In vain she plied her new-born wings with diligence, in vain she flew fearfully from bough to bough, from flower to flower. The craft of her enemies surprised her after all, and on the third day she was impaled upon the murderous needle of an entomologist. A dazzling glory is often the forerunner of destruction.—Meissner.

DURING the late war a man out West, in a small gathering of friends, was urging upon their minds the importance of enlisting. "Go, my brave friends," said he; "fight for your country—die for it; it is sweet to die for your native land." "But," said one, "if it is sweet to die for one's country, why don't you go?" This was a poser, and for a moment disconcerted him; but, rallying, he declared that he, as an individual, "was not fond of sweet things."

Obituaries.

DIED, at the residence of her son-in-law, Mr. P. Saunders, in Hillsboro, Mississippi, July 6, 1873, Mrs. ANNA J. SENNERRY, a native of Fayetteville, North Carolina, in the sixty-fifth year of her age. Her maiden name was Fletcher, and she was married to her now bereaved husband, S. H. Sedberry, Esq., in 1826. Early in life she embraced religion, joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, and to her death remained a zealous Christian—a firm, devoted lover of the church and her cause. For a year before her death her sufferings were often great; but she was prepared and waiting for her call. It was thought that her health had improved, and three months ago she came with her husband on a visit to Mississippi, but her old disease returned suddenly. Medical skill and devoted love were unavailing, and our gentle, lovely mother passed to her eternal rest.

M. P. S.

PARTHENA BURNHAM died in Scott county, Mississippi, July 3, 1873, of consumption, aged fifty-seven years, nine months and eighteen days. She was the fourth daughter of James and Courtney Spence. She was born in Camden county, North Carolina, November 15, 1815; married D. J. Burnham, December 15, 1831; and emigrated with her husband to Scott county, Mississippi, in 1838, where she lived, respected by all who knew her, until her death. She embraced religion at Good Hope, Leake county, Mississippi, in the year 1848, when and where she united with the Methodist Episcopal Church South, in which she lived an acceptable and devoted Christian until the Master said: "It is enough; come up higher." She was confined to her room for six months prior to her death, and suffered much and most patiently, without a murmur, rejoicing frequently in the love of God, and the blessed hope of immortality and eternal life. The highest eulogy that can be passed upon the deceased is that she discharged her duties promptly, in good faith, in all the relations of life, especially to her God and her family; and by the above she, "being dead, yet speaketh." May God bless and save the bereaved husband and children.

MRS. ELIZABETH GALLOWAY, wife of Dr. C. B. Galloway, of Canton, Mississippi, and mother of Rev. C. B. Galloway, of the Mississippi Conference, died in Canton, July 16, 1873.

Thus has passed away from earth a meek, pious Christian, a beloved and honored member of society, and a faithful and devoted wife and mother. She was a consistent member of the Baptist Church for nearly thirty years. Her religious convictions and feelings were deep, abiding and constant, her faith in Christ was the principle of life, and her delight was in the word of God, and on that word did she love to meditate.

Gentle and retiring in disposition, her adorning was the ornament of a meek and quiet spirit. In the private circles of life the luster of her example was bright, and her Christian devotion and purity of character best appreciated and most admired.—Chaste, refined and elevated in her conversation, feelings and affections, she was the center of a holy influence that molded and stamped the character of those who daily lived within its circle. With a pure and exalted devotion to husband and children, her influence upon them is the fruit of a holy life that lives after her. To them her memory is a rich legacy, her example, her counsels and her prayers a priceless treasure that cannot fail.

Her last sickness was protracted, but endured with patience and cheerfulness. Permitted to go down to the grave gradually, she had time for meditation, and when the hour of final conflict came, she felt ready. Strong and unwavering in that faith by which she lived, she exclaimed: "I know that my Redeemer liveth."

R. J. JONES.

EDWARD WINANS HINES, son of Rev. William B. and Mrs. J. F. Hines, of the Mississippi Conference, was born at Bethel, Wilkinson county, Mississippi, March 29, 1855, and died at the residence of the writer, in Jackson, Louisiana, July 2, 1873.

It is most sad to see one so gifted with promise and enshrined in the hearts of loving ones stricken down on the very threshold of usefulness. But it is matter of devout thankfulness that there was everything connected with the life and death of our young friend needful to furnish submission to the sad event, and to inspire with resignation and hope.

He was a youth of bright mind and gentle disposition, and his training, both intellectual and moral, had been such as to produce the due development of his natural gifts. From his earliest infancy he was instructed in the history and morals of the Bible; was satisfactorily converted, amid the quietness of his own home, during the summer of 1872; had been a member of the Methodist Church about a year before his conversion.

He became a student of Centenary College of Louisiana in November, 1872; was faithful in all his duties, and learned rapidly, having been mentioned as among the best in the college in the regular monthly reports.

About the middle of June he was taken with a disease which soon proved itself to be typhoid fever. The slow but stubborn and insidious malady did not seem to be at all stayed by the skill of physicians or the attention of friends and fellow-students, but simply marched steadily onward from its beginning to the accomplishment of its destructive work. His bodily sufferings were very great; but from the very first he expressed unshaken confidence in his Savior. Even in his delirium he would talk of Jesus and shout his praises.

We weep with his reverend father and his loving mother in the loss of their noble son, but rejoice with them in the legacy of a stainless memory he has left them for this world, and the assurance of eternal joy in the other one.

C. G. ANDREWS.

CENTENARY COLLEGE, July 12, 1873.

REV. THOMAS C. BROWN, M. D., late of Jefferson county, Mississippi, was the son of John and Nancy Brown, and was born in Georgia, April 26, 1809, and died May 25, 1873. His father having died when he was four years old, his mother, with her children and servants, moved to the Mississippi Territory in time to make a crop in 1805, in Adams county. She then settled in Wilkinson county, where she reared her family. Thomas received a good rudimental education at the country schools. When about twelve years old, from reading the Bible, he was deeply impressed with the importance of personal piety; but none of the family being then professors of religion, he kept his convictions to himself until they gradually wore off, and he grew up a godless youth. At the age of eighteen he was placed at Harpeth Academy, in Franklin, Tennessee, then under the presidency of Rev. Gideon Blackburn, D. D., where he continued three years, studying the sciences and classics. While here he was again led to read the Bible, and soon became an earnest seeker of personal salvation. He joined the Methodist Episcopal Church as a seeker of religion, and was soon after converted, at a camp meeting held in the vicinity of Franklin, Tennessee, in 1819. Soon after his conversion he returned home, bringing the evidences of his church membership with him, and united with the church at Woodville, Mississippi, where he spent two years in the study of medicine. But his soul was not at rest. From the time of his accession to the household of faith he had felt a great desire to lead others to the Savior of sinners, and this had grown into a settled conviction that he was called of God to preach the gospel. He made known his impressions to the preachers on the circuit where he held his membership, and, being licensed to exhort, he was first employed by William Winans, presiding elder, to assist John Seaton on Amite circuit, in 1823, and, in the same year, to fill a vacancy on Claiborne circuit. Here the writer first became intimate with him, and for fifty years witnessed the Christian nobility of his heart, and the beauty and consistency of his Christian and ministerial character. In the fall of 1823 he was licensed to preach and was admitted into the itinerancy. He traveled successively Tuskaloosa, Washita and Warren circuits. On each of these circuits he was popular and useful. His superior education, his agreeable manners, his Wesleyan style and earnestness in preaching rolled away reproach, and attracted public attention to the church. But, alas for the flattering prospects of the church in the promising young preacher! He was tall and spare, and from his youth inclined to weakness of the lungs, so that after laboring three years on the large circuits of those early days he was so prostrated that his best medical advisers told him he must rest awhile or the consequences might soon be fatal. It was his misfortune, as well as that of many of the young preachers of that period, to acquire the habit of speaking too loud; but who could blame us, with such exemplars as we then had in our elder brethren? Dr. Brown was local three years; and then made another attempt to itinerate; but one year's experience convinced him that he had not the physical ability for the work, and he gracefully retired to the local ranks, where he was always acceptable and useful until finally disabled by age and disease. He was at short interval engaged in the drug-business, but spent most of the last forty years of his life in the practice of medicine in various localities. He never wore out anywhere, either as a local elder or physician, but the financial revolutions of the country, in connection with the death of his first two wives, occasioned him to make a number of removals. In 1837, by the solicitation of the writer, he settled in Fayette, Mississippi, and the following year he married Mrs. Martha Ann Liddell in that vicinity, where he had a home of comfort, peace and plenty until released from earth.

Dr. Brown was, in the proper sense of the term, a good man, and reliable as a Christian in all the trials and relations of life. He was a true Methodist of the olden stamp. He revered and loved the church of his early choice to the end of life. When not able to preach he would serve the church in any capacity he could—as class or prayer meeting leader or Sabbath school teacher. If the writer had space he would like to speak of the many triumphant and happy days we had spent together as co-laborers in the Lord's vineyard; but let that pass for the present. No doubt his temperate habits and calm religious life added to his longevity. He died a little in advance of seventy-three years; his disease was clearly consumption, to which he seemed inclined from early manhood. His descent to the grave was graceful, calm and full of religious comfort. He often conversed very rationally and religiously about his approaching end. His pastor, Rev. J. H. Sheiton, visited him often, to whom he said that the gospel he had preached to others he now found to be a savor of life unto life to his own soul. Just before he breathed his last he put his arms around his weeping wife and said: "I am very happy." At the end of fifty years, spent in unbroken Christian love, I now say, for the present: "Farewell, Brother Tom. We shall meet again."

THE EXISTENCE OF GOD.

BY THOMAS O. STOCKTON, D. D.

We need not soar above the skies,
Leave suns and stars below,
And seek thee with unclouded eyes,
In all that angels know;
The very breath we here inhale,
The pulse in every heart,
Attest whh force that cannot fail,
Thou art, O God! thou art!

Amidst the ever-during song
Of universal joy,
The ecstasy of worlds and chant of holiness,
The praise that we employ,
May breathe its music in thine ear,
Its meaning in thy heart,
Our glad confession deign to hear:
Thou art, O God! thou art!

THROUGH LIFE.

We slight the gifts that every season bears,
And let them fall unheeded from our grasp,
In our greed eagerness to reach and clasp
The promised treasure of the coming years;

Or else we mourn some great good passed away,
And, in the shadow of our grief shut in,
Refuse the lesser good we yet might win—
The offered peace and gladness of to day.

So through the chambers of our life we pass,
And leave them one by one, and never stay,
Not knowing how much pleasantness there was
In each, until the closing of the door
Has sounded through the house and died away,
And in our hearts we sigh: "For evermore."

Resurrection, or Resurrections?

BY REV. D. A. WHEDON, D. D.

Whether there is one general resurrection of the dead to occur at the close of time, or a resurrection of the righteous dead at the coming of Christ, to live and reign with him on the earth for a thousand years, and a separate resurrection of the wicked after the close of the thousand years, is a question just now agitated with some vigor, greatly to the disturbance of many pious minds. Its true answer is to be learned only from the Scriptures, and happily they do not speak upon the point with a doubtful voice.

The theory of two resurrections rests entirely upon a single passage in the twentieth chapter of the Revelation—the most highly figurative book in the Bible. The passage is at best of doubtful import, and for that reason cannot, by any legitimate rules of interpretation, be employed as a basis of doctrine, especially of a different doctrine from what is elsewhere expressed with clearness. It reads thus: "I saw thrones, and they sat upon them, and judgment was given unto them; and I saw the souls of them that were beheaded for the witness of Jesus, and for the word of God, and which had not worshiped the beast, neither his image, neither had received his mark upon their foreheads, or in their hands, and they lived and reigned with Christ a thousand years. But the rest of the dead lived not again until the thousand years were finished. This is the first resurrection."

Now (1) the word "again" is without critical authority; even Alford rejecting it from his Greek text. (2.) Nobody would have dreamed of any reference here to a coming forth from the grave, had it not been for the word "resurrection." That it means a resurrection of dead bodies is pure assumption. There is a spiritual resurrection, as well as a physical, and Dr. Hodge has well remarked that "the resurrection of the dead is never spoken of in the Scriptures in the way in which the living again of the martyrs is here described." (3.) The scene of this dramatic picture is in heaven. John saw in his vision the souls of the martyrs which he had previously seen "under the altar," enthroned and reigning with Christ; and prominent among them, those of them who had rejected all fellowship with the beast. And this, in his symbolic style, he calls a "resurrection." But it was souls that he saw, and not bodies; and the special mention of souls excludes the idea of bodies. The resurrection, whatever it may signify, is not, then, literal. And that all the righteous who have lived on earth, from Adam downward, and who shall have lived prior to the consummation mentioned, are included, is another pure assumption. They are the martyrs alone; and if we are to be quite exact, only that portion of them who have been "beheaded." (4.) The meaning may be that, as Elijah lived again in John the Baptist, who had his spirit and power, so the spirit of these martyrs shall be found in Christians when satan shall have been bound, and "the thousand years" specifies rather the period of the binding of satan than of the reign of Christ.

But that Christ's reign is from an earthly throne is a Jewish notion, not so much as hinted in the chapter. That the resurrection of the righteous will precede that of the wicked is sometimes thought to be taught in St. Paul's words: "The dead in Christ shall rise first;" but the argument in proof is very much like that of the young thief who would show from Scripture that it was commanded him to steal. The apostle is speaking (First Thessalonians iv, 13-17) of Christians only, and simply says that they who shall be living when Christ comes will have no advantage over those who shall have died; for, as Ellicott translates it, "the dead in Christ shall rise first; then we (the living) who are remaining, at the same time, together with them, shall be caught up in clouds to meet the Lord into the air, and so shall we be ever together with the Lord."

The common theory of the church is, as it has always been, that there is but one resurrection of the dead—a general resurrection of good and bad alike, at which time bodies of all then living on the earth, whether saints or sinners, will undergo a change from corruptible and mortal to incorruptible and immortal. It teaches that this will occur at the second coming of Christ, and will be immediately followed by the general judgment and the end of the world. This is the common, harmonious doctrine of the Scriptures. They put both the resurrection and the judgment on the "last day." Of the believer in him, Jesus says: "I will raise him up at the last day;" and of him who rejects him: "The word that I have spoken, the same shall judge him in the last day." Observe the definiteness of the last day. But on the two-resurrection theory, the so-called day of a thousand years, on which the righteous are raised, is not the last day; for not until after its close do the great events occur of the loosing of satan, the deceiving of the nations, the gathering of armies and the war; and all these are prior to the judgment. Christ certainly did not hold that theory. Various questions relating to the resurrection arose among the first Christians, which are duly considered by the apostles. It therefore happens that much of what they say relates to the resurrection of the righteous, from which, however, no inference is to be drawn as respects the wicked. But the relative time of it appears in St. Paul's argument to the Corinthians, although it was not his main subject. "Every man," he says, "in his own order; Christ, the first fruits; afterward they that are Christ's at his coming. Then cometh the end." Not the "end" of the resurrection, for that is already ended; but that "end" which is connected with the surrender of Christ's mediatorial government, namely, the end of the world. It comes then immediately after the resurrection of the righteous dead.

As to the wicked, our Lord affirms their resurrection simultaneously with the saints. "The hour is coming, in the which all that are in their graves shall hear his voice, and shall come forth; they that have done good unto the resurrection of life, and they that have done evil unto the resurrection of damnation." This passage is unequivocal; it is plain prose, not poetic figure. An "hour" is not a thousand years. The resurrection is universal, and at a single call of his voice. Two classes are raised in that hour, the righteous and the wicked. Then will occur the general judgment, so vividly described by our Lord as taking place at his second coming, when "all nations" shall be gathered before him and receive every man his eternal reward of weal or woe.—Zion's Herald.

The Fate of the Worlds.

Estes & Laurial, of Boston, publish in their Half-Hour Recreations in Popular Science an ingenious and suggestive essay by Dr. Winchell on the Geology of the Stars. It considers the past, present and future condition of all the worlds of the universe. Dr. Winchell accepts the nebular theory of the origin and development of the worlds as essentially true. It follows from this theory that all the worlds, in the course of their history, must pass through a regular and well-defined series of conditions. The earth is in the condition in which we see it. Geology teaches that it has passed through many conditions, very different from the present one, and different from each other. It once had more water on its surface, more gases of certain kinds in its atmosphere. It was before that a mass of melted matter.

The moon has reached a more advanced stage than the earth. Life is extinct upon it. Its water and atmosphere have disappeared; yet there is evidence that they once existed on its surface. What has become of them? They have become absorbed in its solid substance. Once they were kept superficial by the repellant force of its interior or proper heat, as they now are on the earth. The moon having become thoroughly cooled, this force no longer exists. When the earth is thoroughly cooled, its water and air will likewise disappear. Mars is more advanced than the earth, less advanced than the moon.

Other planetary and stellar bodies are now in geological periods through which the earth has passed. The sun is still in a melted and partly gaseous state. Jupiter is girt with clouds and storm-beaten, and may be as the earth was in the carboniferous or some earlier period. Saturn is probably in a still more primitive state. Being, by the nebular hypothesis, older than the earth, these bodies ought, at first sight, to have reached a more advanced and cooler condition; but when we consider their vast size, and the immensely longer period it must take to go through changes by cooling, it becomes evident that it should not be so.

The fixed stars appear in various stages, earlier than that of the earth, which are in a certain way measured by the spectroscope. Some are more advanced than the sun; others approximate the condition of the nebulæ. The nebulæ appear likewise in various gradations of development. Dr. Winchell has classified all these stages under eighteen heads, representing as many periods in cosmical life. From the exposition of his theory he draws an interesting conclusion:

"Every phase of matter seen in the universe is a transient one. The various phases sustain demonstrably some sort of historical relation to each other. These states of matter are progressive; we trace them backward toward earlier conditions—toward an earliest condition, beyond which we know no possibility of material existence. From that condition to the present is but a finite career, however vast the interval appears, expressed in figures. The history began in time—it does not come down to us from eternity. The material organism is therefore originated in time. Now when we carry our thoughts back to that primal condition indicated, we must necessarily perceive that it existed absolutely unchanged and unprogressive from all eternity, or the matter itself which exemplifies it did not exist from eternity. But we have not the slightest scientific ground for assuming that matter existed in a certain condition from all eternity, and only began undergoing its changes a few millions or billions of years ago. For all that we know—and, indeed, as the conclusion from all that we know—primal matter began its progressive changes on the morning of its existence. As, therefore, the series of changes is demonstrably finite, the lifetime of matter itself is necessarily finite. And this conclusion from physical science is in harmony with the intuition of reason which declares that all which exists has been caused by a (necessarily) self-existent and intelligent First Cause, and which perpetually reiterates its judgment, proclaim as we will the 'unthinkableness' of self-existence, or of absolute creation from nothing.

"Finally, the future life of cosmical organization is as clearly set within limits as its past. There is an ultimate goal toward which all cosmical matter is tending. That goal is not the actual condition of our world, for we see here everything still in a state of change; and the moon exemplifies an ulterior state. It cannot be the inner stage, for even there solar light and heat, and terrestrial influences and universal gravitation and meteoric matter and a pervading ether are all conspiring to avert the condition of absolute repose. The finality lies in the impenetrable darkness of the distant future. What it may be we can only conjecture; but one impending stage of all cosmical matter is positively written upon the face of the moon. Not only must our own planet reach finally that refrigerated and inhospitable condition, but the sun itself must ultimately fade to a darkened planet, and become extinguished in the heavens."—Methodist.

The Holiness of Ministers.

Entire holiness in a minister is of the utmost importance with respect to his character. Much is said about the succession of ministers, and it must be acknowledged that there is a succession of vital importance. It is a moral, a spiritual succession. The apostles were model ministers, and all who have imitated them fully have had a large share of the success which so abundantly crowned their efforts.

While, then, we believe that the apostolical succession, boasted of by some, is a fable, let us examine ourselves closely, with the New Testament in our hands, that we may ascertain whether we are truly the ministers of Christ—taking his first ministers as our model, so far as they followed Christ, but Christ himself as our real model. We are pre-eminently called to be followers of him; and so fully to follow him that others may safely follow our example; "Be ye followers of me, even as I also am of Christ." Like the apostles, we are to "give ourselves continually to prayer and to the ministry of the word," so as to make it our one great business. Like them we are to be "full of faith and the Holy Ghost."

The constraining love of Christ must carry us away as with a mighty torrent to seek, that we may save the lost. "Publicly, and from house to house," we must "not cease to warn every one night and day with tears" and with many entreaties, "teaching every man in all wisdom, that we may present every man perfect in Christ Jesus." We must travail in birth for the souls of our hearers, until Christ be formed in them, and we must feel that we are called to exercise our ministry wherever God shall call us to go, for we are "debtors both to the Greeks and to the barbarians, both to the wise and to the unwise." A man would have some difficulty to prove that he was in the true line of apostolical succession if he was unwilling to be employed as a missionary in any part of the world. The apostles felt this their duty, and the commission of the apostles remains as the test of their successors: "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature." It is with those only who are willing to do this, when God calls, that Christ has promised his presence to the end of time. A perfect minister is an imitator of Christ and his apostles. He who imitates them in spirit, in word and in action has reason to conclude that he is a true minister of Jesus Christ.—Rev. John Hunt, Missionary to Fiji.

Spoiling our Fascinations.

Sir James Thornhill was the person who painted the inside of the cupola of St. Paul's, London. After having finished one of the compartments, he stepped back gradually to see how it would look at a distance. He receded so far (still keeping his eye intently fixed on the painting) that he was out almost to the very edge of the scaffolding without perceiving it. Had he continued to retreat, half a minute more would have completed his destruction, and he must have fallen to the pavement underneath. A person present, who saw the danger the great artist was in, had the happy presence of mind to suddenly snatch up one of the brushes and spoil the painting by rubbing it over. Sir James, transported with rage, sprang forward to save the remainder of the piece. But his rage was soon turned to thanks when the person told him: "Sir, by spoiling the painting I have saved the life of the painter. You were advanced to the extremity of the scaffold without knowing it. Had I called out to you to apprise you of your danger, you would naturally have turned to look behind you, and the surprise of finding yourself in such a dreadful situation would have made you fall indeed. I had, therefore, no other way of retrieving you but by acting as I did." Similar, if I may so speak, is the method of God's dealing with his people. We are all naturally fond of our own legal performances. We admire them to our ruin, unless the Holy Spirit retrieve us from our folly. This he does by marring our best works—that is, by showing us their insufficiency to justify us before God. When we are truly taught of him we thank him for his grace, instead of being angry at having our idols defaced. The only way by which we are saved from everlasting destruction is by being made to see that "by the deeds of the law no flesh living shall be justified."—Toplady.

Scientific.

DR. H. C. BOLTON suggests the use of the magnesium light for observing the true colors of precipitates by night.

UNDER the influence of light and air petroleum absorbs a certain proportion of oxygen, and gives the reactions of ozone. In this state it is yellow and burns poorly. The proper way to avoid the change is to preserve the oil in metallic vessels.

A TURIOT'S trade has sprung up in England on account of the demand for pollen to fructify certain plants. The palm tribe, the Cycadaceæ and other green-house trees will flourish without producing stamens, and, for want of pollen, will not fruit. Nothing is more common or simple than to advertise in the Gardeners' Chronicle for the pollen, for example, of the Caryota urens, and other tropical plants, and it is received through the post.

PROF. SCHONN proposes in Poggendorff's Annalen the employment of cylindrical lenses in spectroscopic observations. In these observations it is not necessary that all rays of light falling on the prisms should be parallel, but only that they be all in parallel planes. Cylindrical lenses, therefore, are better adapted for illuminating the slit than those of any other form. From a preliminary examination he has learned that well-defined spectra are thus obtained, in which the full extent of the prism is available. As lines which lie in a horizontal position are seen with greater precision, the spectrum may be so arranged as to secure a horizontal image of the slit.

SEASONING WOOD.—A writer in an English journal informs us that a small piece of non-resinous wood can be seasoned perfectly by boiling four or five hours, the process taking the sap out of the wood, which shrinks nearly one-tenth in the operation. The same writer states that trees felled in full length in June or July, and allowed to lie until every leaf has fallen, will then be nearly dry, as the leaves will not drop off themselves until they have drawn up and exhausted nearly all the sap of the tree. The time required is from a month to six weeks, according to the dryness or wetness of the weather. The floor of a mill laid with poplar so treated and cut up and put in place in less than a month after the leaves fell, has never shown the slightest shrinkage.

THE geological revelations made of late years by sounding and dredging at great depths in the ocean are among the most interesting disclosures of modern scientific research. The submarine data thus obtained, including the temperature of the sea at various depths, prove that currents of different temperatures—each containing a characteristic species of animal life—are running, as it were, alongside of each other, or in contiguity, beneath the surface of the sea. Many of the most eminent geologists of the present day are confident that proofs exist of an enormous succession of deposits, which have been accumulated under the seas of former periods, in each of which the physical geography of our planet, and with it the orders of animals and plants, were very dissimilar from each other, and so differ still more—on an examination backward to the earlier deposits—from those of the present time. The revelations of submarine phenomena yet to be made by fresh investigations are anticipated with great interest.

AN EXPERIMENT, lately made at the Pyrotechnic School of Paris, will comfort the heart of Mr. Trask, the anti-tobacco apostle. One of the professors inquired into the habits of the one hundred and sixty students there, and then made a comparison between their devotions to study and to smoke. He found that one hundred and two were smokers, and fifty-eight never used, or said they never used, the noxious weed. He then found that in each grade of the school the students who did not smoke outranked those who did smoke, and that the scholarship of the smokers steadily deteriorated as the smoking continued. On account of several trustworthy reports of such a nature, the minister of public instruction in France issued a circular to the directors of colleges and schools forbidding tobacco to students, as injurious to physical and intellectual development. The Catholic Guardian is authority for the statement that the youth of Catholic colleges are not allowed to use tobacco in any way, and to this fact is attributed much of their proficiency in mathematics and the other branches which wear more particularly on the intellects than some others.—Christian Union.

NOT A LOST ART.—Considerable exception has been taken by chemists to Wendell Phillips' assertion, in his lecture on "Lost Arts," that modern science cannot make colors of such vividness and durability as those used in the frescoes of Pompeii. The fact is undoubted that modern colors, though at first very vivid, fade into dullness in a comparatively short time. This, however, does not result from lack of knowledge how to make enduring tints, but from want of will. Our modern colors are made with water; the ancient were worked by fire-processes, which, though perfectly familiar to the chemist and the manufacturer, are undesirable, because costly. And, as there is no special desire in any quarter that the colors used in frescoing should be perpetual, the point of competition is cheapness of fabrication. From this cause one paint alone is manufactured by a fire-process—ultra-marine, which is notably the dearest color save carmine, that is made. The cost of the latter is great for two reasons—one that there is some secret about it, and another that it can only be made in a pure, pellucid atmosphere and on a bright, sunny day. With due deference to the great lecturer, the ability to make bright, permanent colors must be omitted from his catalogue of the "lost arts," for it is precisely one of the points in which modern superiority is incontestable.—Appleton's Journal.

Religious Intelligence.

SHANGHAI is the stronghold of Romanism in China. Their adherents in Shanghai are estimated at 8,000.

IT IS expected that the new Protestant Episcopal chapel in Rome will be completed for the opening service on Christmas day.

A NATIONAL COUNCIL, to consist of representatives of the clergy and laity, is proposed by the Episcopalians in England, to constitute a sort of court of final appeal.

THE Irish Presbyterian Assembly have resolved that, in order to preserve harmony in the church, the use of instrumental music in its worship should be refrained from.

THE Episcopal City Mission of New York has received during the last year the sum of $23,196.72 in gifts and collections, and has disbursed $26,069.29, leaving a deficit in the year's income of $2,902.50.

BY THE will of Anna S. Gerhard, of Philadelphia, lately deceased, the sum of $3,000 is bequeathed to the Board of Foreign Missions of the Presbyterian Church, and $2,000 to the Board of Home Missions.

THE British and Foreign Bible Society is now engaged in the translation of the Bible into the Japanese language, and the first installment, that of the Gospel of St. John, has been completed and transmitted to Japan.

THE recent Maine State Sunday School Convention decidedly disproved Sabbath evening exhibitions, with platform recitations, puerile and flashy music, and ornamentation of school-rooms with that which has no direct scriptural significance.

THERE is a powerful revival in Water street, New York, where John Allen kept a year or two since. In the chapel known as the "Helping Hand" there is preaching on the Sabbath, a daily prayer meeting at noon, and experience meetings every evening.

ON JUNE 20 the Roman Catholic priest of St. Albans called at the house of a former member of his church who had been converted to Protestantism. The gentleman being sick and unconscious, the priest tore his Bible in pieces and committed it to the flames.

JAPAN seems to be the missionary field of the future. The Propagation Society of England is about to send two clergymen there to open missions, and the United Presbyterians of Scotland are moving in the same direction, having already secured $45,000 as a fund.

THE Moravians of Bethlehem, Pennsylvania, celebrated the five hundredth anniversary of the birth of the founder of their religion, John Huss, July 6. They claim a lineal doctrinal descent from the Hussites of the fifteenth century, although their present church constitution dates back only to 1764.

THE Established Church of Scotland comprises 1,500,000 souls, the Free Kirk 750,000, and the United Presbyterian 470,000. The majority of the Free Kirk are in favor of a union, but fearless a minority of the old body should retain the church property, and they be regarded as secessionists. This settled the question.

SOME of Germany's expelled Jesuits are finding their way to the United States. About thirty or forty recently arrived in New York city, and more are reported as ready to follow from time to time. Few of the priests can speak the English language, but will soon learn it. Their ultimate destination is the far West, along the line of the Pacific railroads.

THE English Watchman and Wesleyan Advertiser foots up its returns of the membership of the English Wesleyan Church at a total of 318,571, or a net increase of 1,721 over the membership of the previous year. This increase, though small, is a decided improvement upon the preceding year, which showed a net decrease during the year of 256 members.

THE Annual Conference of the Waldensian Church was held at Florence, Italy, in April last. The assembly was a full one, and the discussions animated and hopeful. Church organization and missionary policy were the principal topics under consideration. A good account was given of churches organized and communicants received during the past year.

AT LENGTH from Brazil, which has not been noted for great progress, at least in religious matters, there comes the statement that the Emperor has commenced a struggle with Ultramontanism. The executive council of that country has ordered that papal bulls shall not be promulgated without the approval of the government, and that excommunications shall have no civil effect within the empire.

THE old library of Calvin, at Geneva, has come to a good use. The Old Catholics use it as a place of public worship. Here Hyacinthe preaches on the Lord's day. The room is plain as a pike-staff, and as uncomfortable as a barn. The old shelves, without books, yawn on the crowd. Here, from Sunday to Sunday, about 1,000 people gather, mostly of the poorer and uninfluential class. Hyacinthe is popular and impassioned as an orator. He is master of tender, persuasive talk, to a very high degree.

THE Pall Mall Gazette says the tendency of the Russian government to coerce the Lutherans in the provinces of Courland and Lithuania into adhesion to the Greek Church is gradually relaxing. The desire of the government to Russianize the working classes of the frontier provinces has superseded to some extent the wish to make the national religion uniform. In other words, the plan of extending the Greek Church is now laid aside in favor of that of extending the Russian people, and those formerly persecuted are reaping the full benefit of the change of policy.

REV. A. V. TIMPANY, of the American Baptist mission to the Telugus, residing at Ramapatam, in the Nellore district, has presented a petition to government, says the Friend of India, representing that certain Christians were summoned to the court of the District Moonsiff of Ongole, under their caste designation of "Madaga." On their refusing to take the summons unless the caste term were removed, or even to allow it to be affixed to the wall of the house, the case was tried ex parte and judgment given against them. All judicial officers throughout the presidency have been instructed by government to refrain from adding any caste designation to the names of Christian converts, unless such designation is absolutely necessary for the purpose of identification.

THROUGH the Missionary Herald the account reaches us of a persecution which has broken out against the Protestants of Merlehleri, a small village in the region of Eski Zagra, where the American missionaries of the European Turkey mission have gathered a company of converts. Their new chapel has been pulled down and the life of Trucho, the helper, has been threatened by the villagers. The case has been referred to the Turkish authorities, who have taken a stand on the side of religious liberty. "One of the villagers, in his testimony, happened to let slip the exclamation: 'We are not going to leave any Protestants there.' Whereupon the Turk who was conducting the examination was exceedingly provoked, and burst out into a vehement little speech in favor of toleration, saying the Sultan tolerated the Jew, the Orthodox Greek, the Mosslem and the Protestant, and who was he to say they would not have Protestants in their village?" The trial takes place at Chespahn, where it gives the "helper" an excellent opportunity to preach.

METHODISM IN FRANCE.—The Wesleyan Methodists have a Conference in France which meets once in two years, and is doing a great and good work in that land. Its numbers are yet small, consisting of only about 2,000 members and 25 preachers. They are poor, and but few of their circuits are self-supporting. It has received pecuniary aid in several instances from this country, and we hope, if necessary, it will again. It has a great work before it, and it is slowly but surely accomplishing it. Pastor Emile Cooke, the president of the Conference, has been appointed by the Paris committee as one of the representatives of the Evangelical Alliance to be held in New York in October next. It is expected that he will spend some time in this country. A French correspondent writes to the Christian Advocate, respecting the religious interest there, as follows: "About two months ago I met a local preacher from the village, and asked him how things were going on. 'O!' was the answer, 'I think we are about to have a revival, for the devil has just awoke, and is getting angry at us.' 'How so?' 'Why, last evening a woman was severely beaten by her husband for having come to our chapel; it is many years since we have had any wife-beating in our village, and, if opposition is astir again, I take it as a sure sign that the Spirit of God is at work.' The good man was not mistaken, for the next thing I heard, some three weeks after, was that a dozen young people had found peace, that the chapel was thronged every night, and that 20 persons had been received into the church on trial."—Zion's Herald.

REV. JAMES BARNET, writing from Rome to the Christian Instructor and Western United Presbyterian of the various Protestant missions in Italy, reports that of the Wesleyan Methodists of England as by far the strongest of all. "They have three divisions in Italy, called the northern, middle and southern divisions. As yet they have only two English agents, who have the superintendence of 23 stations or preaching-places, 15 Italian ministers (17 according to the society's last report,) 13 local preachers unpaid, 489 full members, 19 day school teachers, with 469 scholars, 22 Sabbath school teachers, with 249 scholars, and an audience of 1,182, including scholars of the schools. They have lately purchased a property for missionary premises in Rome, most admirably situated, for £10,000, all of which was paid by two of their wealthy members, and they are prepared to do a great work in Rome and in all Italy." The American Methodist Church supports one American Methodist minister at Bologna. The American Baptists are represented by two agents in Rome, and the American Board by the Rev. Mr. Alexander, who labors in conjunction with the Free Italian Church. In the absence of any definite statistics, Mr. Barnet gathers from various sources that this body, which has sprung into existence since 1848, numbers about 30 churches (28 were represented, we believe, at their fourth General Assembly, held last fall,) and supports as many ministers and evangelists, with day schools and Sabbath schools. Besides these, the ancient Vaudois Church, known also as the Waldenses, though having their main body in Piedmont, have agencies in most of the important cities of Italy and Sicily. Though much reduced in members, they still have 20 pastors, 12 evangelists, 25 schoolmasters and 31 schoolmistresses, with 1,368 week day scholars and 1,076 Sunday school scholars, 1,952 communicants, and 214 catechumens. This church, being Presbyterian in its form of government, has received much aid of late from Presbyterians in Scotland England and America. In addition to these churches, which are all engaged in active missionary operations among the Italians, the Episcopalian and Presbyterian churches are represented in almost all the important commercial cities where there are English residents, and in the watering-places and summer residences during the traveling season, by clergymen, who, though laboring directly for their own countrymen, act indirectly upon the natives. Sects that are divided at home are frequently united abroad; as, for example, the various Scotch Presbyterian churches have all combined in a joint mission, into which they wish to draw English and American Presbyterians also, sending a minister in turn, for a few weeks or months, during the season in which visitors remain at Rome.—Independent.

This winds up the story of many good meetings where the power of God has been present to heal. A number were left at the altar mourning over their sins and seeking for pardon when the services closed. What becomes of these penitents, and what do they do with themselves? Surely they do not all go back to their former ways, and lapse into the old state of indifference and sin! It would be most painful to suppose that they abandon the pursuit of salvation, and throw away all they may have gained by an open declaration of penitence and the desire to obtain eternal life. If they have failed of receiving comfort, the moral effects of the step taken should by no means be lost, and if they are truly awakened and penitent they will be likely to continue to press their suit at the throne of grace until the day-star arises in their hearts.

To those who have been thus left at the altar we would direct this word of advice. If you have sincerely started, have fully made up your minds to follow the Savior, and have gained your own consent without any reservation to be Christians, there is no reason why the blessing may not be found anywhere and at any time. Many begin their seeking at the altar, who perhaps would never have begun at any other place, but they have experienced conversion far from the spot where they first declared their purpose to be religious. There was a benefit in this peculiar method, although pardon and peace came some time after, and under circumstances widely differing from those under which they first knelt and asked for the prayers of the people of God. There should be no yielding to discouragement because your efforts seemed to have been baffled, and you have been compelled reluctantly and sorrowfully to retire without a sense of acceptance and reconciliation with your Maker. The Lord's hand is not shortened that he cannot save, neither is his ear heavy that he cannot hear. The hinderance is in yourselves, but by persevering prayer and a resolute purpose to do your duty the light will break upon your hearts, even powerfully, and it may be almost unexpectedly.

That act of committal and self-crucifixion in coming out from the world, although not immediately crowned with assurance, was in itself a most important step, and will, if followed up by humble and earnest endeavors, lead to a happy and useful religious life. God forbid that satan should turn your apparent failure to obtain salvation to his own account by insinuating that further effort would be useless! Some may say: "We have humbled ourselves as in the dust, we have availed ourselves of the prayers of the church and of those means which have been effectual to others, but our hearts have felt no change. Why should we longer look for that which is so strangely and mysteriously withheld?" The devil would be glad to confirm the doubt, and to dismiss the seeker from the place of prayer with the conviction that it is useless to struggle or labor further. This is the crisis in the history of thousands, and if met with firmness and with a continued agonizing to enter into life, it will be safely passed, and the enemy will be confounded and put to shame. It is of the last importance that all the instruction, all the convictions, all the resolves, all the vows and all the gracious influences of a revival season should be retained and carried out in practice at once. If they have not already issued in the conversion of the soul they will soon ripen into this glorious result if cherished and prayerfully followed.

Coming to the altar is in the direction of confessing Christ and of taking the vows of Christian discipleship. Let this go still further, come boldly and finally out on the Lord's side, and be at once known as a member of the church. Break at once with your sins and the world, take up the cross as it meets you, and follow Jesus. "Then shall we know if we follow on to know the Lord; his going forth is prepared as the morning; and he shall come unto us as the rain, as the latter and former rain unto the earth." Precisely what all seekers need we cannot tell, as their difficulties are not always the same. One may stick at this point and one at another, but safely may we assume that Christ is the great want, and faith in him is the condition, and the light of the Holy Spirit is absolutely essential to all who would fly to the sinner's refuge. If a man is enough awakened and enough penitent to pray, and to feel that he wants God and mercy and comfort, all the rest should be comparatively easy. The blind will soon see if they know that they are blind, and the lepers are near to healing when they feel that a fatal and loathsome disease cleaves to them. The hymn of invitation is profoundly true where it says:

> All the fitness he requireth
> Is to feel your need of him.

In many instances we know that seekers left at the altar go forth to find, to rejoice and to be useful and holy. But it is not always so. Some go away to mingle again in the world, and to lose the impressions and to forget the solemn vows. The awakened conscience does not retain its tenderness, the penitent heart grows hard and careless again, and the soul almost won to God drifts away from him, and perhaps forever.

Seashore Camp Meeting.

As our readers are aware, this beautiful ground is located on the Mississippi Sound, opposite Ship Island, and two miles west of Biloxi. The preaching-place is an open shed, framed of strong timbers, covered with good cypress shingles, with seats as comfortable as church-pews, and with sittings for from one thousand to twelve hundred people. On three sides of the shed, or tabernacle, as we should choose to call it, the tents or cottages are built, the first row at a distance of one hundred feet from the shed. There were thirty-eight tents this year, and we should not be surprised if there were one hundred next year. The preaching-stand is in the end of the shed nearest the water; and but a few yards from it, the water side of the encampment being left open, so that the view and the breeze are unobstructed. The people while worshiping can look out on the sea, and note the sails that appear and vanish, while the voice of the ocean mingles with that of the preacher, and with the songs of the congregation. Thus near to the sounding shore there are trees and shade in abundance, and springs inexhaustible of good and healthful water. It is an easy walk, even for an invalid, from the railroad station to the tents, making the location everything that can be desired for convenience and accessibility.

This year, as last, preparations were somewhat backward, and there was some interruption and delay to the religious services on that account. The trustees, and Mr. John H. Keller especially, are entitled to much credit for the manner in which they have performed their laborious duties. A great deal of work has been done, and the failure to have everything ready at the appointed day was no fault of theirs. Messrs. Keller, Dunnica, Hallinan, Bayne, Foster and Stuart were on the ground early, and were most attentive and efficient in attending to the police and business affairs which claimed their attention.

The first sermon was preached on Friday night, August 1, and thereafter there were four sermons a day, experience meetings usually following the sermon at half-past eight o'clock A. M., and altar exercises after the evening and night sermons. Family prayers were held at the stand at half-past six in the morning, and were well-attended and most profitable seasons. We estimate that fifty persons were converted, a considerable number were formally received into the church, and the names of a good many were taken as applicants for membership. At the close of the last sermon of the meeting, Thursday night, there were many at the altar, and there was besides a large number in the congregation under conviction and seeking for mercy. The experience meetings were especially interesting and edifying, most precious to God's children, and attended by such melting and refreshing power as we have seldom seen. So great was the interest, and so many were those who wished to speak, that it was difficult to separate, even for a brief recess, before the eleven o'clock sermon.

The number of conversions was gratifying, but the baptism which fell upon believers was the greater result. It was for richness and depth pentecostal, and nearly universal, being felt in a marked and wonderful degree by almost every converted person. We noted instances, not a few, in which people were powerfully blessed almost as soon as they reached the meeting, and others, who could tarry but for a few hours, testified that they had felt the presence and power of God. In the preaching and in the experiences the doctrine of perfect love was prominent, and there seemed to be a reaching out after the higher Christian life, and a continual wrestling with God for a deeper work of grace. One of the happiest features of the occasion was the union of our people, and the fellowship of those who came from widely separated localities. The churches of Mobile, New Orleans, Moss Point, and many other places along the coast and throughout Alabama, Mississippi and Louisiana were represented by ministers and people, and all hearts flowed together in love. It was the communion of saints realized.

The ordinance of baptism and the sacrament of the Lord's Supper were administered at the eleven o'clock service on Tuesday morning. The number of communicants was large, and the presence of the Master was felt to be peculiarly near and comforting. There were about forty preachers in attendance, and all of them seemed to be anointed with fresh oil. They evidently enjoyed religion, and preached it with unction and power. The episcopacy was well represented, as were also the pulpits of the Alabama, Mississippi and Louisiana Conferences. In behalf of the trustees and of the congregation we thank these brethren for their presence and labors. The preaching was a feast of fat things, the very highest order of gospel preaching, and attended by the demonstration of the Spirit. The occasion has given us a higher estimate and appreciation of the Methodist ministry than ever. We do not glory in men, but we would fain glorify God in them.

The largest attendance of people was of course on Sunday, when there were probably about one thousand persons seated and listening to the sermons, and as many as twelve or fifteen hundred on the ground during the day. The average attendance on other days was, we should judge, from five to six hundred. The order and behavior of the people were unexceptionable. We saw no attempts to create trouble, and no disposition to violate the rules, while the general conduct of all was serious and respectful. The services closed on Friday morning with an experience meeting, which was characterized by the same interest and liveliness that had attended these exercises from the beginning. The congregation stood and sang the hymn:

> Blessed be the dear uniting love
> That will not let us part;

the final prayer was offered, the apostolic benediction was pronounced, and the second meeting on the Seashore camp ground was at an end.

An Increase of Troublers.

In a former article we alluded to only one point in this particular phase of David's experience—that is, an increase of troublers, a multiplication of opponents, and that in seeming ratio with the approach of deliverance. Taking it for granted that the illustrations were read and remembered, we need not refer to them here.

This history of David's, we repeat, is but an expression of his experience—an experience common to all spiritual Christians. His pilgrimage to this stage in his religious life is but the pilgrimage of all God's children. It is the route leading to the crucifixion. Though it is the pained, agonized cry of a heart sensitive to the approach and touch of sin, it does not necessarily imply incumbie distress. It is in one sense the harbinger of victory—it is the approach, the beginning of triumph. The word of God teaches us, and all Christian experience harmonizes with it, that the man who endures temptation, trial, is the blessed and happy man. "For when he is tried he shall receive the crown of life." The crown of thorns precedes the crown of life. The trial goes before success. The fight is antecedent to the victory. Development follows exercise. The man, "persecuted for righteousness' sake, is to rejoice and be exceeding glad, for great is his reward in heaven." The fires of affliction and hosts of armed troublers are but purifiers of spiritual affections, the schoolmasters of faith and developers of gracious resources. Hence we hear this man, following close upon his recognition of an increase of troublers, exclaiming: "I cried unto the Lord with my voice, and he heard me out of his holy hill. But thou, O Lord, art a shield for me, my glory and the lifter up of my head." The cause of this prayer, and conscious dependence, was the presence of enemies—an increase of troublers. "These light afflictions work for us." As our servants—earnest, faithful laborers—they work for us an increase of reward.

But now, to look a little more particularly into this lesson, we find it to be a devout, trusting prayer for help. "Lord, how are they increased that trouble me. Many there be that rise up against me." It has for its basis a recognition of impending danger, of an increase of evil, a gathering together of forces seeking to separate between him and his God. Independent of its literal import, it is the appealing cry of a heart disturbed by a sense of sin—by a sense of its own inherent uncleanness in God's sight. And, as we have already intimated, the economy of grace is such that an overwhelming sense of personal unholiness may and does coexist with conscious rectitude and knowledge of God's peace. The fullness of humility comes with a fullness of the knowledge of God. Prayer for deliverance from sin, from an increase of heart-troublers, must involve the idea of reformation. A begun, progressive, or, in one sense, completed reformation is the foundation of all true prayer. Prayer, in no true meaning of the act, can be offered upon any other terms. This reformation implies the work of penitence—sorrow for sin, contrition of heart. "If I regard iniquity in my heart the Lord will not hear me." In the very nature of things it may be added: "Cannot hear me." The cry of an impenitent soul is in the highest degree presumption. The harbinger of Jesus was a preacher of repentance. The only forerunner of approach to God is repentance still. Faith cannot live in a hard, unbroken soil. Saving faith will never begin to live in such a heart. He that cometh to God must believe that he is, and that he is a rewarder of those who seek him. The cry of a contrite, believing soul only "entereth into the ears of the Lord of Sabaoth."

In this experience of David's we have encouragement to draw nigh unto God. There is a lively recognition of the only source of help. There is an intelligent spiritual discernment of the need of help. There is a consciousness of troublers within and troublers without. There is manifest a candid and honest self-examination. There is a penitent, softened heart. There is a child-like, trusting confidence in the uplifted soul. "I cried unto the Lord with my voice, and he heard me out of his holy hill. I laid me down and slept; I awaked; for the Lord sustained me." There is a freshness and beauty in his faith, a oneness and wholeness in his trust, and fullness and graciousness of results that should be to us ever a living inspiration to effort in the service of our God.

Rev. George R. Talley.

MR. EDITOR: I learn that Rev. George R. Talley, of the Alabama Conference, died, at his residence near Plantersville, last night. At our last Conference, on account of failing health, he was granted a superannuated relation. His debility gradually increased, until some weeks ago he was confined to his bed. At my last interview with him he spoke of his eyesight failing, which, I suppose, was owing to bodily weakness.

I have no particulars of his death, but doubt not his end was peace. He spent several nights with me during the year, and I was impressed with the simplicity and earnestness of his piety and with his unfaltering trust in Jesus. He was one of our old men, and for thirty-six years has held up the banner of the cross to thousands for whom Christ died.

He was born in Tennessee, March 12, 1815; converted in Lexington, North Carolina, October, 1832; licensed to preach and admitted into the South Carolina Conference in the fall of 1836; removed to Alabama and joined the Alabama Conference in December, 1853. This is a brief outline of his life; but what pen can write the particulars of his long and arduous ministry? The heartaches, the seasons of gloom, and the days of sunshine and hours of triumph were discerned only by the Eye that sleepeth not.

Bro. Talley's religion was of the cheerful, hopeful kind. He always maintained that it was his right to shout at any time and in any place when he felt like it. He thought praise was comely for the upright. He had the confidence of his brethren, and, as far as I know, there never has been the slightest complaint against his moral and official character. What a boon to be coveted by all his brethren of the ministry!

He was married three times. His last wife, with five or six small children, survives him. A married daughter—the issue of the first marriage—is also living, near his late residence. The demands of his growing and dependent family caused him to purchase and fit up a home for them some twenty miles from this city, where he has resided for several years, serving works within convenient distance. In this he acted wisely.

He was a useful preacher, and much shall we miss at our annual reunions his genial, open face, and clear, ringing voice, singing:

> Happy day, happy day,
> When Jesus washed my sins away.

Help, Lord, for the godly man ceaseth. Indeed we of the Alabama Conference are passing through deep waters this year. Already three of our number—all long-known among us and much loved—are gone. But it will be a happy day, yea, indescribably happy, when we all meet to part no more.

M. S. ANDREWS.

SELMA, ALA., August 1, 1873.

Evangelization in Mexico.

Dr. Butler gives the following account of the operations of the Methodist Church in Mexico:

"We have three small congregations in the City of Mexico, two Spanish and one English. The Spanish are under the care of Dr. Ramirez and Bro. Carter; average attendance, forty-five and thirty respectively. The English congregation is under my own charge. Rev. Dr. Cooper, formerly of Chicago, having united with our mission, his English congregation added to our own has raised the attendance to sixty. Being a good Spanish scholar, the doctor is henceforth to devote himself more particularly to work in that language. We have secured the circus property, * * * but must wait several months for its occupancy.

"Our missionary staff consists of five ordained ministers, two of whom are Mexicans, with two local preachers who labor gratuitously.

"Our centers are the cities of Mexico, Puebla and Pachuca, with Real del Monte and some points occasionally visited near this city.

"The statistics of our work at the close of its first quarter, giving average attendance on public worship, are as follows:

"Four Mexican congregations: two in the City of Mexico, seventy-five persons; one in Pachuca, forty-five persons; one in Rio del Monte, ten persons; total, one hundred and thirty souls.

"Two English congregations: City of Mexico, regular attendants, sixty; Pachuca forty-five; total, one hundred and five.

"Being an aggregate of regular attendants on worship of two hundred and thirty-five persons in six congregations, twelve schools in day schools, and forty-two, with nine teachers and officers, in two Sunday schools. We have two class meetings, about fourteen Mexicans and sixteen English and Americans attending.

"Our work is prosecuted in a land that for fifty years past has been the most unsettled in Christendom, where Romanism has done its worst to debase a race of men over which she has held unlimited sway for three and a half centuries; and although the country is settling down to peace and order, under its excellent constitution, purchased by the blood and treasure of its sons, yet the clergy and fanatics of Rome regard our presence here with malignity so intense and cruel that were it understood at home it might well induce our friends to commend us to the care and protection of him who alone can preserve us to accomplish the work we are sent to do."

He gives specifications of this intense opposition, taking the shape of deadly assault, and says:

"We appeal, not without redress, to the law to vindicate and sustain religious liberty."—Christian Intelligencer.

BISHOP MARVIN IN BALTIMORE. Dedication of Emanuel Church.—We are pleased, says the Baltimore Episcopal Methodist of August 9, to record once more the presence and ministerial services of one of our Bishops in Baltimore.

Bishop Marvin preached last Sabbath morning at Trinity Methodist Episcopal Church South, from the parable of the unjust steward, Luke xvi, 1-14. The sermon was well adapted to the occasion, which was to clear Emanuel chapel of a debt of $3,000, preparatory to its dedication. The Bishop gave a very clear exposition of the parable and was forcible in his application of it. After the sermon an appeal was made for contributions, which resulted in a collection of $2,900.

At night the Bishop preached at Emanuel chapel from Mark xvi, 15, 16, after which the full amount of indebtedness was raised, and the chapel was dedicated to the service of almighty God, to the great joy of the pastor, Rev. J. L. Shipley, and the friends of Southern Methodism.

WE FORGOT TO MENTION in our account of the late commencement of Centenary College that the honorary degree of master of Arts was conferred on Mr. R. S. Ricketts, of Port Gibson, Mississippi, and that Rev. W. H. Watkins was authorized to represent the college at the Little Rock and Texas Conferences.

IT GIVES US GREAT PAIN to hear of the death of little Maggie, daughter of Rev. L. Patterson, of Forkland circuit, Alabama Conference. She was a sweet child of five years—a bud, fresh and beautiful, which God has plucked and taken to himself. Maggie died at Forkland, July 18. May God sustain the bereaved parents.

DEATH OF AN OLD CITIZEN.—We have to record the death of S. G. Shropshire, for more than twenty years a citizen of New Orleans, and a most estimable and devoted member of our church. Bro. Shropshire was taken ill at the camp ground on Tuesday, and died, after reaching home, on Wednesday evening, the sixth instant. Up to the hour of his attack he was enjoying the camp meeting, and related his experience at the morning services of Monday. We learn that his last hours were peaceful and assured. Bro. Shropshire was a native of Kentucky, and had nearly reached the age of three score and ten. An obituary will be published hereafter.

MINISTERS PRESENT.—The following ministers of our church were in attendance at the Seashore camp meeting this year: Bishop J. Keener. From Alabama—E. Wadsworth, D. D., Henry Urquhart, H. D. Moore, J. W. Rush, J. E. Fous, A. J. Coleman, Preston Nash. From Mississippi—W. H. Watkins, P. H. C. G. Andrews, P. H. Napier, C. Gillespie, W. H. Leith, W. G. Evans, Alexander Scarbrough, Henry Bowen, George W. Vickers, Joseph Nicholson, D. M. Dunlap, George W. Vickers, John B. Higginbotham. From Louisiana—W. H. West. From Louisiana A. E. Goodwyn, C. F. Evans, P. Goodwyn, Christian Keener, W. Taylor, T. B. White, J. T. Sawyer, John Mathews, W. V. Tudor, Julius Ivy, J. S. White, J. B. A. Arrens, J. G. Krauter, L. Parker.

Rev. Dr. Daley, and Messrs. Bartand Morrow, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, were also present during the most of the meeting.

BATON ROUGE COLLEGIATE INSTITUTE.—This is the very best high school for boys that we know of, and one of the very few places where we should be willing to send a boy of tender years. Parents may be sure that their sons will have the care, nurture and discipline of a refined Christian home while with Prof. Magruder, and that their education will be wisely and thoroughly conducted. Young men at the Baton Rouge Collegiate Institute can be well educated, and prepared for business life or for admission into any of the colleges or universities of the country. From our personal knowledge of the school and its location we can most heartily commend it to the attention of all who are seeking a school of high merit, and who wish their sons to be in the best of hands. Read the advertisement and send for circulars.

THE following institutions, not heretofore noticed, are advertised in the present issue:

The Southern Female College, Petersburg, Virginia, is indorsed and recommended by the first men in Virginia, and we have every assurance that President Davis is altogether competent for his responsible trust.

Centenary Female College, Summerfield, Alabama, is located in one of the best communities in Alabama, is an old and well-established Conference school, and is under the control of Rev. A. D. McVoy, an able and preceptor of high repute.

Virginia Female Institute is located at Staunton, Virginia, a place noted for its salubrity, in the heart of the Virginia mountains, and perfectly accessible by rail from everywhere. The school is widely and most favorably known.

We have recently noticed the Female College. We direct attention to the advertisement. This is a growing institution, and an enterprising and healthy region of east Mississippi.

REV. DR. J. B. WALKER, accompanied by his wife and daughter, passed through the city last week on their way to the mountains of Virginia. The doctor spent a few hours on the Seashore camp ground, and of course, preached. He is looking somewhat toil-worn, and evidently needs the six weeks' vacation which his people of St. John's church, Galveston, have accorded him.

SHAPARD HALL FEMALE SEMINARY, located at Lafayette, Chambers county, Alabama, is under the control and management of Rev. P. Henderson and his accomplished wife. Mrs. Henderson is assisted by a competent corps of teachers, and is well qualified for the position which she occupies. See advertisement in this issue.

DO THOU take care only of thy duty, of the means and proper instruments of thy purpose, and leave the end to God; lay that up with him, and he will take care of all that is intrusted to him; and this, being an act of confidence in God, is also a means of security to thee.—Jeremy Taylor.

CHARLESTON, SOUTH CAROLINA, claims to be the largest market for fertilizers in the South. It has factories, and manufactured over thirty thousand tons last season.

WE HAVE RECEIVED the first number of the Christian Age, a new monthly journal published in New York, and conducted by Rev. Charles F. Deems, D. D. Price, $1 per annum. It is an eight-page paper, about the size of the Christian Weekly, and in material and typography most excellent and beautiful. Rev. Dr. Deems' son, F. M. Deems, is managing editor, and John F. Hurst, D. D., Tayler Lewis, LL. D., R. S. Moran, D. D., F. W. Upham, LL. D., are announced as contributing editors. May the Christian Age live long and prosper. We quote a paragraph or two from the announcement, as follows:

The Christian Age is to be a monthly periodical, giving such a presentation of Christian thought and culture and effort and progress as shall make it desirable for all who wish to be well informed on those subjects. It is intended to meet the wants of those who have not the time to read many periodicals. We trust we shall be able to give our readers the cream of them all. We shall not interfere with denominational journals. For local denominational news the members of the several churches must look to their church papers, but for what concerns the whole body of Christians we wish to make our journal a desideratum for every intelligent Christian family.

We have no hobby; we are the organ of no party. We simply take the field with other journals, to do what good we can for the truth as it is in Jesus. If we make a periodical worth having it will be patronized. We shall pay for what we get, and shall try to have the best writing that money can procure. We shall desire pay for what we give. The Christian Age starts and can live a year without a solitary subscriber; but before the close of the year we hope to have thousands of subscribers and tens of thousands of readers.

A BROTHER writes as follows:

By the way, I like your suggestions on camp meetings, and second your motion to leave "fine sermons at home." With your permission I would add the following: "Also long-range pieces." This should be no place for cannonading. I would further suggest in these moral conflicts the orders of our officers in the late war: "Shoot low. Aim at the feet if you wish to hit the head." Would it not do well to aim a little lower to hit the heart. Paul says: "My preaching was not with enticing words of man's wisdom, but in demonstration of the Spirit and of power." His reason: "That your faith should not stand in the wisdom of men, but in the power of God."

REV. WILLIAM M. KENNEDY, of the South Georgia Conference, died on Sunday, July 27.

JUST AS IT SHOULD BE.—Many of our correspondents are kind enough to keep their book and ADVOCATE business separate. They never write about the business of the two on the same sheet. Although they may inclose the two letters in the same envelop, they are dated, signed and addressed separately, and distinct from each other. This enables us to attend more promptly to each. When the business is mixed the book-keeper of one department must content himself to wait till it has passed through the other department—order filled, goods shipped and letter answered—before the business of his department can be attended to; and as the book-keepers and clerks of the two branches of business are separate, and the their letters separately, it must be apparent to every man of reflection that much perplexity results from writing about the business of both on the same page. When money is remitted it should be distinctly stated what for; and if for two or more purposes, how much for each. Write nothing in business letters except that which has reference to business.

A NEW REMEDY.—Among the many curious indorsements of the Danbury News man's book, received by Mr. Bailey and his publishers, Shepard & Gill, is the following from a Boston physician:

"BOSTON, June 23, 1873.

"MY DEAR BAILEY: I've got it! I procured it on Saturday evening, it being the first and only copy the man had in his store. Did what? Why that book written by a pair of shears, with "the Danbury News man" attached to one end of him. It is the most profitable investment I ever made, and I am satisfied that I put the money ($1.50 where it would do the most good. My dear Bailey, I am a doctor, and bought that book as a sanitary agent, and it works like a charm. A patient called for advice yesterday; said he felt very miserable, sad and wretched. I gave him the following prescription:

"R.—Life in Danbury. x pages.

"The took it; it worked like a charm. When my patients are on the road to recovery I leave particular directions as to their nourishment. I say, take it in proper quantities and at stated intervals, as, for example: nine o'clock, grued; eleven o'clock, beef tea; in one hour and a half, Life in Danbury, as much as can be borne. I find they can stand a good deal of it. It is a great institution. Bailey, go on and prosper, and as soon as convenient give us a second concentrated medical remedy equal to the first, and the blessings of the convalescent shall be upon you. Yours truly, M.D."

Life in Danbury is published in a handsome volume of three hundred pages, with seven illustrations by H. L. Stephens, which Shepard & Gill will send by mail to any address, post-paid, on receipt of price. As an evidence of its popularity it may be mentioned that Lee & Shepard, who have ordered three thousand five hundred copies, pronounce it the best-selling book since Little Women. *Oklahoma (Ind.) EAST MISSISSIPPI FEMALE COLLEGE.

A Chartered Literary Institution under the Auspices of the M. E. Church South,

Located at Meridian, Mississippi.

ANNOUNCEMENT.

The annual term of 1873-4 will open on TUESDAY, September 2, 1873. It will be divided into two sessions of twenty weeks each. Comfortable convenience for boarding in the college building will be furnished and supervised by the president. The Board of Trustees claim to have made ample arrangements for the Literary, Scientific, Ornamental and Musical departments of the College, by the election of competent and experienced teachers for the various departments, and that facilities for thorough and liberal education in the East Mississippi Female College may no more than be equaled by the best of other similar institutions. Our college is recommended to public consideration with candor and with confidence of a successful career. We hope to see its interests and influence widen and deepen, under continued and steady prosperity, and it is apprehended that young ladies who now place their names upon the roll of this institution will be pleased in counting years by recognizing in their Alma Mater a living and honored success of educational enterprise.

BOARDING.

Boarders engaged for the whole term will be charged $160, one-half which must be paid at the opening of each session.

Those engaged for one session will be charged $90, $50 of which must be paid at the beginning of the session. Those engaged for a shorter or an indefinite time will be charged $9 per month, to be paid quarterly in advance.

Extra charges will be made for washing and lights. Each boarder must furnish two sheets, one blanket and two towels. Especial printed regulations will be given each boarder, giving her directions and restrictions respecting their family and social relations while at the College.

In all cases of sickness, resulting in the removal of boarders from the college, advance payments will be promptly refunded. No pains will be spared to render every student comfortable and happy. Parents and guardians are particularly solicited to visit the College frequently, and the influences of strict propriety and refinement will be continually thrown around the pupils.

Our college is in its infancy. The enterprise has been undertaken by the Mississippi Conference as meeting a pressing educational want in this section of Mississippi. In the judgment of the Board of Trustees, Meridian is the proper place for such an institution. The location is healthy, the surrounding country is rich and populous, and the moral influences are unexceptionable.

The Child's Corner.

THE TWO GIRLS.

BY JANE TAYLOR.

JANE AND ELIZA.

There were two little girls, neither handsome nor plain:
One's name was Eliza, the other was Jane;
They were both of one height, as I have heard people say,
And both of one age, I believe, to a day.

'Twas thought by most people, who slightly had seen them,
There was not a pin to be chosen between them;
But no one for long to this notion persisted,
So great a distinction there really existed.

Eliza knew well that she could not be pleasing
While fretting and fuming, while sulky or teasing;
And therefore to company artfully tried
Not to break her bad habits, but only to hide.

So when she went out, with much labor and pain,
She contrived to look almost as pleasing as Jane;
But I'm sure you'd have laughed to have known,
all the while,
How her mouth would oft ache while she forced it to smile.

But in spite of her care it would sometimes befall
That some cross event happened to ruin it all;
And because it might chance that her share was the worst;
Her temper broke loose, and her dimples dispersed.

But Jane, who had nothing she wanted to hide,
And therefore these troublesome arts never tried,
Had none of the care and fatigue of concealing,
But her face always showed what her bosom was feeling.

The smiles that upon her sweet countenance were,
At home or abroad, they were constantly there;
And Eliza worked hard, but could never obtain
The affection that freely was given to Jane.

ELIZA AND JANE.

Cheer up, my young friends, I have better news now;
Eliza has driven the scowl from her brow;
And finding she paid so get nothing so dearly,
Determined, at last, to be good-natured really.

'Twas a great deal of trouble at first, I confess;
Her temper would rise, and 'twas hard to repress:
But, being a girl of some sense and discerning,
She would not be stopped by the trouble of turning.

Ten times in a day she'd her work to begin,
When the passion or fretfulness begged to come in;
But, determined to see their vile faces no more,
She sent them off packing, and locked the door.

Sometimes she would kneel in her chamber, and pray
That God in his mercy would take them away;
And God, who is pleased with a penitent's cry,
Bowed down in compassion and helped her to try.

The smiles that beam on her countenance fair,
At home or abroad, they are constantly there;
And Eliza no longer is forced to complain
That she is not beloved like her play-fellow Jane.

Story of a Clover-Blossom.

A bunch of pink clover opened her eyes one morning at sunrise, and looked about her. She grew near the gate of a little garden in the country, and was one of a large number of pink clovers.

On each side of the pathway, leading from the gate, were little flower-beds, bordered with white shells, and filled with gayly-tinted flowers. There were pansies with their purple vests, roses with pink blushing petals, fragrant white lilies, and many other flowers. They nodded to each other in the morning air and seemed very happy. Pink Clover thought they were beautiful, and looked at her own dress as well as she could.

"Am I like you?" she said to a large clover that grew near her.

This clover had been in existence three days, and her blossoms were beginning to turn brown on top, but she did not know it. She nodded her head to the young clover and said: "Just like me, only, as you have not lived as long as I have, you cannot have so much sense."

"Is my head turning brown?" said Pink Clover.

"No," answered the other, "you are quite pink and fresh. We clovers preserve our beauty a long time." And she straightened herself, and shook a drop of dew off one of her leaves.

Pink Clover thought it very strange that the other did not know she was fading; but she said nothing, for fear of giving offense.

The door of the cottage was opened, and a little girl came out and ran down the walk. Her eyes were as blue as violets, her hair shone like corn-silk, and her cheeks were as pink as the roses. She wore a white frock and a long blue sash. She ran to the flower-beds and began to pick the flowers. Her mother came and stood in the doorway. "Gather the most beautiful," she said.

Pink Clover watched the child as she went from flower to flower. She thought she would not like to be plucked from her stem, and wither away. She leaned forward and whispered to the rose that grew near her: "Why do you not resist? Your thorns are long and sharp."

"We do not bloom for ourselves," answered the rose; "we are made to give pleasure to man, and when we are gathered, though we droop and die, our mission is fulfilled. I heard the mother and child talking about us last night. We are to be taken to the great city, where people have no flowers, and are to be given to a sick servant of God. When he sees us his heart will swell with thankfulness, and we shall be the cause of a loving prayer. Thus shall even the flowers glorify their Maker."

Pink Clover was silent. She wished the little girl would pluck her also, that she might gladden a human heart; but the child passed her by and took the beautiful rose.

"No one thinks much of clover-blossoms," said a tuft of grass, "or of the grasses, but the same hand made us all."

"We too have our work," said the old clover who had spoken before; "whole countries would be desolate without us. We make glad the waste places."

The little girl had gone into the house, but she soon came out again, bearing her flowers. Her mother came with her. They got into a little wagon that rattled up to the gate. The child's father stood by the wagon.

"We had better take some grass with us for the horse to eat," said the mother; "cut that close to the gate."

The man brought a scythe and did as she told him. He cut down Pink Clover too. The back of the wagon was filled with grass; the father took his seat, and Pink Clover found herself going to the great city.

"But only for a horse to eat," she said to herself.

The wagon rolled on and reached the city. It jolted over the stones of the streets, and tossed Pink Clover quite high in the air sometimes. Everything around looked so dirty that she wondered how any one could want to live there. The little girl wondered too, but her father told her they would soon come to pleasanter streets, and would see many beautiful houses.

At length, in turning a corner, the wagon jolted so hard that Pink Clover, when she was tossed up, did not come down on the grass again, but right in the dirty street. No one saw her fall. She lay there and the wagon passed out of sight. "Not even to be eaten by a horse," she sighed. "I must wither and be trampled on by careless feet."

Several hours passed, and the little bunch of clover lay fading in the street. The hot sun beat down upon her; but she had not been stepped on.

A boy passed along the street. His clothes were clean, though patched and old. He looked sadly down as he walked. When he reached the corner where Pink Clover lay he saw her. His face brightened; he stooped and picked her up. "Poor little blossom," he said, and walked on, holding her tightly in his hand.

He turned out of that street into one still narrower and dirtier. He entered a wretched house, passed up the stairs, and went into a small room. It was clean, but very scantily furnished. A sick girl was lying in the bed asleep. Her hands were so thin that every blue vein in them was visible. Her mother was bending over her. When the boy entered she raised her head.

"How is sister?" he asked.

"She is easier now," answered the mother, "but she has been suffering very much. She longs for pure air. If she could have that she would live."

The boy held up the bunch of clover-blossoms. "I found it in the street," he said; "it seems like my poor sister fading away in the close city. I will revive it if I can."

He placed Pink Clover in a glass of cool water, and set the glass on the table. He sprinkled some drops of water over her, and she felt herself beginning to revive. She held up her head, and her fragrant breath stole into the room.

Soon the sick girl opened her eyes and saw the little blossoms. She held out her hands toward them, and her mother gave them to her. She inhaled their perfume and a glad light came into her eyes.

"Oh! dear mother," she cried, "I said that if I could only have a breath from the country I would get well, and God has sent it to me in these little flowers."

Then the little clover knew that, through unthought-of ways, she had been brought to fulfill her mission; that when she lay unheeded in the dust she had been coming nearer and nearer to the work of cheering a human heart.—What Next.

Love Wins Love.

"Mother, the birdies all love father," said a little boy of five years, as he stood with his mother watching the robins enjoying their morning meal of cherries from the old tree that overhung the house.

"Does anybody else love father, Charlie?"

"O, yes! I love him and you love him; but we know more than the birds."

"What do you think is the reason the birdies love your father?"

Charlie did not seem to hear this question. He was absorbed in deep thought.

"Mother," at last he said, "all the creatures love father. My dog is almost as glad to see him as he is me. Pussy, you know, always comes to him, and seems to know exactly what he is saying. Even the old cow follows him all round the meadow, and the other day I saw her licking his hand just as a dog would. I think it is because father loves them, mother. You know he will often get up to give pussy something to eat; and he pulls carrots for the cow and pats her and talks to her; and somehow I think his voice never sounds so pleasant as when he talks to the creatures."

"I think his voice sounds pleasant when he is talking to his little boy."

Charlie smiled.

"Father loves me," he said, "and I love him dearly. He loves the birds too, I am sure. He whistles to them every morning when they are eating cherries, and they are not a bit afraid of him, though he is almost near enough to catch them. Mother, I wish everything loved me as well as they do father."

"Do as father does, Charlie, and they will. Love all living things, and be kind to them. Do not speak roughly to the dog. Don't pull pussy's tail, nor chase the hens, nor try to frighten the cow. Never hurt or tease anything. Speak gently and lovingly to them. Feed them and seek their comfort, and they will love you, and everybody that knows you will love you too."—British Workman.

WHO IS A HERO?—"If I were a general," said Freddie, laying down his history, "I should be happy."

"Are you not happy now?" asked Aunt Margaret.

"O, yes! But I long to be a hero. It is something to be a hero; don't you think so?"

"Yes," said Aunt Margaret; "I admire a hero. Shall I tell you how you may become one now—a boy-hero? which, I think, is far more noble than becoming a general."

"Yes," said Freddie eagerly, "do tell me."

"By being master of yourself. Do not give way to angry, wicked feelings. The Bible says: 'He that is slow to anger is better than the mighty, and he that ruleth his spirit than he that taketh a city.' Think of this, and when tempted to do wrong fight for the right, and you will be a hero greater than a general."

THAT was a conscientious man whose hat blew off the other day in Central park, and rolled across the lawn. Instead of chasing it down with "elocutionary effects," he went bare-headed to the park commissioners, and asked for written permission to walk on the grass, if absolutely necessary.

HE LIVETH long that liveth well;
All else is life but flung away;
He liveth longest who can tell
Of true things truly done each day.

Farm, Garden and Household.

Wholesome Beds.

As we spend nearly one-third of our time in bed, and most of that in a state of unconsciousness, it becomes a matter of some importance to inquire whether we there place ourselves under the best hygienic conditions. Let us consider a few moments the elaborate pile of comfort designed to cushion our motionless forms and blunt the sense of contact with outward things. The first demand we make of it is that it feel good. So there is placed upon cords or slats, it matters little which if we do not feel them, a semi-elastic foundation, most commonly straw in a tick or palliasse. Surmounting this "the softest thing possible" has been the rule, often represented by a large sack of feathers. Above these clean sheets, blankets and comfortables ad libitum, and a decent spread, all crowned with "downy pillows."

What more can be required? Simply this, that it be healthful, that we do not get our present comfort at the expense of future health. True, the "good feeling" is indispensable to a good, refreshing bed, just as good taste is indispensable to a nourishing dish of food; but both must be put together with due regard to physiological requisites, or we fail to get, on the whole, the greatest amount of enjoyment out of them.

It is now pretty well understood among intelligent people that feathers do not make a wholesome bed, though the reason is not always correctly apprehended. It is alleged that coming so closely around the form they do not allow the insensible perspiration to pass off freely. The importance of this latter item, if not already understood, may be inferred from an article I read in a Rural New Yorker, entitled "What is a Cold?" A little reflection, however, that almost anything which would retain the exudation near the skin would also retain the heat, the feeling of which would soon demand some other outlet. This retention of heat does take place to some extent; hence feather-beds are warmer than most others, and in warm weather this accounts for some of the feeling of lassitude after sleeping on feathers. But if we have proportionately less covering there would be a more ready outlet for it upward, and thus the hygienic condition would be met.

Unless, then, there be exudations from the feathers, why should not a new feather-bed be as wholesome as any other? But how long will it remain pure? The perspiration loaded with waste matter (soluble carrion, in fact,) driven into it by the animal heat from at least half the form which it envelops, deposits there its impurities and leaves them. The difficulty is to air it properly to get the impurities out and to get pure air in through the close ticking. The hot summer sun and the wind, by much exposure to them, would do something; but few beds get these. They commonly get only the exposure of an hour or two in a comparatively still chamber, and many do not get that.

One may imagine the internal impurity of such a bed after it has been slept upon a month, a year; but five years, ten years, twenty years! No, no, that baffles imagination! The reeking secretions of nobody knows how many vile bodies, in some cases sick and dying bodies, are stowed away in these ticks, and when they are heated up by your kindly warmth they come out and attack you with their countless little envenomed darts, just when you are least active, least able to resist them. Is not this reason enough why languor and headaches follow such a night's rest? Bah, I always shudder when I get into a "hospitable" feather-bed. Some housekeepers wash theirs every five years. I should want them washed every five weeks, and then not feel safe in them.

There is, no doubt, reason enough for discarding feather-beds, but what shall we put in their place? Hair is elegant and comfortable, but very expensive, and it needs clearing at least once a year, oftener in fact, which is an additional expense. Clearly everybody can't have hair. Straw, if often changed, is a good bed for those who work hard and sleep soundly, and delicate people sometimes put this feather-bed under it, spread a thick comfortable over it, and find themselves far more refreshed than when sleeping on feathers. But husks are better still—not the coarse, soiled, mildewed article, but the inside husks, soft and clean. If we want the best bed we can make from them, we will wet, braid and then dry them; then undoing, strip them with a fork or gauge, as we choose, or this can be done without braiding, which only curls them. A merry evening or two with the children to help will prepare enough for a bed. Put them into an open tick, so they may be readily aired; spread a comfortable over them, and you will have a bed scarcely inferior to the best hair mattress for comfort and durability. This material makes good pillows also—does nicely for children who do not mind the slight rustling; but hair is still softer, and it costs no more than feathers.

For bedding nothing excels the thick Whitney blanket. Comfortables next the sheet, like the feathers, entangle too much air. Even the blankets should be washed as often as once in three months. I see no more bedding than absolutely necessary; better wear flannel or Canton flannel nightdresses, and even drawers, but never the same worn during the day. If the feet are liable to be cold, wash, rub and dry thoroughly, and wrap them in a foot-blanket. They must be kept warm at all hazards, if you wish for health. In cold weather it is advisable to have a "foot-comfort" coming half way up the bed. A "day-comfort" is also a useful addition to a bed, where one takes a nap in the day-time. It may be made of old silk dresses, with bright ties. Failing some such convenience, persons often lie down in the day-time with little or nothing over them, and of course, being less energetic than when awake, they cannot so successfully resist the tendency to take cold.—Julia Colman, in Household.

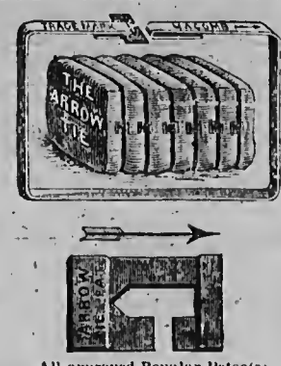
THE DUBOIS FLANGE COTTON GIN.

By the Flange the Cotton is kept in contact with the teeth on each side, until the fiber is taken from the seed, without allowing them to be taken up by the return motion of the roll, as in other gins.

The Flange prevents hulls, stems, sticks and hard substances from being cut, consequently making a better sample out of roughly-picked cotton than other Gins.



We have sold more from this point than any agency of any other Gin for the crop of 1872-73; consequently we can furnish more and better references, and they are warranted to come up to all that is said of them.

We keep constantly on hand all sizes, from 10 to 80-SAW STANDS, left or right. Price, $5 per Saw.

Tuition, per session of forty weeks, in Preparatory Department.....
Contingent expenses.....

A matriculation fee of $5 must be paid on entering any regular college class. One-half the must be paid when the student enters; the other half in the beginning of the second term, Jan

BOARD.

Board, including lodging, washing, lights and fuel, can be had in the best families for $2 per Day-boarding with the same families, $13 per month. Rooms provided in the dormitories free. Board to be paid in advance at least one month.

LOCATION.

This institution is located in the lovely village of Jackson, about twelve miles from Bayou a grove of pine, magnolia, oak and beech. The location is remarkable for its beautiful woodland and delightful atmosphere, its pure water, its undivided healthfulness and its cultivated moral society.

WHEN FOUNDED.

The college was established by the State of Louisiana in 1825, transferred to the Methodist Episcopal Church South in 1845.

ALUMNI.

Its Alumni numbers two hundred and three, and they are to be found in the most honorable and useful stations in the land.

APPARATUS AND CABINET.

The college possesses a valuable set of Philosophical, Astronomical and Chemical Apparatus, also a well-selected Mineralogical and Geological Cabinet. The apparatus includes a Theodolite, Transit, Compass, Chronometer, Atwood's Machine, Whirling Tables, Electrical Machine, Air Pump, various combinations of the Mechanical Powers, Holteries, Chemical Tests, etc., sufficient for a thorough and extended course of observations and experiments. Steps have been taken by the Board of Trustees to put these in thorough repair.

LITERARY SOCIETIES.

There are two regular Literary Societies connected with the institution. These are of great use to young men acquiring a liberal education—improving them in the art of public speaking, making them in some degree familiar with the proceedings of deliberative bodies, and in cultivating correct business habits. Each Society has a convenient hall and a well-selected Library—about one thousand volumes each, which, added to the College Library of two thousand volumes, makes a respectable thousand volumes in the college.

BUILDINGS.

The Trustees are determined to continue the repairs on the buildings till completed. The Center Building is a noble specimen of architectural beauty and adaptation to the purposes of education. The wings, built of solid brick, present each a front of two hundred feet, with upper and lower galleries the entire length, supported by Tuscan columns, and with the center making in the whole a continuous front of seven hundred feet.

PREPARATORY DEPARTMENT.

In the Preparatory Department students are fitted for regular college classes, or may obtain a thorough English or commercial education.
ITS FACULTY are men of experience and success in teaching.

OCEAN SPRINGS HOTEL.

SITUATED AT THE

CELEBRATED OCEAN SPRINGS, MISS.

This house is now open and in complete order for the reception of guests. The bathing and fishing is the best of any place on the coast, and persons seeking either health or pleasure cannot do better than to visit the Ocean Springs Hotel, where they will receive every attention during their stay at the hotel. The table will always be supplied with the delicacies of the season.

I would refer invalids seeking health to the pamphlets (to be had at the Hotel, or at Messrs. Schmidt & Zeigler's, New Orleans, Louisiana,) containing an analysis of the waters of the Springs and their wonderful cures, which are certified to by some of the most eminent physicians of our country.

Terms are more reasonable than at any of the other watering-places on the coast for the same accommodations. Liberal arrangements made with families and those wishing to remain during the season.

There are also connected with the house a Ten-Pin Alley and Billiard Saloon; also fine Croquet grounds for the guests of the house.

The proprietor has made arrangements for a Band of Music, which will be in attendance during every evening of the week, besides a fine Piano for the use of the guests of the Hotel.

A CONVERSATION FAN.

No family circle is complete in social diversions and entertainments without one, and in order to enjoy the pastime it should be distinctly understood that the answers do not numerically follow the questions, but to spice the amusement an answer must be looked for that will afford a fitting response to an interrogatory.

Where a direct answer is not to be found to a direct question, it will be discovered that it furnishes the sequel to a sustained conversation, so that couples can carry on a tete-a-tete, which they may not wish to make audible, by silent indications of numbers.

THE CONVERSATION FAN

is an infallible remedy against dullness, breaking the spell of silence by a suggestive inquiry, furnishing congenial pleasures for an evening's entertainment, and opening up a novel and ingenious method of whiling away agreeable hours at home, in the promenade, at a party or private gathering.

New Orleans Markets.

From the New Orleans Price Current.

The weather has been cloudy and showery during the past week.

The river is 10 feet 7 inches below high-water mark.

COTTON.—The following are the arrivals since the eighth instant:

| | |
|---|---|
| Louisiana and Mississippi | bales... 923 |
| Mobile | 305 |
| Texas | 15 |
| Total | 1,834 |

On Saturday a rain-storm of unusual violence prevailed during the morning, and it continued showery in the afternoon. The sales, nevertheless, reached 775 bales at about previous rates. Ordinary, dusty, sold at 11¾c., and strict good ordinary at 12c. On Monday the demand was limited, and with light supplies the business was confined to 350 bales. Nothing transpired to indicate any change in prices. Some low cotton sold at 8c., strict low middling at 18¾c., and Liverpool middling at 18½c. On Tuesday it was extremely dull throughout the day, and the sales embraced only 275 bales at prices requiring no change in quotations, although in some cases the advantage was decidedly on the side of the buyers. Of course in such a dull market sales could not be forced unless at liberal concessions.

The above makes an aggregate for the past three days of 1,400 bales, against 2,801 for the corresponding time last week and 2,445 the week before.

The receipts proper at this port since the first of September, exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas, are 1,236,183 bales, against 953,524 bales to the same date last year, and the increase in the receipts at all the ports up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 272,559 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same date last year, there is an increase of 439,698 to Great Britain, of 69,181 to France, and of 181,553 to other foreign ports. We quote:

| | |
|---|---|
| Inferior | 7 @ 9¼ |
| Low ordinary | 9¼ @ 10¾ |
| Ordinary | 11¾ @ 11 |
| Good ordinary | 14¾ @ 17 |
| Low middling | 17¾ @ 18¾ |
| Middling | 18¾ @ 19 |
| Strict middling | 19¼ @ 19¾ |
| Good middling | 19¾ @ 20 |

MONETARY.

Gold opened on Tuesday at 115⅝@115¾ (against 115⅝ at New York), and closed at the opening rates (against 115¾ at New York.)

We have not heard of a sale of silver. We quote American half dollars at 108@109. Mexican dollars are quoted at ¼ ₱ cent. premium in gold for new and 1¼ for old.

THE District Sunday School Convention will be held at Hazlehurst, September 18. On the nineteenth there will be a union picnic. All the schools in the district are requested to send delegates—at least four from each school. Superintendents will please inform Bev. C. Chamberlain of the number and names of delegates to be provided for. All schools desiring to attend and contribute to the picnic will report to Bev. C. Chamberlin, who will hand the report to the committee of arrangements.

W. E. M. LINFIELD, P. E.

JACKSON DISTRICT, MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.—The Sunday School Convention and the Historical Association meet at Canton, Mississippi, on Wednesday, August 27.

The last Friday in August is appointed by the District Conferences as a day of fasting, humiliation and prayer, and to make special prayer that the Lord will call and send out more men to preach the gospel in our midst.

H. H. MONTGOMERY, P. E.

THE District Conference for the Greensboro district, Alabama Conference, will be held at Plantersville, beginning on Thursday, August 28, at eleven o'clock. Delegates will apply at the different railroad offices for return tickets, and they will get them at half price.

A. H. MITCHELL, P. E.

THE DISTRICT CONFERENCE of the Alexandria district, Louisiana Annual Conference, will convene at Pineville, Louisiana, beginning on Thursday, September 4, 1873. All official members of the Alexandria district are members of this conference, and it is the duty of each to attend. Homes and ample accommodation will be made for ministers and official members. Turn out, brethren, and let us reason together. The introductory sermon will be preached on Thursday night, at eight o'clock, by the Rev. William V. Taylor, M. D. Ministers and members will be cited homes by applying at the drug store of W. C. Tait, in Alexandria, or to myself in Pineville.

Bishop Keener is expected to be present.

FRED. WHITE, P. E.
CHRISTIAN KEENER, P. C.

THERE will be a camp meeting at Lewis' Creek, Alabama, beginning on Friday morning before the third Sunday in September. Ministers of the gospel will be properly provided for, and are cordially invited to attend. The meeting is to be self-supporting—that is, each family goes in covered wagon or provided with tent, and provides for itself. All except ministers who attend must provide for themselves unless they have special invitations. The camp ground is near Slade's station, on the Mobile and Alabama Grand Trunk railroad. Conveyance for the preachers will be at the station on Thursday.

WILLIAM H. MORRIS, P. C.

CAMP MEETING.—The camp meeting on Big Creek, fifteen miles north of Alexandria, begins on Wednesday, October 1. Preachers are invited, and will be provided for. Others must come prepared to take care of themselves. Corn will be on hand at a moderate price.

F. WHITE, P. E.
J. F. WYNN.

CAMP MEETING.—Change of Time. The time of holding the camp meeting at China Grove, Dale county, Alabama, has been changed from Friday night before the second Sabbath in September to Friday night before the first Sabbath in October next. The friends of the camp meeting and ministers of the Methodist Episcopal Church South are cordially and earnestly invited to attend.

A. DOWLING, P. C.

THERE will be a camp meeting on the Sparta and Ringgold circuit, five and a half miles east of Sparta, on the Vernon road, commencing on Thursday before the first Sunday in October next. We expect a good many tents, and hope to entertain the people well. We invite both preachers and people to attend.

DAVID A. BODDIE, P. C.

CAMP MEETING.—A camp meeting will commence at Smith's camp ground, Gaston circuit, Alabama Conference, near DeSotoville, Choctaw county, Alabama, on Friday, the third of October next. A cordial invitation is extended to ministerial brethren.

C. B. DE BOSE, P. C.

THERE will be a camp meeting at Spring Dale camp ground, Attala circuit, Yazoo district, North Mississippi Conference, commencing on Friday before the fourth Sunday in September. The preachers and people are invited.

S. D. T[illegible], P. C.

CAMP MEETING.—There will be a camp meeting at Pilgrim's Rest camp ground, Philadelphia circuit, Mississippi Conference, commencing September 5, 1873. Preachers are invited.

L. P. MEADOR, P. C.

CAMP MEETING.—The camp meeting at Crystal Springs camp ground, Copiah county, Mississippi, will commence on Wednesday, the third of September next. Ministers and members of the Methodist Church, with all others who wish to be benefited by the exercises of the occasion, are respectfully and cordially invited to be present. We sincerely hope that Methodist preachers will not wait for further invitation. We cannot think of the names of all whom we would be glad to have with us, and may therefore fail to invite each one personally. But, brethren, come to the help of the Lord. Come and help us with your prayers and exhortations.

The camp ground is within the corporate limits of Crystal Springs, one mile from the depot. Conveyance at hand at a trifling expense, and ample boarding and sleeping accommodations for all who come.

It is understood, of course, that the camp meeting is upon the self-sustaining plan of last year, which is, indeed, the only practicable plan. The Camp Meeting Association expect, of course, to provide accommodations, free of charge, to all ministers coming to labor with us. We hope to make accommodating terms with the railroads for excursion tickets.

Extensive improvements are being made in the boarding department, and the fare is put down as low as it can be afforded.

Let everybody come to the Crystal Springs camp meeting—singers, preachers and all praying people especially.

All who desire to erect tents will please speak soon. The ground is being rapidly taken up.

H. J. HAMMS, P. C.
Crystal Springs Station, Mississippi Conference.

CAMP MEETING.—There will be a camp meeting at the Line Wood camp ground, Spring Hill circuit, Meridian district, commencing on the twenty-sixth of September, 1873, which is Friday before the fourth Sunday in September. We invite all ministers who can do so to assist us. Line Wood is about twenty-two miles from Lauderdale station, Mississippi. Brethren wishing to attend will please address me at Daleville, Lauderdale county, Mississippi.

J. D. HAY, P. C.

CAMP MEETINGS.—Our camp meetings will take place at the following times and places:

Bethel will commence on Friday night before the third Sabbath of September next.

Beulah will commence on Friday night before the first Sabbath of October next.

All are urged to come, but come prepared to take care of yourselves. Of course the preachers and their families will be cared for.

JAMES E. BRIDLEY, P. C.,
Pleasant Hill Ct., Louisiana Conference.

THE JACKSON DISTRICT SUNDAY SCHOOL CONVENTION, M. E. CHURCH SOUTH.—This convention, which embraces the ministers, traveling and local, the superintendents and teachers of this district, as well as others interested in this great cause, will be held in Canton, Mississippi, beginning on Wednesday, the twenty-seventh of August next.

The committee appointed by the Jackson District Conference to secure speakers for the above occasion, without attempting to prescribe a programme for the same, would respectfully suggest the examination and discussion of the following subjects: What is the great end of Sunday school instruction? Is our literature adapted to meet the end of the Sunday school? What is the best mode of securing attendance on Sunday schools? What are the true relations of children and of Sunday schools to the church? Are denominational schools important to success? Can our Sunday school music be improved?

THOS. F. HORTON,
Chairman of Committee.

Appointments for Quarterly Meetings.

NOTICE.—The Publishing Committee of the ADVOCATE gave it as their opinion that the insertion of the notices of Quarterly Conferences once or twice was sufficient, and, as the space of the paper is valuable, they passed a resolution recommending that they "be not inserted more than once or twice." Our friends who are interested in these appointments will take due notice thereof, as we propose to be governed by the resolution in future.

News of the Week.

DOMESTIC.

NEW YORK, Aug. 13.—Advices from London by mail state that the English Roman Catholics are now organizing a real pilgrimage. They have chosen for their shrine Paray-Le-Menial, a small village of France, now sufficiently well known in connection with similar proceedings in France. The pilgrimage is being solemnized under the auspices of a very influential committee, at the head of which are found the Duke of Norfolk and Earl Denbigh, the secretary being Lord Walter Kerr. The movement, which is believed to have originated solely among the laity, has the sanction of the Roman Catholic bishop, Archbishop Manning having sent a special letter of approval to the committee. The pilgrims will start from London on the twenty-second of September.

SHREVEPORT, Aug. 13.—The completion of the Texas and Pacific railroad from Shreveport to Dallas was celebrated to-day with a grand barbecue, speeches and excursions on Red river.

SELMA, ALA., Aug. 13.—The first bale of new cotton was sold at seventeen and a half cents per pound.

The worms are lively throughout the canebrake west of Selma.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 14.—Messrs. Durell, Casey, Billings, Joubert, Lewis, Brown and other well-known Republican politicians of New Orleans are in this city, and have been exceedingly active and energetic to-day in calling upon prominent officials of the government. Among the prominent men interviewed was Attorney General Williams, with whom the delegation was in consultation for some time.

MONTGOMERY, ALA., Aug. 14.—The first bale of cotton of the new crop was received here this morning, and sold at auction for twenty-nine and a quarter cents per pound.

SHREVEPORT, Aug. 14.—The first bale of new cotton was received here to-day. It was raised in the neighborhood of Troupe, on the International railroad, and shipped by Clapp & Brown, of Troupe, to Clapp & Bros., New Orleans. It goes forward on the steamer Texas to-night.

The first bale last year was received on the thirteenth of August.

NEW YORK, Aug. 15.—A London letter of July 31 says that Mr. Motley's friends have for some time known that his health was delicate, and will not be surprised to hear that he is now confined to his bed by a somewhat serious attack.

He has had a slight paralytic stroke. It occurred as Mr. Motley was taking Lady Margaret Beaumont down to dinner. His right arm suddenly fell powerless by his side, and his side itself was also somewhat affected.

He was carried to his hotel in Dover street, and has not since left his room.

The physicians agree in regard to the paralysis being by no means serious nor likely to trouble him for any long time.

On inquiry yesterday it was ascertained that he had been going on favorably, with the exception of considerable neuralgic pain.

ST. LOUIS, Aug. 15.—Advices from the Pawnee reservation in Nebraska say that the Pawnees are preparing for war with the Sioux in retaliation for the attack on them. It is stated that they have six hundred warriors among themselves, and have invited the Omahas, Yanktons and one or two other friendly tribes to join them, nearly all of whom have accepted the invitation. The Pawnees expect to muster one thousand six hundred warriors, and propose to prosecute a relentless war against the Sioux.

CHICAGO, Aug. 15.—The Times of this morning says the fact is one that need no longer be concealed that the cholera prevails in this city. There have been forty-two deaths from that disease.

NEW YORK, Aug. 16.—Among the arrivals by the Hammonia yesterday were nineteen families, numbering one hundred persons in all, of the Mennonite sect. The Russian government gave this class ten years in which to emigrate or Russianize themselves. They say that notwithstanding the permission given them to emigrate the authority to do so was obtained only after repeated applications to the provincial governor, to the governor general and finally to the ministers at St. Petersburg. They start to-day for Kansas.

A delegation representing forty thousand Mennonites has been in this country some time searching for suitable homes through various Western States. A colony of five thousand will come out in May. Their place for settling has not yet been fully decided upon.

CHICAGO, Aug. 17.—An accident occurred last night near Lemont, on the Chicago and Alton railroad, the incoming freight train colliding with the south-bound express passenger train, almost entirely wrecking the latter, killing six persons outright and fearfully injuring thirty-seven others, many of whom will die.

There were no Southerners in the list. The fatalities were confined to the smoking and second-class cars. Regular passengor coaches and sleepers escaped.

The following account of the accident is from officers of the road:

The regular passenger train for St. Louis left Chicago at nine P. M., and consisted of one baggage car, express, three day coaches, the head one a second-class or smoking car, and two sleepers.

At twenty minutes past ten P. M., when three miles north of Lemont and about twenty-two miles south of Chicago, at a curve in the road, suddenly appeared a coal train of thirty-five cars, running at the rate of about twenty miles an hour. The passenger train was running at the rate of probably thirty miles an hour, and neither engineer saw the other's engine till it was too late to reverse—a fact accounted for by a curve in the road and partly by dense fog.

NEW YORK, Aug. 18.—A Herald special, dated Carlist headquarters, Sangnesa, the eighteenth, says the French government has taken initiatory steps toward recognizing the Carlists as belligerents, having issued orders permitting the transit of arms and munitions of war between the two customhouse lines in the south of France. The decree, dated in March, 1805, which prohibited such transportation on the borders is now rescinded by the Paris government.

The border authorities have been notified by a circular, thus enabling the Carlists to dispense with the use of a steamer and the risk of her capture.

A letter from Rome says the syndic have posted up a notice prohibiting all persons, under pretense of making pilgrimages, whether singly or in groups, from passing through the city. It is regarded as a fanaticism not to be encouraged, and as a means used for keeping up political excitement, as well as detrimental to the public health.

Allowing a great crowd to come together at Assisi or similar places, with the very imperfect means of accommodation, might be attended with serious harm. The pilgrimages of the Musselmen to Mecca served to propagate cholera and other maladies.

DETROIT, Aug. 18.—Prof. Wilson, of the Ann Arbor Observatory, telegraphs to the Tribune of this city as follows:

"On the twenty-fourth of July I observed a star of the twelfth magnitude which on Saturday night last was missing from the place where it was first seen. A little to the west I saw a star of the eleventh magnitude, which proves to be a new planet, and at present I suppose it to be other than the one seen on the twenty-fourth of July. It is situated in right ascension twenty-three hours three minutes, and declination two degrees thirty-eight minutes south, and moving slowly to the west."

CINCINNATI, Aug. 19.—Advices received from Prof. Horsford, of the jury on the commerce of the world, at Vienna, state that the cartoons representing hog-slaughtering and pork-packing, and the statistical tables, all prepared under the auspices of the Cincinnati Pork-Packers' Association, had received the highest medal within the gift of the committee.

FOREIGN.

LONDON, Aug. 13.—Thomas Chisholm Anstey, an eminent barrister and writer, died to-day, aged fifty-seven.

A special to the Standard reports that Lissaraga has captured the town of Vergara. The Carlists claim this success as the most important they have had since the beginning of the campaign.

PARIS, Aug. 13.—Le Temps and Le Constitution publish a rumor that the Count de Chambord has partially withdrawn from his position in regard to the white flag, and will come to France to take up his residence there about the sixteenth proximo.

A report is current that Metz will be restored to France through the influence of Russia.

BAYONNE, Aug. 13.—The wife of Don Carlos has joined her husband in the field. She will share his fortunes. The Carlists are wildly enthusiastic over the event.

MADRID, Aug. 16.—It is officially stated that the Carlist force in Spain does not exceed twenty-six thousand Infantry, four hundred and fifty cavalry and seventeen pieces of artillery.

The insurgents at Carthagena have released and armed eighteen hundred convicts.

One of the national blockading fleet has been disabled by a shell.

The Carlists in the vicinity of Bilbon fired upon Spanish, French and English vessels. Several of the men on board were killed and wounded.

GASTEIN, Aug. 16.—The Emperor William of Germany, who is now sojourning here, gave audience yesterday to Dr. Philip Schaff, the bearer of cordial greetings to his majesty from the New York General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church. In his remarks, in reply, the Emperor dwelt upon the necessity of Christians working together, in order to combat infidelity and superstition.

PERPIGNAN, Aug. 19.—A desperate engagement has just taken place between a force of Carlists, numbering two thousand four hundred men, and three columns of Spanish republicans. The battle was fought in the open country, between the towns of Berga and Carserps, and resulted in the defeat of the republicans, with the loss of two hundred men and one gun.

AT A meeting of free-thinkers in Brussels, Belgium, lately, a prominent speaker declared that "the conquest of woman is the matter to which we must now give our utmost attention, for when once we have the women in our hands then the last refuge of Christianity is destroyed forever. For it is woman who keeps the men in the church, by her influence and her prayers, and many a man would die as he has lived—a free-thinker—were it not for his wife. Therefore we must move all our energies to gain the women and children."

From the Work.

GREENE CIRCUIT, ALABAMA CONFERENCE.—Mr. Editor: A protracted meeting has just closed at Sardis church. The church seemed to be generally revived, and was strengthened by the accession of twenty to the membership. It was a grand and joyful sight to see twenty young persons—among them a little girl—join the church at the same time. May they continue faithful followers of the blessed Savior through life. The meeting was conducted by Rev. J. W. McCann, preacher in charge. He was assisted by Rev. R. M. Powers, preacher in charge at Eutaw.

LOWER PEACHTREE, ALABAMA CONFERENCE.—Mr. Editor: I have just returned home from a very interesting meeting, of seven days' duration, at Grove Hill, on the Jackson circuit, where we had quite a revival, and thirteen accessions to the church at that place. There were many seekers at the altar of prayer during each hour's service. Large congregations attended with much interest. Our house, though small for the population of the little town, was crowded most of the time, and I do not think that I ever experienced better behavior or more profound attention during the whole exercises. Most of the seekers, together with those who professed religion and joined the church, were young men and women, and among the most promising of the country.

Bro. Frazer, I think, is doing a good work. Fifty odd have joined the church in his charge since his last quarterly meeting.

There is some revival spirit on my work at present. Several have very recently joined the church. I have just begun my protracted meetings.

DELHI DISTRICT, LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.—Mr. Editor: I have held the fifth quarterly meeting, third round. You will observe that I will have just Saturdays and Sabbaths enough to close up my year's work. We are in the midst of a most gracious revival at several points in my district. Bro. McClendon closed a meeting at Bartholomew last week. Forty odd accessions; large number of bright conversions. Last Saturday I opened again at Lind Grove; fine meeting going on. On Saturday morning last Bro. Wright closed a fine meeting at Alto, continued over from the quarterly meeting the Saturday before. Result: twenty odd accessions. Bro. Randle's quarterly meeting, Oak Grove circuit, goes over all this week. I left on Monday; prospects very flattering. Bro. Liverman, Delhi circuit, closed, last week, a most gracious revival at his appointment near this place. Several bright, old-fashioned conversions; added to the church twelve or fifteen. In all these meetings, and others past that I might refer to, there are these attractive features: the fullness and depth of the work, and the character of the men and women moved—settled, prominent citizens. And with all this we feel that we are just entering on the campaign. Our plans are large and liberal, our forces strong and determined. We expect to give you cheering "church news."

Doubtless the brethren referred to, and others not mentioned, will give you full accounts.

I reached home on Monday, the eleventh day from the Alto quarterly meeting; had traveled nearly two hundred miles and preached fourteen sermons.

The preachers of my district are, as a general thing, entering heart and soul into our campaign plans, and we propose to come up to our annual convocation the banner district of the Conference. God bless you.

Affectionately,

JOEL T. DAVES.

EUFAULA DISTRICT CONFERENCE, ALABAMA CONFERENCE.—Mr. Editor: The Eufaula District Conference held its session at Abbeville, Henry county, Alabama, July 30 to August 3. The session was harmonious and pleasant, and we trust profitable. In the absence of a Bishop the presiding elder, Rev. W. H. Elisha, D. D., presided, and presided well. Never, at any previous conference in this district, has there been such a large attendance of ministers and delegates, though Abbeville is on the extreme eastern boundary. Most of the delegates were in their places at the beginning, and remained to the close. These meetings are growing in favor and in interest.

The reports from the charges did not show the church to be in a very healthy spiritual state. The revival season, however, is just beginning, and a few weeks later the reports would have been more favorable. One of the best points we saw was that the pastors had been enforcing discipline throughout the district with a determination to reform or expel all disorderly members. This is what we need—the church must be purged. We can never expect God to pour out his blessings upon her while she gives countenance to sin by retaining in her sacred fold those who live according to the world. The sooner the Methodist Church clears away the rubbish the better.

The conference passed a resolution requesting the next session of the Alabama Conference to memorialize the General Conference to enact specific laws in reference to the popular sins of the times, such as the use and sale of ardent spirits, dancing, billiard-playing, attending theaters, circuses and the like. Pastors feel the need of such legislation. While they themselves understand all these things to be included in the General Rules of the church, their members (and especially the young) do not. In some charges there has been trouble, which would not have been the case had there been a direct expression or prohibition in the Discipline. Let the next General Conference give it to us. We need it, and need it badly.

The Sabbath schools in this district are prosperous—were never more so. This, we think, is largely attributable to the excellent literature now furnished by our own Publishing House. The uniform lesson system is generally adopted, and is working admirably. Dr. Haygood is doing good work, and ought to be sustained by the whole church.

We are sorry to say, Mr. Editor, that the organ of our own Conference, over which you preside, has but a small circulation in southeastern Alabama. The old Southern Christian Advocate is much nearer, and has been a weekly visitor in most of the families here for many long years. Some take it because their fathers did, and others because they came from Georgia or South Carolina, and they like to hear from the section they know. On these grounds we have to excuse them.

The educational interests of the church received due attention. The Southern University, with Dr. A. S. Andrews at its head, and the Tuskegee Female College, under Rev. H. D. Moore, were represented as being in a sound, healthy condition. There is no need for the Methodists of Alabama to send their sons and daughters out of the State to educate them. The Alabama Conference can boast of as good educational advantages as any sister Conference. All the presidents and faculties ask for is that the people send them their sons and daughters, and they will return them educated men and women to bless the church. As to cheapness, the Southern University is offering superior inducements. Parents who have sons to educate, and young men looking for a college, will do well to consult Dr. Andrews before going elsewhere. We had no reports from Centenary Institute.

All the business of the Conference was carefully attended to, and all returned home delighted with their visit to Abbeville. Allow us to say that the hospitality of the citizens there knew no bounds. They took care of everybody and their friends. We hope to visit them again.

Delegates elected to the Annual Conference: Dr. T. J. S. Kimbrough, D. J. E. Crews, Rev. T. A. Johnson and Major J. W. L. Daniel. W.

From Mexico.

We find the following startling narrative published in the Brownsville (Texas) Ranchero of July 18:

From La Voz Publica, of Matamoros.

HORRIBLE CRIME.

In the town of Zamgoza there has been committed one of those crimes at which civilized society trembles with indignation.

On the sixth of last month about thirty Protestants of both sexes were engaged in worship on the street of San Pedro. Suddenly they were called to the door of their church. The citizen Julian Hernandez, went forth and opened the door to those who were calling, when a band of assassins fell upon him with their daggers, leaving him dead in the act.

They mortally wounded the citizens Pablo Apolonio Cortes and Francisco Carvajal. They then beat all the rest, and broke up all the furniture there was in the church. They put out the lights and maltreated and violated the women.

This iniquitous crime, without example in our religious history, has remained without punishment by the government of Puebla. The Protestant citizens petitioned for protection from the police and this was denied, and they were left in the hands of a furious band of fanatics, frantic in their barbarity to add another crime to their actions.

Many suppose that this crime has been permitted by the government of Puebla, and the traitors to the country who form its support, because justice has been denied to the citizens who were assaulted, while the bandits and red-handed assassins have been left free.

What has passed in Puebla is without a name. This government has laid aside the mask, and has committed itself to every kind of excess. It has trampled upon the law, and sentenced a society to death.

If the general government does not apply a remedy to the situation in Puebla it will be the duty of the other States to form an alliance and to liberate the people from barbarism, as Europe united against the bandits of Argel.

We shall await to see what the official organ of that government will have to say in relation to the malicious commandment of this crime, without example.

Books and Periodicals.

THE SOUTHERN METHODIST HYMN AND TUNE-BOOK. A collection of the best and most popular hymns and tunes for public and family worship. Macon and Atlanta, Georgia: J. W. Burke & Co., 1874.

The title, as quoted, gives a fair idea of the book, and we have no doubt it will supply a want which has been felt by many. The hymns are selected from our hymn-book, and are those most in demand, while the tunes are generally the oldest and best. Type, paper and binding are all satisfactory.

THE GEM, OR SONGS AND TUNES FOR THE CHILDREN OF THE CHURCH. Nashville, Tennessee: Publishing House of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, 1873.

Dr. Haygood, in the preface, says that the Gem is composed chiefly of selections from the Amaranth and the Emerald. We expect the Gem is a gem, and therefore commend it to the patronage of our people. For sale at Nashville and New Orleans.

THE LIBERAL EDUCATION OF WOMEN. The demand and method. Current thoughts in America and England. Edited by James Orton, A. M. A. S. Barnes & Co., New York and Chicago, 1873.

The book contains thirty-six pretty long chapters, and gives the most that has been written on the question for the past twenty years. Those who wish to post themselves on this subject, now so much agitated, will find materials in abundance in this volume, and from the ablest educators of the day. Price, $1.50 sent by mail, post-paid.

EARNEST WORDS ON TRUE SUCCESS IN LIFE. Addressed to young men and women. By Ray Palmer. A. S. Barnes & Co., New York and Chicago, 1873.

A valuable work, and well adapted to instruct and guide those who are entering on the duties and responsibilities of life. We commend it to young people and everybody.

LATIN PRONUNCIATION. By Walter Blair, A. M. A. S. Barnes & Co., New York and Chicago, 1873.

The work was originally prepared by appointment of the Educational Association of the State of Virginia, and is an inquiry into the proper sounds of the Latin language during the classical period. Price, $1 by mail.

THE MOUTH OF GOLD. By Edwin Johnson. A. S. Barnes & Co., New York and Chicago, 1873.

A beautifully-bound 12mo of 109 pages, containing a series of dramatic sketches illustrating the life and times of Chrysostom. We know nothing of the merits of the work.

RESPONSIVE WORSHIP. A. S. Barnes & Co., New York and Chicago.

A little volume containing a sermon by William Ives Budington, D. D., and letters from sundry persons advocating responsive worship, especially in Congregational churches.

THE SOUTHERN REVIEW, July, 1873, has the following table of contents: 1. Truth versus Tradition—a very able and satisfactory article from the pen of Dr. Bledsoe, and bearing with overwhelming power upon the question of apostolical succession. 2. Oliver Wendell Holmes—a review of the Breakfast Table series, in which the subtle religious poison of this fascinating writer is fairly and clearly exposed. 3. The Thompson-Tyndall Prayer Test—a very judicious examination of this now exhausted subject, but with no new or remarkable conclusions. 4. The Land of the Vede is readable and instructive, and refers largely to Dr. Butler's interesting work, from which the title of the article is taken. 5. The Origin and Character of the Gipsies contains a good deal of curious information about this singular people. The writer says that the tipsy race in Europe and America has been estimated at not less than four millions. He believes, with much show of evidence, that John Bunyan was a Gipsy. 6. Modern Culture is a thoughtful article and worth a most careful reading. 7. History of Christianity in the Southern States is a brief statement of facts chiefly relating to the early history of the various denominations in the South, and is rich in its notices of men and incidents. 8. Folk Lore—an article exhibiting considerable research and abounding in curious information. 9. The New Birth. The writer's text is John iii, 3, 4, 5. His position is that water in the fifth verse is synonymous with "the word," and that the meaning is: "Except a man be born of the word and of the Spirit." This position is argued ingeniously and at length, but to our mind not conclusively. 10. The Genius of George Eliot is an impartial and perhaps just estimate of this remarkable writer. 11. Notices of Books is of course discriminative and able, only not enough of it. We have noticed in this number of the Review some typographical errors, but they are few and easily corrected by the reader. The general make-up in the variety and character of the articles is admirable, and the most conservative will find in them nothing political of which to complain.

THANKFUL.—There was once an old woman who, in answer to a visiting almoner's inquiries as to how she did, said: "O, sir, the Lord is very good to me; I've lost my husband and my eldest son and my youngest daughter, and I'm half blind, and I can't sleep or move about for the rheumatics; but I've got two teeth left in my head, and, praise and bless his holy name, they're opposite each other!"

Letter from Southwestern Virginia.

MR. EDITOR: Southwestern Virginia remains as fresh and fair as ever, notwithstanding east Tennessee has suffered so severely from cholera. The physicians of Abingdon say there has not been less sickness here for years than during this summer. Commodore Maury said, during a visit to our town two years ago, that the atmosphere of southwestern Virginia was in the condition of running water, and, like our mountain streams, was fresh and pure; that it must always be a healthy country, and will be the sanitarium of the South. There is not in all the land a more delightful summer climate than ours, and our winters are not severe. At this time the landscape is lovely beyond the power of words to describe. The mornings are glorious, and the evenings and nights delicious. I have been in every continent on the globe—have looked upon the most beautiful lands upon which the sun shines—but never saw any place, in any land, more beautiful, or in all respects more desirable as a home, than southwestern Virginia.

We have had this summer the pleasure of a visit from Bishop McTyeire and Dr. Garland, and a pleasure it was. It is not often two such men meet under circumstances so favorable to enjoyment as those which brought these brethren to Abingdon. They were here "on duty," in a refuge, while the cholera was raging in Nashville. Our pure mountain breezes tilled them with new sensations—with physical joys unknown in a torrid climate. They talked and preached to the great edification of the people. Dr. Garland delivered "a lecture," as he modestly termed it a good sermon to the young men of Abingdon. Bishop McTyeire preached two admirable sermons in Abingdon, and one at the Sulphur Springs, in the vicinity of town. The Bishop is a most delightful companion, "witty and wise," and one of the most instructive preachers in the church. This, however, is no news to you or your readers.

Our vacation is rapidly passing away, and soon the "weary work" must begin again. So far the prospects for a good school the next year, at Martha Washington, are unusually flattering. We hope to have more patronage from your city. We were delighted with the specimens we had. We do think, if our school were better known, it would be more liberally patronized, especially by our Southern friends. We intend to make it the first female school in the South, if we can. The trustees are now having additional buildings erected.

Our masculine neighbor, Emory and Henry College, is anticipating an increase of patronage. It is certainly worthy of it. All the advantages of climate, cheapness, etc., which we claim for Martha Washington apply equally to Emory and Henry. Dr. Wiley and his colleagues cannot be surpassed anywhere for competency and fidelity. The graduates of this college stand well at the University of Virginia, to which many of them go after completing the course at college. The moral tone of Emory and Henry is good—always has been good.

The editorials in the last number of your paper, headed "The Manner of Spirit" and "Gloomy Religion," please me much. We ought to seek the "orthodoxy of spirit" more as the test of Christian character. If a man has not "the spirit of Christ" he is not a Christian, though he be as orthodox in creed as St. Paul. Of this we can all safely judge, for about it there is no dispute. Apply this "law of the spirit" to the controversies and strifes among Christians, and who is not reproved? "Gloomy religion" is not the religion of the Bible, and our people ought to be so taught. A change has passed over the manner of teaching on this subject since I was a boy. I remember distinctly that my first impressions of God's character were exceedingly disagreeable. I regarded him as "so hard to please" that it was scarcely worth while to try. He seemed to me to take delight in punishing men for doing what he had tempted them to do. In other words, he was always setting snares for the feet of sinners. All this was so wrong. They ought to have taught me that God was my father. I loved my earthly father very tenderly, and if I had thought my Father in heaven was anything like him I should have loved him also. But the being I regarded as God was a gloomy tyrant, watching to take advantage of my ignorance, that he might punish me. I had no idea I should live to manhood. The preachers said they were looking for the judgment every day, and I supposed they knew all about it. Such "terrible preaching" made me very unhappy without convicting me of sin. I felt that I was wrong, everybody was wrong, except a few favorites, who seemed to be specially gifted with grace; but I could not see how any common person could help doing wrong, or at least being "in the wrong." This was "another gospel." Our blessed Christianity is no such system of gloomy cruelty.

Several gracious revivals of religion have been reported in our country recently. They are not as common as in earlier days. Camp meetings are being restored throughout the country. Multitudes will attend these that could not be induced to attend a church, and much good may thus be done. Yours truly,

W. H. E. CUNNINGHAM

THE AWAKENING.

BY MISS S. A. WOODBRIDGE.

Christ came not in the sweet spring-time
When, like a child that long has slept,
Nature awakened with a smile,
And rosy from her cradle crept.

He came on no such joyous day
To save a fallen, sinful race;
The earth was gloomy, cold and gray
When he revealed his blessed face.

Pitying surely flowers had been,
And all unnoticed to his eyes,
Where as a man, to rescue men,
He hastened out to Paradise.

But who shall say that year by year,
He comes not to us, though unseen,
When first the early birds appear,
When first the tender grass is green?

What sound through all the forests flows,
That sap forsakes its wintry rest,
And upward streams through trunk and boughs?
The potent voice that woke the dead.

Who touch is on the vales and hills,
That leaves unfold and flowers expand,
And Nature's heart so throbs and thrills?
The touch that healed the withered hand.

Yes, Christ is near! This very hour
He visits these abodes of sin;
His step is at the outer door;
O King of glory! enter in.

Sins of the Flesh.

MR. EDITOR: There are those in our country who hold and publicly teach that when God justifies and saves the repentant believer he merely saves the spirit from the bondage of sin and satan, and that the body is still under the dominion of the world and the devil. Hence they say and teach that after "conversion" the soul is "equal in character and being with God," and therefore can never more commit sin, and can never "fall away" and be lost. At the same time they assert that the person in the flesh commits sin, and can never be saved from its act and guilt; but yet the soul remains as pure as an angel; in fact as pure as Christ himself.

It may seem very strange that this paradoxical sentiment is to be found in the ninth article of the "Religion" of the Episcopal Church. In this article we read: "And this infection of nature doth remain, yea, in them that are regenerated." And it is yet a greater wonder that Mr. John Wesley, in his sermon "On Sin in Believers," quotes and approves the sense of the article as defined by that church. The proof relied upon is found in Romans viii, 6, 7, which reads thus: "Carnally-minded"—"carnal mind." But a full reading of the terms found in these places will show that the apostle puts the "carnal mind" in direct contrast with the "spiritual mind," and declares in strong and emphatic language that "to be carnally-minded is death;" "but to be spiritually-minded is life and peace." As further proof that the apostle is here putting the states in contrast, he says, in the ninth verse: "But ye are not in the flesh, but in the Spirit, if so be that the Spirit of God dwell in you. Now if any man have not the Spirit of Christ, he is none of his."

But other churches than the Episcopal hold this same doctrine; for in this country there are those of the Baptist Church who make this doctrine the grand center of great comfort, and hence boldly announce that its belief gives repose and satisfaction amid the sins and wrongs which ever remain in the flesh. Therefore the subject deserves a more extended and careful notice, both in the light of Scripture and reason.

In Romans vi, 12 the apostle reaches a strong and all-covering conclusion in the following: "Let not sin, therefore, reign in your mortal body, that ye should obey it in the lusts thereof." At the thirty-fourth verse of the seventh chapter of First Corinthians: "The unmarried woman careth for the things of the Lord, that she may be holy both in body and in spirit." To the same purpose we are taught in the first verse of the seventh chapter of Second Corinthians: "Having, therefore, these promises, dearly beloved, let us cleanse ourselves from all filthiness of the flesh and spirit, perfecting holiness in the fear of God." Once more. The same grand doctrine is taught most forcibly in the twenty-third verse of the fifth chapter of First Thessalonians. Hear it: "And the very God of peace sanctify you wholly; and I pray God your whole spirit and soul and body be preserved blameless unto the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ."

In all the above quotations the word of the Lord gives no countenance whatever to the "fleshly doctrine" which so many endeavor to draw therefrom in order to relieve themselves from the fearful obligations of the "moral law," which Jesus himself reiterated, under the forms of heavenly sanction, as the sum of the law and the prophets. How will it be in the great judgment with preachers of the gospel who "break one of these least commandments, and teach men so?"

Now let us look at this doctrine of the "sins of the flesh" in the light of reason. Sin is predicated of a moral agent. This embraces law, intelligence and liberty. In this sense no one can say that a horse commits sin. Whatever is capable of committing sin is held to accountability and is liable to punishment. To say that the body or flesh commits sin apart from the spirit is to predicate moral agency of the body. To say that God can and does "regenerate" the soul apart from the body, and at the same time leave the body capable of and inclined to sin, is to declare, in effect, two moral agents in one person. And as nothing pure can go to hell (and the spirit is pure, being "regenerated,") and as nothing impure can enter heaven (and the body is impure, not being regenerated,) therefore in the great judgment the Judge of the quick and dead will be compelled to separate the same person, sending the soul to heaven and the body to hell!

How absurd is the doctrine of the "sins of the flesh" as seen in the light of Scripture and reason.

More Work for the General Conference.

MR. EDITOR: It has always seemed strange to me that our Book of Discipline is not more pronounced upon one point of vital importance in morals. It has not, I know, escaped the notice of the General Conference. They have had some discussion on the subject at different times, but it has not resulted in any definite action. I refer to the making, buying or selling of spirituous liquors, except for medicinal or sacramental purposes. I know that it is held that the usage of the church has established the law against it. I protest that this is a very debatable question. Where and when has the custom of the church established such a law? To have made it a law it must have been the universal custom. But it has been in communities here and there; that is all. To my certain knowledge there is not nor has there been such custom in the Alabama Conference, in many years past; and, judging from statements made in our Advocates, I conclude not anywhere. But others say: "There is plenty of law in the Discipline to expel a man for it; and so I claim; but it is manifestly a forced construction of law. Some believe the law of Discipline is express against it. So a writer in the Nashville Advocate, some time since, quoted in this wise: as "the General Rule against the making, buying or selling spirituous liquors, except in cases of necessity." Now there is such a law in some temperance organizations, but none whatever of the church. There is no special law of the church against making, buying or selling spirituous liquors, for any and all purposes. And, as is well known, numbers of members, as far as I am informed, all through our connection, are suffered to remain in our church and deal in this the most harmful traffic the world has ever known. They themselves have taken the trouble to find that there is no law of Discipline forbidding it; and, if the preacher finds one, it is by construction he finds it. The construction in forced. I believe the rule in civil law is that, where the law is penal, the construction must be literal. But here we claim a penal offense without a law. I found a man in the church, on this circuit, selling whisky as a beverage, who was taken into the church, two or three years ago, while in this nefarious trade; and he has continued it without let or hinderance till now, and when an attempt was made to discipline him he made a heavy fight, with the Discipline in his hand, claiming loyalty to the law and usage of the church. He plead the absence of law against it, and that he bought it from members of our church in one of our popular stations.

Nor is it at all clear that all our preachers oppose it among our membership; but rather that in many instances it is connived at. Many specious pleas and excuses are framed by the dealers, and I know that in some cases they are allowed by the pastor. I do not think it at all impossible that there is entire correctness, as Dr. Summers supposes, in reply to a very young preacher, in the Nashville Advocate of June 7, in the statement of the man who was selling liquor, that the presiding elder said it was no harm. To me these are very humiliating facts. They are facts, nevertheless, and only facts will show the necessity for definite action upon this subject. Other facts I could give, from personal observation, but these are enough to call for specific legislation.

If there is necessity for a definite rule against "drunkenness or drinking spirituous liquors, except in case of necessity," surely there is for a rule against making, buying or selling spirituous liquors as a beverage. However plausible the argument for it may be, I cannot conceive of anything a man can do to do more harm. If the murderer is more guilty than the murdered, then the dealer in ardent spirits is more guilty than the drunkard. It is useless to say: "Men will sell it and men will drink it." If John A. Murrell was a highwayman, I am not justifiable in becoming one. If a man is poor and has a family to support, and can make more money by selling whisky than by doing anything else, if he is an expert thief let him rather steal as a lesser evil.

I protest that this thing calls for definite action—a special law of Discipline. Let the General Rules be amended so as to make the rule against it a part of the organic law of the church. Let it be added to the rule against drunkenness and drinking, or else make another rule to meet the case specially. The law, as it now stands, is too ambiguous and too often evaded. Our Conferences have committees on temperance who write essays and resolutions, and they are passed upon, from time to time, and there the thing ends. They have not the force of law, and are forgotten and neglected by us. Men in the church go on selling perhaps in the town where the resolutions were passed; certainly in the Conference. Let there be no longer room for preachers or people to dodge the law. Let it be distinctly enacted that such have no more place among us. We may and will lose some names from our church rolls, but let them go. If a man's conscience is so elastic as to be stretched over whisky-barrels and bottles it is too elastic to be bound by God's word. We will do better without him than with him. I do not know how to discipline a man who drinks, while the man who sells it to him is allowed to remain in the church. I do hope this subject will be brought properly before the next session of the General Conference, and we shall have no longer room left for dodging in this thing.

Alabama Conference.

STATISTICS CONTINUED.

MR. EDITOR: In the ADVOCATE of April 3 an article appeared over the signature of "Member of the Alabama Conference," which deserves some further notice, particularly from the Marianna district, since the writer in question draws such overwhelming conclusions from his figures, and figures of speech.

I now propose to continue the examination of the statistics of the Alabama Conference to see how correct the brother's conclusions are from his figures, and figures of speech. And in the first place I shall see what the statistics show in reference to the increase of membership in the several districts:

| | Members |
|---|---|
| Mobile | increase... 53 |
| Demopolis | increase... 311 |
| Selma | increase... 327 |
| Greensboro | decrease... 138 |
| Montgomery | decrease... 33 |
| Eufaula | increase... 131 |
| Marianna | increase... 635 |
| Camden | increase... 146 |
| Union Springs | increase... 177 |

Now deduct the decrease of two districts from the increase of seven districts, and it leaves a net increase of nineteen hundred and twelve members. You see from the figures above that the Marianna district stands two hundred and one members of increase ahead of any district in the Conference, and furnishes thirty-three per cent. of the total net increase of the whole Conference, making her equal to four other districts when they are averaged! Does this show that the Marianna district is not "in a healthy and growing condition?" What do some call "a healthy and growing condition?" Why, of course, plenty of finances! Well, finances are good in their place; but it will not do to say that finances of themselves constitute health and growth.—If so, then may the Roman Catholic and other churches of money power be pronounced "in a healthy and growing condition."

However, I will extend the statistical examination to other very important items to see how the Marianna district stands with her sisters in point of health and vigor. Now I propose to take up the report of baptisms, both adult and infant, and see if she is sound in the faith or not, as we understand the teaching of the Bible and our beloved Methodism. The following will speak for itself:

| | Adults. | Infants. |
|---|---|---|
| Mobile | 118 | 151 |
| Demopolis | 161 | 128 |
| Selma | 142 | 93 |
| Greensboro | 97 | 100 |
| Montgomery | 208 | 133 |
| Eufaula | 111 | 78 |
| Marianna | 338 | 247 |
| Camden | 146 | 92 |
| Union Springs | 165 | 99 |
| Total | 1,489 | 1,121 |

Thus it is seen that of the whole number of adults baptized the Marianna district baptized a fraction over twenty-two per cent., and of infants over twenty-one per cent., showing that she did more than one-fifth of the entire work in this interesting field of labor. A. DOWLING.

Style.

BY A SCHOOL-GIRL.

Originally the peculiar manner in which a writer expressed his thoughts, by means of words, was called style. It is derived from the Latin word stylus, the name of a pointed instrument employed by the Romans in writing in their waxen tablets. There are several kinds of style, such as the plain, the neat, the elegant and others.

Addison's grace and refinement, accompanied by an admirable command of familiar idioms, gave his writings a charm that rendered him far superior to Steele and others, not only in these points, but in his power of rising to dignity without losing ease or freedom. Steele showed more decisive originality, and greater breadth and force of humor, but his coadjutor excelled him by far, both in delicacy of sentiment and with the ingenuity and consistency with which he worked up his materials into finished pictures. How different the word is in its modern acceptation. At the present time the word style is applied to the latest fashion or mode of living, equipage or dress, but more particularly to dress. No matter what deformity of dress may be introduced, there are many who would say: "O my dear friend, don't you know it is the latest style." There is no tyrant so absolute as style; it rules with an iron hand. Many of its devotees will undergo any amount of pain or even hunger to be found in its train and paying their tribute to its chimera. Savage nations like bright and showy ornaments; but, as civilization succeeds barbarism, better and more perfect harmony in taste should prevail. But alas! I think the styles of the present day must partake of a barbaric character. O what a subtle foe is style, which deforms every human statue with which it comes in contact! It pinches in here and humps out there until there is not a single trace of human form about the once lovely creature. A mother once said to a friend: "Look at this satin overskirt which I made my daughter for a party. She wore this over a white dress, with sixteen puffs and fifty-two ruffles. Her hair was crimped and she had on the sweetest little white kid slippers you ever saw. And the party was really a stylish affair. It was two o'clock when she returned home." At this I turned to bestow a single glance on her ten-year-old daughter. Her cheeks were pale and her large brown eyes were sparkling with delight at her mother's description. To my inquiry whether she was not very tired afterward, she answered: "Oh! no; I could have gone the next night." Children with nervous organizations respond quickly to excitement. It acts like a bellows on a fire, and for awhile the flame burns up more vividly and brightly because of the stimulus dissipation gives. But sooner or later the flame will be exhausted, and you have a very cross, ill-natured child; yet how loath is the fashionable mother to admit that her course is detrimental to the happiness of her child. The days of the huge chignon are over, and it is hurried out of sight. The hair now, instead of being on the back of the head, is all gathered on the top, where it rises up to untold heights, puffs piled on coils and curls on puffs, and above the whole a little love of a hat, all lace and flowers. Those who like stylish things think that it is perfectly lovely. Nothing, no nothing, can exceed it in beauty. But if you do not believe what I say, wait until the next style comes out and you will soon hear them condemn this, and say it was always a hideous-looking object. Yes, as soon as it ceases to be the style we hold up our hands, horrified at such want of taste.

Suppose we for a moment look at the style of our grandmothers' bonnets. First we see an immense front, which spreads out like the small top of a buggy, with a high, straight crown, or a long, straight cottage bonnet, which is shaped like a funnel, with the face at the small end. O how we pity their ignorance when we compare these uncouth things to our little dainty hats of lace and flowers! My friends, where do you think they obtain so much false hair? Do they cut it off of some living being's head, or do they obtain it from some clean vegetable? No, indeed; they walk around the streets of Paris, and when a lady combs her hair and throws what falls out in the comb out of the window, there will be a person watching for it, who comes and picks up the old dirty bunches of hair, takes them to a hair-dresser, and by a machine it is cleansed, and then straightened out with all the roots upward, and all the different colors are separated from each other. Of course style cannot deform, but always beautifies. Why look how beautiful and graceful is the Grecian bend! How many efforts are made to get just the right bend! How very persevering are the young ladies in their efforts to bend just enough to walk without toppling over! Who that is at all stylish but will admire the graceful carve, and pity the ignorance of a man who thought the young lady who passed his office dreadfully deformed because she had this beautiful curve? We all remember the fable of the fox, who was once so unfortunate as to be caught in a trap, but made his escape and left a part of his beautiful bushy tail behind. When he met his friends, all inquired how it was. "O don't you know that it is all the style for foxes to be without the old brush? You must all be in the fashion, and have your tails off." So in order to be stylish they all lost their fine, bushy tails. This fable is not without its moral, and if we could trace the fashions back to their origin we would find that all originated to hide some deformity or cover some defect. There is no right-minded person who will not pity the perverted taste of a young lady who thinks she will add to her beauty or her attractions by distorting her person by compressing her waist until it measures but a span, or torture herself by pinching her toes in a marvelously small shoe. The Chinese belles screw their hair back to the very inch of their lives, in one plat, resembling a little pig-tail; but it does not hurt. O no; it's style. They also compress their feet until they are but a few inches in length; but still they like it, because it is style. It is a mark of their high birth. The American belles compress their lungs until they are three times larger around the shoulders than the waist; and this is what they esteem an elegant shape. But does it not hurt them? Why, no; it's style. And equally lovely are the Japanese. They have such beautiful drawings on their faces of birds, butterflies and a great many fanciful-looking objects; their teeth are also of such a beautiful black. And this is magnificent, because it is style. Our brothers are not without appreciation of style. Why look at those pants—they are so tight that they can scarcely walk in them; but O it is style. And the little short-tailed coats! The tail is about two or three inches in length. But no odds; their beavers tower aloft, and proclaim style. And now with what care do they cultivate their delicate mustache, and try to curl it, because they wish to look stylish; and with what tender care do they watch the growth of their lovely downy goatees. Why they twist it almost out to give it the stylish twist. The whole man, from the hat to the polished boot, shows that no pains or time have been spared to bring it to the perfection of style. Alas! for us poor weak mortals, is there no higher aim for our efforts, no better, purer objects for our love than thus to follow the vain pursuits of this world? Let us for the future, school-girls though we be, resolve that our love shall be fixed on higher objects, that our adorning may be that of a meek and quiet spirit, which was said to be above price.

* Second Corinthians v, 1. H. W. F.

CAN YOU PLOD?—Sir Christopher Wren, by whose master-skill St. Paul's of London was erected, desired to secure a skillful craftsman to complete his designs as the work progressed. His question to every applicant was: "Can you plod?" That is, can you take up a line of investigation, or a pathway of pursuit, and continue it to the final accomplishment without halting. It means, constant and unremitting toil. By the securement of such workmen as these, Wren's work was accomplished, and still looks fresh, though it has stood the suns and storms of nearly one hundred and fifty years.

Direct, outright and relentless labor is the demand of the Christian church to-day. "Can you plod?" should be asked of every candidate for official position in the church. Not, can you run, and fly rapidly, for a little while; but, can you keep steadily forward as the year rolls on? It is not the sudden flash of a fire of shavings in a sheet-iron stove that gives steadiness to the temperature of a mansion and cottage, but the less variable qualities of burning anthracite. So constancy is one of the most important elements of the Christian labor and life. On not one of the pages of the inspired word are we impressed with a spirit of ease. Both its words and characters teach of zeal and perseverance, of faith and firmness, until the race is run and the course finished.—Am. Wesleyan.

Obituaries.

DIED, at his grandfather's, Mr. A. J. Pennebaker, in Franklin parish, Louisiana, on the twenty-fifth of July, 1873, CLARENCE ERNEST, infant son of E. C. and Sallie M. Abell, aged five months and twenty days.

DIED, at Waterproof, Tensas parish, Louisiana, July 30, 1873, JAMES MILLER MOORE, son of Dr. James Moore and Mrs. Emma L. Moore, aged nineteen months and nineteen days.

The light of the household, the joy and hope of his loving parents, has been taken away by that Inscrutable Wisdom whose ways are past finding out. The beautiful bud we so loved to cherish has been transplanted to bloom in the better land.

H. W. DRAKE.

MRS. S. J. RALEY, daughter of C. C. and M. G. Brewster, and wife of John D. Raley, formerly of Mississippi and Louisiana, was born in 1851, baptized in 1861, and died April 5, 1873. She was a lovely young person, highly refined by grace, and filled every relation in life with Christian propriety; indeed she was a favorite with her friends. She suffered long, but without a murmur. Commending her little babe to God, and her mother, she left earth in the happy prospect of heaven. H. M. GRANADE.

FORT SMITH, ARK., July, 1873.

DIED, at her home in Perry county, Alabama, on the thirteenth of July, 1873, MARY ANNA, daughter of Mr. John A. and Mrs. R. E. Hopkins, aged six years, nine months and fourteen days.

She was so affectionate and confiding that she won the love and admiration of all who knew her, and we looked forward with hopeful anticipation of her future. She was impressed that her days were almost numbered, even before disease settled upon her vitals, and, she spoke of her departure with great composure, and also of a reunion with friends who had preceded her to the spirit-land. She divided her toys between her little sisters, and gave directions concerning her little possessions. Being dedicated to God by baptism in infancy, and raised by pious parents, her youthful mind had never been contaminated with the vanities of earth, nor her life corrupted by associations with the vile. "The Lord's ways are marvelous in our eyes," yet we know that "he doeth all things well."

AT Pattersonville, Louisiana, on the morning of June 27, Jesus gathered to his bosom the sweet budding flower he needed—LAMMIZA, the lovely daughter of Rev. Joseph Knight, aged thirteen years and three months.

Sweet Lammiza trod the thorny paths of her brief life with a sublime reconciliation, and the calmness and fortitude with which she viewed her approaching dissolution was truly remarkable. A few months previous to her death an infant pet of hers flew away to Jesus, and from that time Lammiza began to think and speak more of her Lord. During her illness of two months' duration, suffering constantly intense pain, she was ever patient, calling on and awaiting his mercy. She would frequently speak of little Edwin, and when sometimes unconscious would exclaim in tender, loving tones: "Wait, little Edwin, I am coming!" Her death is truly a sad bereavement to her fond parents, loving sister and brother, for she was indeed the light of that household—a flower that imparted its fragrance everywhere.

WILLIAM THOMAS BOYARD was born in Yazoo county, Mississippi, May 21, 1854, and died at the residence of his uncle, William J. Quin, in East Baton Rouge parish, June 27, 1873.

He came to Centenary College in October, 1872, and was pursuing his studies and departing himself in such a manner as to recommend himself to the regard of his preceptors and the friendship and esteem of his fellow-students. He was taken with typhoid fever in June, and although his physician and friends thought it but a slight attack, and that he could be removed to his home, alas! it proved fatal, and hurried him away from a future bright with promise and hope, a few days after he reached his loved ones.

Willie joined the Methodist Church in August, 1870, and professed conversion under the ministry of Rev. E. W. Simmens. He was a young man of most kindly feeling and gentlemanly bearing. It was touching to see how unselfish he was when sick, and how much afraid of giving trouble to the kind friends who were attempting to make him comfortable.

On his death-bed he gave evidence of possessing the Christian's hope, and left the glad assurance that he has gone to a brighter world. It is sad, sad indeed, to see the promising, manly boy taken away in the morning of life. C. G. ANDREWS.

MRS. MARY HENRY, relict of William F. Henry, was born March 26, 1802, and died July 26, 1873. She died at the residence of her son, W. W. Henry, Esq., at Meridian, Mississippi.

For many years the deceased was a resident of Marengo county, Alabama. For a period her home was in Clarke county, Mississippi. Meridian had been her home since 1865. For some six years prior to her death she was afflicted with a cancer on her face. The last two years of her life her suffering was almost incessant, increasing with the progress of the cancer that was preying on her health and life. Nearly three weeks before her death the effects of illness reached her brain, inducing a sort of terpor.

Mother Henry was one of the purest, best Christians I ever saw. Not demonstrative, she exhibited in all matters and in all relations of life the truly Christian spirit. She was Christ-like in her spirit of sacrifice. Almost oblivious of self, she was happy in living for others. She was a most affectionate wife, a most devoted mother, a most charitable woman, a most exemplary Christian. Her faith and fortitude failed not. Assured of a happy future, and desiring to be released from suffering, she nevertheless took a cheerful interest in temporal affairs, seeking, often beyond her strength, to do something that would advance the comfort of the household. Hers was a character most prepared for heaven, and best suited to the conditions and cares of earth—a grand and rare achievement of grace and truth by Jesus Christ. It is delightful to contemplate her beautiful character and think of her blessed estate, now that she has put off the "corruptible" body. It is one of the privileges of life to have known her, and often to have conversed and prayed with her. The memory of the sainted mother be blessed to her surviving loved ones and numerous friends!

Converted in the retirement of a country home, Mrs. Henry was for nearly fifty years a Christian and a member of the Methodist Church.

JOHN A. ELLIS.

MR. JOHN SMITH died May 8, 1873—his eighty-ninth birthday—of jaundice, at the residence of his daughter, Mrs. Eliza Mayo, in Washington, St. Landry parish, Louisiana. He was the son of Nicholas Smith, and was born in Northampton county, Pennsylvania, May 8, 1784. Connecting the present with two generations of the past, retaining his physical and mental vigor and activity to within two months of his death, made him the center of attraction in every circle where he mingled. He remembered distinctly the personal appearance of General Washington, and gave his first vote for Thomas Jefferson for President of the United States. He was a resident of St. Landry parish for sixty-five years. On the thirtieth of June, 1812, he married Miss Elizabeth Lee, of this parish, daughter of Mr. Mark Lee. She still remains, calmly awaiting her Father's will, lingering upon the distant shore of time, her mind unimpaired, with an unfaltering faith in the promises of God. Integrity and fidelity marked his business relations. These, together with a genial and sociable disposition, secured for him a large circle of friends. Physically he was not robust, but possessed a remarkable degree of elasticity of constitution and tenacity of life, which were guarded by care and prudence, enabling him to reach the golden period of life without exhausting the physical resources of his system. For nearly sixty years he has been a most exemplary member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. True to her doctrines and loyal to her every interest, he exemplified in his life the consistency and beauty of Christianity; so much so that they were endeared to his children, and in early life they were gathered into the same fold, and still later he praised God for giving him his "children's children," and yet later in the evening of his life it was his happy privilege to realize that he had not "asked" in vain to welcome into the fold of God his great grandchildren. His last illness was borne with Christian fortitude and resignation, giving to those whose privilege it was to be with him the strongest assurance that all was well. His end was a victory, "death was robbed of his terrors," and quietly and peacefully he passed away. And in close proximity the bright spirit of little BELLE MAYO, a great grandchild, with angel-hands winged her way after him to his home in heaven.

HENRY AVERY was born in Chesterfield district, South Carolina, April 8, 1799, and died in Bibb county, Alabama, March 1, 1873.

At the age of twenty he left the home of his parents, in the Palmetto State, and wandered into the then "wilderness wilds" of Alabama, and pitched his camp, for a time, near the restless waters of the Cahawba. His parents were, as I am informed, pious, and they did not altogether neglect the religious training of their children; and therefore he was, as may generally be expected, at least a moral young man. Years passed by without a change of heart or an experience of grace. In October, 1832, fortunately for him, his brother Alexander, who at this time lived near him, became seriously impressed, and determined to attend a camp meeting then going on at Chapel's meeting-house, in Tuskaloosa county, some distance from where they lived. "Bad Aleck," as he was called, met with many difficulties in getting off. His clothes were not in order and his horse out of place; but he went, and went for a purpose, and persuaded his brother Henry to go with him. Thus they made their way to the camp-meeting. Aleck, going as he did, was converted in a tent, and his noise had drawn a crowd around him, when his brother came up and asked who it was. The answer was: "Don't know; he's a stranger." He made his way to where he could see; and behold, it was his brother Aleck, who said: "The louder I shout glory the more I feel in my soul." Conviction, deep and pungent, seized his heart. He turned to those present and said: "Pray for me. I am the worst man that ever lived." And thus saying he sought the blessing till it was given. His conversion was clear and satisfactory to his own mind, and afterward he convinced others that he experienced a renewed nature.

Henry Avery was, in his section, an uncommon man. He had no cultivation, but, as I learn, read much—non multa, sed multum. His library contains some of the works of Wesley, Watson and Clarke, and a few others besides. With these books he spent his time for reading. He read the Bible also.

After a life of seventy-three years God called for an account of his stewardship. Not a misstep in his life is urged against him. Just before his death he said to the writer: "My trust is in the goodness of God and the atonement of Christ." How boundless his goodness displayed in the atonement! W. M. WINN.

SANDALPHON.

LONGFELLOW.

Have you read in the Talmud of old,
In the Legends the Rabbins have told
Of the limitless realms of the air—
Have you read it—the marvellous story
Of Sandalphon, the Angel of Glory,
Sandalphon, the Angel of Prayer?

How, erect, at the outermost gates
Of the City Celestial he waits,
With his feet on the ladder of light,
That, crowded with angels unnumbered,
By Jacob was seen, as he slumbered
Alone in the desert at night?

The Angels of Wind and of Fire
Chant only one hymn and expire
With the song's irresistible stress;
Expire in their rapture and wonder,
As harp strings are broken asunder
By music they throb to express.

But serene in the rapturous throng,
Unmoved by the rush of the song,
With eyes unimpassioned and slow,
Among the dead angels, the deathless
Sandalphon stands listening breathless
To sounds that ascend from below—

From the spirits on earth that adore,
From the souls that entreat and implore
In the fervor and passion of prayer;
From the hearts that are broken with losses,
And weary with dragging the crosses
Too heavy for mortals to bear.

And he gathers the prayers as he stands,
And they change into flowers in his hands,
Into garlands of purple and red;
And beneath the great arch of the portal,
Through the streets of the City Immortal
Is wafted the fragrance they shed.

It is but a legend, I know—
A fable, a phantom, a show
Of the ancient Rabbinical lore;
Yet the old mediæval tradition,
The beautiful, strange superstition,
But haunts me and holds me the more.

When I look from my window at night,
And the welkin above is all white,
All throbbing and panting with stars,
Among them majestic is standing
Sandalphon the Angel, expanding
His pinions in noiseless bars.

And the legend, I feel, is a part
Of the hunger and thirst of the heart,
The frenzy and fire of the brain,
That grasps at the fruitage forbidden,
The golden pomegranates of Eden,
To quiet its fever and pain.

Progress of Protestantism in the United States.

The notion of the decline of Protestantism seems to have been adopted by some of our leading journals without a careful examination of the facts, and various remedies or explanations are offered for a condition of things that has no existence except in fancy. It is not true that Protestantism shows any signs of decadence. On the contrary, the principles of a pure religion were never so active as at the present moment, nor were the chief Protestant denominations ever more rapidly extending their influence over the great body of the people. No doubt among the wealthier and what are called the fashionable circles of Europe and America, among minds enervated by luxury and weakened by a long course of sensual indulgence, there is a tendency, as there must always be, to sink into formalism. Intellects constrained within the narrow limits of a decaying European caste, or degraded by the puerilities of its transatlantic imitators, may fall an easy prey to idle superstition, may abandon a pure faith for the lenient requirements of a lower grade of civilization. But except in this class the course of Protestantism is still onward. Some wealthy churches may have become temples of mammon. In the fierce struggle for money, in the lavish expenditure of the time, men eminent for a Christian reputation may often startle the community by a sudden revelation of their utter corruption. Protestantism never boasted its infallibility. Its chief supporters will sometimes prove unworthy of the name they bear. But this proves nothing. The true question is: What are the Protestant bodies doing for the people? How far are they overmastering the principle of evil by the agencies of education, of preaching, and of all the devices of humanitarian progress? By their fruits they are content to be known.

And here we are able to affirm that within the past ten years nearly all the Protestant bodies have shown an extraordinary increase. If we take as an example the Lutheran Church, which owes much of its progress to immigration, we find that in 1850 it numbered 1,231 churches; in 1860, 2,128; in 1870, 3,032 church organizations. In other words, in twenty years the churches of this single Protestant denomination have nearly tripled. The number of its sittings is 977,332, indicating a church connection of nearly a million of worshipers, if not one still more extensive. The Protestant Episcopal denomination is little less progressive. In 1850 it had 1,459; in 1860, 2,145; and in 1870, 2,601 church edifices or organizations. And as it is probable that the earlier returns were somewhat exaggerated compared with the more careful inquiries of the present census, the rate of its increase is probably more rapid than the record seems to show. Of the great Baptist body, which is noted for its energy and its adaptability to all classes of the people, we have a still more remarkable account. In 1850 its churches numbered 9,376; in 1860, 11,221; in 1870 its organizations were, according to the returns of the census, 14,474; according to its own records, over 17,000. Thus five thousand Baptist churches, by their own account, have sprung up within the past ten years, or at the rate of nearly one and a half a day. Five hundred Baptist congregations are formed every year. The Methodists are equally progressive, and even more numerous. They had in 1850, 13,302 churches; in 1860, 19,883; and in 1870 their organizations are given at the extraordinary number of 25,278. They too, therefore, during the past ten years must have created churches or church organizations at the rate of nearly two a day.

The idea, therefore, of any decay or even check in the progress of Protestantism among us must be at once dismissed. It advances with renewed vigor. It plants yearly fifteen hundred churches. It penetrates deep into the heart of the people. It flourishes in the new Territories of the West and in the throngs of the Eastern cities; and when we remember that each one of its church organizations is usually followed by a Sunday school, a Bible class, societies for helping the sick and poor, charitable and helpful unions of various kinds, we may easily see that Protestantism is an enormous stimulant to the practice of humanity, and to intellectual and physical improvement. Moving chiefly among the working classes, it sustains the purity of the nation. Whatever be the defects of some or even of all its members, the tendency of Protestantism is upward.

In spiritual matters the advance of Romanism is far less rapid. Notwithstanding its immense aid from foreign immigration, while the growth of Protestantism results chiefly from new conversions among the native population, the Roman Catholic Church organizations numbered, in 1870, only 4,127 to 2,550 in 1860. It is true each one of these churches attracts probably a far larger congregation than most of the Protestant, yet if we withdraw from Romanism the stimulus of immigration it would plainly make but slow progress compared to its evangelical rivals. Its whole strength lies in what it borrows from European sources; it weakens its numbers in foreign countries in order to build up its denomination here; and, should the immigration from Ireland continue with unabated vigor, it is not impossible that the Protestant population of that island may within twenty years approach very closely to the Roman Catholic. But the most remarkable and perhaps most alarming fruit of Romanism among us is the enormous increase of its wealth. Within twenty years, compared with the number of its church organizations, it has become the richest of all the denominations. Its property in that period has increased sixfold. Its value is returned in 1870 at $60,985,566; in 1850 it was but $9,256,758. The Methodist denomination is the only one that surpasses it, and no Protestant body can pretend to rival its wonderful capacity for accumulation. When we reflect that this vast property is held by the Roman Bishops, under the supervision of their European head, and that within the next ten years, if it preserve the same rate of increase, it will be nearly tripled, we must look with natural distrust upon the concentration of so vast a power in a single body or caste.

And here we encounter that dangerous trait in modern Romanism which has already excited the alarm of all sincere lovers of freedom. It is growing not as a spiritual body, to which there could be no objection, but as a political faction. Its power lies in its unity, its wealth and its strict obedience to a foreign dictator. Protestantism, as such, has no political strength nor aim. It is divided and powerless. Romanism has long united the great mass of its adherents in a struggle for secular power. The Roman Catholic vote of the city of New York, for example, was given solidly for Tweed and Sweeny because they acted as its instruments. They helped it to large sums of money from the public funds; they aided it in building up a throng of Roman Catholic schools. Tammany Hall has long been a Catholic club. The chief political aim of Romanism at present is to destroy the American system of education; what its further aims may be it is not difficult to conceive; and that the majority of the people will be forced for their own preservation to meet it as a political party, irrespective of all theological grounds of controversy, is a necessary consequence of its own imprudence.—Harper's Weekly.

Martyrdom of Huss.

After suffering untold hardships in prison for six months, Huss was finally accorded a hearing before the council. On the fifth and seventh of June, 1415, he was brought before that body to say what he could in behalf of himself and his doctrines. But no sooner had the reformer risen to speak than the whole assembly broke out in invective and clamor, so that it was impossible for him to be heard. The council acted as if it were a menagerie of wild beasts rather than a body of Christian teachers. And when once, during a lull in the storm, he was heard appealing to Christ as the ready helper of the afflicted and the distressed, he was met by a shower of jeers and mockery from the whole council.

Many were the influences brought to bear upon Huss to induce him to recant. To friends and foes he had but one reply: "I cannot do that which would imperil the loss of my soul." Huss' final appearance before the council was on the sixth of July, on which he was publicly condemned for heresy, and ordered to be deposed and degraded from the priesthood in the presence of the synod. The ceremony of degradation was as follows: He was first clothed in the usual priestly robes, instead of his prison garments, and the cup was placed in his hand. Then the Bishops appointed to the duty of degrading him took from him the cup, saying: "O thou accursed Judas! behold we take from thee this chalice, in which the blood of Jesus Christ for the redemption of the world is offered." Huss answered: "But I have all hope and confidence in my God and Savior that he will never take from me the cup of salvation, and I abide firm in my belief that, aided by his grace, I shall this day drink thereof in his kingdom."

As they proceeded to strip him of the remaining symbols of the priestly office, accompanying the removal of each with awful curses, Huss said: "All these insults I can endure, undisturbed and calm, for the name and truth of Jesus Christ."

Last of all they placed upon his head a paper cap, conical at the bottom and three-sided upward, with frightful figures of demons painted on its sides, and the word "heresiarch" distinctly written in large characters. Huss looked calmly upon the hideous crown, and quietly said: "My Lord Jesus Christ deigned to bear for wretched me a far rougher and weightier crown of thorns."

He was then given over into the hands of the executioners who were commanded to burn him with his clothes and all that belonged to him, "even to his knife and his purse."

The martyrdom took place upon a meadow outside the city. The reformer was fastened to the stake by seven wet cords about his body, and an iron chain around his neck. His hands were bound behind his back, two piles of fagots were placed about his bare feet, and bundles of straw were put round the stake, reaching upward as high as his neck. When everything was thus made ready, the Emperor sent once more to make a final effort to induce the martyr to recant. But Huss replied to the messenger from the midst of the fagots in a clear, loud voice, calling God to witness his innocency of the falsehoods charged against him, and his willingness to seal by his death the truth of what he had taught. The flames were then kindled, and amid the smoke and blaze Huss was heard engaged in prayer. Twice the words were heard: "O Christ! thou Son of the living God, have mercy upon me!" Again he was heard indistinctly, then he bowed his head in the flames. His spirit had passed out of the presence of his persecutors into the presence of his Lord.

The Modern Roman.

The Roman is frugal; he wastes nothing. When he kills even a chicken he saves the blood and makes it into puddings. Goldfinches, tomtits and little fishes about half an inch long are not neglected as useless, but are collected in sufficient quantities to furnish a meal. The taste for devouring these miserable fry is nothing new in that locality. "Augustus Cæsar," says Suetonius, "secundarium parvæ et minutæ piscieulos maxime oppetebat," was particularly fond of household or brown bread and very tiny little fishes. The discovery of whitebait in the Thames has inoculated the British with similar tastes. The Roman applies to a useful purpose that which the poorest Englishman would consider as offal, and would throw upon a dunghill with contempt and disgust.

It is seriously affirmed that cats occasionally form part of his diet. He certainly does allow dog-fish, otters and the repulsive cuttle-fish to enter into his bill of fare. He eats with relish the lowest description of food; roasted chestnuts during their season are his daily bread. In summer, large, coarse-looking gourds, baked till they are soft, and in winter the seeds which are washed from them furnish a considerable article of consumption. Woodpeckers, magpies, jays, hawks, owls and other birds of prey, tortoises, every fungus that can be gathered which is not poisonous, thistle-roots, dandelion, shoots of the hop-plant and wild asparagus, do not want for purchasers in the Roman markets. Prejudice alone, and not reason, prevents us from following the Roman example in this respect.

He is independent in his habits, particularly when belonging to the middle or lower classes of society, and wants but little assistance from others. He can cook his own dinner, fetch his own wine from the shop, arrange his own room and mend his own clothes. He is always a much better manager and housekeeper than his wife, who generally seems conscious of her inferiority, and intrusts all domestic arrangements to her lord and master. It is quite common in Rome, on the morning of a holiday, to see a party of men assembled, on some sunny bank in a retired situation, darning their stockings, patching their coats, and performing for themselves those sundry repairs which other men of their class would insist upon having done by their wives.

He is civil, good-natured and obliging. He is accustomed to an intercourse with strangers, and, thinking himself to a certain degree their superior, is amused, not annoyed, by their oddities. He was trained to gentlemanly habits while we were yet painted savages. He still bears marks of this historical fact, and still considers us as in some degree barbarians. If you turn into a wine-shop or eating-house in Rome among the lowest of the people, you will never be hustled or robbed or kicked out, as under similar circumstances might possibly be your fate in London. On the contrary, you will rather be assisted to get anything you may want, and will neither be received nor dismissed with anything but politeness. If in the market-place you stop to stare at the costume of a peasant, he will not be offended at your curiosity, or attack you with abuse, but will give you a smile, and perhaps a bow, and will cast a glance of inquiry at your costume in return. If you halt at a stall to examine some unknown article, and ask its name, the owner may laugh perhaps at your ignorance, but will always do his best to explain the title and properties of the object of your admiration.—English Exchange.

WOMEN AMONG THE JEWS.—The existence from early times among the Jews of an order of women who renounced the usual joys and privileges of the family state, to devote themselves to religious and charitable duties, is asserted on good authority. Walter Scott, a learned authority as to antiquities, and who seldom made a representation without examination, makes Rebecca, in Ivanhoe, declare to Rowena that from earliest times such an order of women had existed among her people, and to them she purposes to belong. What especially strikes us in this story is the same heroic and lofty spirit in this young girl that we have remarked in Miriam and Deborah. The Jewish women felt themselves a vital part of the nation, and might be said to have been the very nerves of national feeling. Any one of them was ready to be sacrificed for her country.—Mrs. Stowe, in the Christian Union.

ALWAYS avoid the company in which you would be willing to tell a coarse jest, because for you it is a demoralizing company. Grossness is never harmonious; profanity is never admirable; and if your manner and speech once begin to ravel out upon that edge, all their manliness and charm are in danger.

The Best Hope of the Intemperate.

Years ago a distinguished advocate of temperance, who had spent many years in the work, and whose long experience gave great weight to his opinion, publicly declared that "he had never known a confirmed drunkard—to be entirely reclaimed—except by the grace of God." Temporary amendment was not unusual, but final and complete emancipation from this evil was only secured when there was an evident change of heart as well as of outward conduct. Extended observation in many places and for long periods of time, by candid witnesses, confirms this view. Habits are tyrannical. Alcoholic disease requires medical treatment. But the moral and religious difficulties of intemperance demand a sovereign cure which shall go down to the roots of the dreadful thing. Appetite, depraved by excess and restrained for a time, often overpowers resolution, vows and pledges, like a stream that has been dammed up and then swelled by a great rain until it overflows its banks and breaks down the barrier. Reformed inebriates know what it is to fight this fiend, which rages within at the very sight or smell of liquor with demoniac fury. It is just here that ordinary restraints give way, moral sentiment is powerless, and only the preserving grace of God in the heart is mightier than the foe.

As a rule, we believe that no men are more thoroughly convinced of their own inability to deliver and to keep themselves in the evil day than the hapless victims of intemperance who are trying to reform. They need to have this truth kept before them, with kindly encouragements to seek help from him who is "mighty to save and almighty to redeem" them. We have known some very striking cases of recovery, whose thoroughness and permanence can be attributed only to the power of religious principle, after all other attempts at reformation had failed. Indeed this article has been prepared in the light of just such an example, with the hope that it may meet the eyes of some unfortunate drunkard, and of Christian friends who are trying to help a helpless one out of the ruin into which he has been plunged. Inebriate asylums are doing a wonderful work by the various methods of treating their patients. But medicine, regimen, seclusion from the outer world for a time, mental diversion, and all the other resources of professional experience, are comparatively inefficient without those moral and religious safeguards which experience has proved to be essential to a perfect cure.—Christian Intelligencer.

THE SIZE AND MODEL OF THE ARK.—A writer in the National Gazette discusses this subject at length, taking both the Bible account and that recently discovered in Assyria for a basis. He says that, reckoning the cubit at eighteen inches, the ark was four hundred and fifty feet long, seventy-five feet wide, and forty-five feet deep, and would register about fifteen thousand tons if measured as a sailing ship, or about twelve thousand tons if measured as a steamer, by British rules. It was thus smaller than the Great Eastern. It had three decks, and was divided into numerous compartments by longitudinal and transverse bulkheads, for the safety and order of its occupants. It was built of Gopher wood, a species of evergreen timber resembling the pine in length and strength of trunk, and the white cedar in lightness. In model, says the writer, it was all that a great carrier should be, chest-like, with lines straight and angles clear, but the bottom and top were elliptical in outline, presenting convexity to the earth and the sky. After giving the dimensions and the mode of construction of the several parts, this authority tells us, as if he were equally certain on this point, that the ark "is now in a good state of preservation, but lying under an eternal mantle of snow, hundreds of feet deep, at an altitude of seventeen thousand five hundred feet above the level of the sea. Ever since the flood dried up the climate of Armenia has been colder, and snow always covers the top of Ararat, rendering it impossible for any of Noah's descendants to get up and find the ark."

WHAT AN OLD MAN HAS NOTICED. I have noticed that all men are honest when they are watched.

I have noticed that silks, broadcloths and jewels are often bought with other people's money.

I have noticed that whatever is is right, with a few exceptions—the left eye, the left leg and the left side of a plum pudding.

I have noticed that the prayer of the selfish man is: "Forgive us our debts," while he makes everybody who owes him pay to the utmost farthing.

I have noticed that he who thinks every man a rogue is very certain to see one when he shaves himself, and he ought, in mercy to his neighbor, to surrender the rascal to justice.

I have noticed that money is the fool's wisdom, the knave's reputation, the poor man's desire, the covetous man's ambition, and the idol of all.

I have noticed that all men speak well of all men's virtues when they are dead, and that tombstones are marked with the epitaphs of the good and virtuous. Is there any particular cemetery where the bad men are buried?

A GALLOWSTOWN lady recently requested her husband to go to the dressmaker and inform her that she (his wife) had changed her mind, and would have the watered silk made up, instead of the poplin, and that "if she thinks it would look better with bias flounces without puffing, and box-plaited beyond the equator, which should be gathered in hemstitched gudgeons up and down the seams, with a gusset stitched between, she can make it up in that way, instead of fluting the bobbinet insertion and piercing out with point applique, as I suggested yesterday." The man is now a raving maniac.

Religious Intelligence.

THE English New Testament revisers are at work upon the fifteenth chapter of the Acts of the Apostles.

BY THE last will of Mr. Roberts, deceased, his property in Canton, consisting of a chapel and residence, valued at some $2,500 or $3,000, is bequeathed in trust to the senior missionary of this mission and his successors.

THIS is the way Congregational ministers are paid in Vermont. Only about one-third of the churches pay their ministers promptly; 65 pay from $400 to $650; 38 pay $1,000 or more; 13 not more than $500; 25 $500 or less; 43 less than $800.

THE question is already raised in India in regard to donating the public revenues of the temples to the interests of popular education. The native Christians are reminded, by one of the leading journals, of their right to a portion of the vast sums now devoted to mosques, monasteries and temples.

A WRITER in the Northern Christian Advocate says for every 750 persons in New York city there is at least one weekly prayer meeting, besides a number of daily meetings. The City Mission and Tract Society and the Young Men's Christian Association furnish more than 1,000 weekly prayer meetings in that city.

IN WEST TENNESSEE there is a sect of professing Christians known as Thomasites, whose distinguishing belief is the annihilation of the wicked after Christ shall make his second advent to reign over the earth a thousand years. This second coming they believe will take place in 1880 or 1881. They are an offshoot from the Campbellites or Disciples.

IT TAKES about two months and a half to get through with the list of annual meetings of the English missionary societies. Twenty years ago but little more than a fortnight was required for the purpose; and only about eighty years ago there were no meetings of the kind at all, for there were no missionary societies, and no interest in the salvation of the heathen.

THE English Primitive Methodists propose to establish a mission in Fernando Po, and take the island under their spiritual supervision. This is at the request of its principal chief, and £300 have already been bequeathed by a gentleman, just deceased, for the object. Unfortunately the climate of Fernando Po is too trying for any white man to remain there safely very long at a time.

THE Statistical Gazette of Geneva publishes the following: "In 17 cantons of Switzerland there still remain 33 convents of men, and 45 of women; total, 78. The number of monks is 546, and of nuns 2,020. Of the monks 422 are fathers, 28 novices and 91 lay brothers; 1,181 of the nuns are choir sisters, 135 lay sisters and 85 novices. These 78 convents possess 22,645,915f. worth of property.

THE Waldensian Church Conference, held in Florence about the first of May, found great encouragement in the efforts and success of Rev. J. R. McDougall, who has purchased, for $10,000, a suppressed Roman Catholic church and monastery for the use of the Sante Croci schools and the Free Church of that city. It is a very favorable locality, and when fitted up will supply a need long felt among the Waldensians there.

THE committee of benevolence and finance of the Presbyterian General Assembly recommended the appropriation for the coming year of $600,000 for foreign missions, $350,000 for home missions, $75,000 for publication, $82,000 for sustentation, $75,000 for freedmen, $120,000 for church erection and $90,000 for ministerial support; making an aggregate of $1,500,000. The present missionary debt of the church is $125,000.

EARLY in their work Calcutta missionaries became anxious to reach the sailors upon the Ganges river, and one Sabbath a Bethel service was arranged on board a ship in the stream. The project proved successful, and it was not long before a large two-masted pinnace was purchased and fitted up as a floating chapel, Dr. Carey, then venerable with years, preaching at the opening service. These meetings have continued ever since, and nearly all the missionaries in Calcutta have united to sustain them.

AT THE various religious anniversaries held in London during the month of May the following sums were reported as having been contributed during the year to the various benevolent societies: British and Foreign Bible Society, $944,485; to the principal foreign missionary societies, $3,100,285; to the Colonial Jewish and other missions, $632,885; to home missions, $1,526,655; to religious educational societies, $317,335; miscellaneous, $758,805; total, $7,280,150. This is a noble testimony to the liberality of British Christians.

THE patriarch of Constantinople has written a letter to the Rev. L. G. Hatherley, of Wolverhampton, an English clergyman who has joined the Greek Church, forbidding him to attempt to make proselytes from the English Church. His holiness says: "It would be no pleasure to us even if ten or twenty members of the English Church were to join our church. This is not what we seek. We desire, in response to the Christian feelings expressed toward us by the authorities of the English Church, to restore that fraternal intercourse which once existed." The patriarch sets the churches an example of Christian comity which some of those who are wont to characterize him as a "nominal Christian" might well copy.—Independent.

ST. MARK'S METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH is the title of the first church for colored people in New York which we have had since the formal withdrawal of our colored brethren, many years ago. On the twenty-second ultimo this church, in Thirty-fifth street, near Broadway, held the second anniversary, and made a happy showing, after two years of earnest endeavor. Commencing with a membership of 87 women and one man, they now number 130 members, with 134 Sunday school scholars. St. Mark's is one of two flourishing missions to the colored people under the care of the New York Church Extension Society.—Western Christian Advocate.

BRAZIL has taken an important step toward enfranchising itself from the spiritual tyranny of the Church of Rome. The last mail from Rio Janeiro brings the interesting intelligence that the Brazilian Council of State has decided that hereafter papal bulls must have the placet of the government before they can be promulgated, and that sentences of excommunication are without civil effect in the Brazils. Now is the time for the Protestant world to bend its energies for the distribution of the Bible in Brazil, by means of which that priest-ridden people may be thoroughly educated in the "liberty wherewith Christ hath made us free."

THE London Missionary Society sent six new missionaries abroad the past year. There are now 40 missionary-students in training under the direction of this society, 12 of whom will be sent abroad the coming year, one-half of the number going to India and China. The society, which has labored for several years with the special design of multiplying the number of native pastors, now employs over 100 natives who have the care of churches or act as missionaries. Rev. W. Murray, who has returned to New Guinea, to watch over the new mission at Cape York, was accompanied by 13 native missionaries. The Moffat Institution, among the Bechuanas of South Africa, has been commenced, under the care of Rev. J. Mackenzie, for the purpose of training native evangelists and pastors.

IN THE sudden death of the Bishop of Utrecht, at Cologne, the Old Catholics in Europe have met with a serious loss, especially at this critical moment when he was looked up to as their ecclesiastical head in their conflict with the dogmas of the papal supremacy and infallibility. The archbishop had been taking part in the recent Conference at Cologne, and was about to give the Old Catholics of Germany a valid constitution by the consecration of Prof. Reinkens as their bishop. Although but a small community, numbering 30 churches and 5,000 members, together with the lesser Sees of Harlem and Deventer, the See of Utrecht has for more than a century and a half been practically independent of Rome, though acknowledging the leading doctrines of the papacy, and the Old Catholic party look to it for their ministerial orders and the validity of their sacraments.

THE Supreme Court of Ohio has recently decided what is known as the "Cincinnati Bible case." The Board of Education of Cincinnati had prohibited the reading of the Bible in the schools, and the Superior Court of that city enjoined the prohibition. This injunction has now been reversed by the Supreme Court, which has dismissed the action, and has permitted the resolution prohibiting the Bible to stand. The question whether boards of education may lawfully require the reading of the Bible in school is not touched by this decision. It is only settled that they may lawfully forbid it. The courts may also decide that the boards have power to require it, if they deem it wise; that the local authorities elected by the people have entire control of the exercises of the schools, and may introduce or exclude what they will. If they act unjustly or unwisely the remedy is in the hands of the people, who have the power to remove them from office.

AT THE late annual meeting of the London Presbytery of the United Presbyterian Church the Rev. Dr. Fraser, representing the English Presbyterian Church, reported the missions of that church in China. The income of these missions last year was $15,000. Their missionaries at present in China number 13, three of whom are doctors of medicine. With these are associated 30 or 50 other laborers. The districts occupied are Amoy, Swatow and Formosa. At Amoy and Swatow there are several well-organized congregations, which already are becoming self-supporting. In Formosa during the last year 250 adult heathen have been baptized, and the missionaries are only prevented from multiplying stations in every direction by the paucity of their numbers. At Amoy there are about 500 native communicants, 350 at Swatow and 800 at Formosa—making a total of about 1,600. At the late meeting of the synod at Newcastle the special complaint was not want of money to carry on the work, but a want of men to respond to the call for missionaries.

THE new government of France is managing to restrict the liberties of Protestants and to throw the sword into the scale in behalf of the Ultramontanes. In Lyons the prefect has drawn up some new regulations for the purpose of subjecting "civil burials"—that is, burials without the assistance of a priest—to certain humiliating conditions. Two pastors connected with the Evangelical Society, who preach in twenty-nine different places, were arraigned for the crime of holding unauthorized meetings. They had petitioned for authorization, and even had the permission of the prefect; yet they were fined, and if they repeat the offense will be imprisoned. Dr. DePressensé, who is a member of the Assembly, defended them with great power, and the fine was made merely nominal; but it was inflicted, nevertheless, and the principle involved in the judgment is that no religious service held without the permission of the Council of State is lawful. This Council of State, which is composed of thirteen rigid Ultramontanes, has not yet granted a single permission. Dr. DePressensé, with five other members of the Assembly, has asked for a law to repeal this regulation by which the Council of State succeeds in abolishing every semblance of liberty; but it is likely that the proposition will be smothered in committee and will never be permitted to reach the House. This is the way in which this new government undertakes to establish "order" in France.—Independent.

Privileges and Blessings.

It is easier to perform the most onerous duties, and to suffer the sharpest pain for Christ, than to receive the blessings which he brings to us. It is the believer's privilege to be without carefulness, and all would like so to be, but there are few who allow themselves so to rest in God that distraction and worry are overcome. We are met with the injunction to "be careful for nothing," and yet with all our longing for tranquillity we cannot or will not accept this cup of happiness. The Savior invites us to rest, and holds the boon in his hand with all readiness and power to give it to the soul, but with all our yearnings for it we go on laboring and heavy laden, as if unwilling to drop the load which weighs us down. Does not the risen Lord come to our assemblies, and often in the still hours of the night to our restless and troubled beds, with the salutation of love and authority: "Peace be unto you?" But much as we want the blessing, and much as we would willingly give to have it, we do not open our restless hearts to let it in.

There is the command of infinite sympathy and tenderness: "Cast thy burden upon the Lord, and he shall sustain thee." If it only could be done, how great and immediate the relief, and what a translation from misery to gladness and comfort! To deny one's self, to take up the cross in some of its most rugged forms, or to toil and suffer for religion, is most cheerfully submitted to, but we shrink from accepting that which, as a privilege, God brings to us, and importunately urges upon us. It is more common to meet with Christians who have a high and conscientious standard of duty, and who are most zealous and painstaking in its performance, than it is to meet with those who have laid their every care and burden down at Jesus' feet. There are those who wait upon God, and who would go to the stake for the sake of the gospel, who have never felt "the peace of God which passeth all understanding." The hardest thing with the Christian lies not in doing or suffering, but in the simple experience of privileges and blessings.

Most conscientious, most careful and for the most part living a life of faith, the cares and anxieties of the world crowd upon him. Christ comes with his benediction of peace, the inspired word whispers, "Be careful for nothing," and the soul, bending and wearied under a load of earthly care, hears the direction: "Cast thy burden upon the Lord." But all in vain. Obstinately and persistently people cling to certain burdens and cares, and live in unrest, and refuse the help and deliverance which God not only invites but commands them to receive. We meet with these careful Christians continually who have found pardon and reconciliation, who have given up the world and sin, and who have a hope of heaven, and yet they have never been able to apply the words of privilege, "take no thought," to themselves. Neither have they reached that faith in the divine Providence and that trust in almighty goodness which makes the apostolic "be careful for nothing" a practical injunction. Perhaps they pass by these wonderful Scriptures as inexplicable or as hyperbolical, or for some exceptional people whose experience is above the ordinary course. However explained, they do not dream that the blessing is for them, or that the mention of it can possibly be for their advantage.

Here is the singular fact. We want peace, we long for deliverance from the burdens of care and anxiety which bear like mountains upon the feverish mind. God comes with the proffer to bear all for us, and Christ's words of cheer are sounding in our ears, but we still cling to our troubles and refuse to part with our fears and dark forebodings. If it were a duty, however severe, we would do it—if it were martyrdom we would not draw back; but as it is a blessing and a privilege bought for us, and urged upon us, we refuse to have it! This is among the highest and divinest of all the secrets of godliness: simply to be blest, to let in the sunshine of present peace, and to be stayed on God with a perfect trust.

Popular Amusements and Religion.

From the very beginning of the Christian era until the present time there has been a conflict between the amusements of the world and the religion of Christ. This fight is likely to continue as long as the flesh is at war with the spirit, and as long as the natural man understandeth not the things of the Spirit of God. Some of the grosser immoralities and vices connected with certain popular diversions may be evident to every considerate and fair-minded person, but how many of them are fatal to spirituality, or tend to overthrow piety, can be fully understood by those alone with whom religion is a matter of personal experience. Hence there will never be an end to this controversy about diversions until the world is all converted, or until all relapse into unbelief and sin.

The prominence of a few amusements at the present hour arrests our attention. The space occupied in the secular papers by horse-racing is remarkable. The telegrams of our morning journals are often largely made up of reports from the turf, and the emphatic items relate to the betting and the amounts lost or won. The race-course is the scene of the wildest and largest gambling, and may be regarded as chiefly tributary to this most pernicious vice. Nobody thinks now of advocating horse-racing as a means of improving the breed of horses. Once this was the argument, but the jockeying and gambling are now so prominent and overwhelming that no disguise is attempted. It is simply a popular sport, affording excitement, social pleasure, and the best of opportunities for the most fascinating kinds of gambling.

In England Parliament adjourns for the Derby race, and the turf is patronized and countenanced by the royal family and the nobility. Here in the United States horse-racing has grown to extraordinary proportions, and threatens to become a mania of universal prevalence. It is patronized, we believe, by the President, and by our Congressmen and statesmen, and is of course a most respectable and fashionable diversion. The evils inflicted upon the country and society by this most popular amusement can scarcely be estimated. As it incites and cultivates the passion for gambling, it brings in its train extravagance, dishonesty and almost every form of dissipation.

Another amusement has been perverted and is associated with this terrible propensity for betting, and also in many sections with the desecration of the Sabbath. The base ball clubs and associations have become national in their extent, and, next to horse-racing, occupy the attention of the public. In itself the game may be a manly one, athletic, and calculated to develop the muscular strength and activity. But it has been perverted and degraded, so that the general tendency is anything but favorable to morality and religion. If the young men of the country have gained in physical development by this game, they have lost that which is of far greater value. When we pass from horse-racing and ball-playing to the theater and dancing we have reached the old battle ground, where those who love the Lord Jesus Christ are ranged on one side, and those who know nothing of vital godliness are on the other.

What are people to do for amusements, and what especially are young people to do? Clearly they are not to do those things which are at war with public morals, as well as incompatible with personal piety. If these exhaust the catalogue of all recreations and of all amusements, then they are to have none. Here, perhaps, is the chance to meet and exercise the self-denial which has to come in somewhere in our Christian discipleship. But there can be social gatherings without the card-table or the dance, and there are surely many pleasures of sense and taste, as well as of thought and devotion, in which there is no tendency to vice. It is a very humiliating confession for a Christian man to make that he can find no diversions but those which are so evidently damaging to good morals and religion.

Is it not in fact the sin in these popular amusements that constitutes their chief fascination, and does not their attractiveness lie mainly in the license of passion and lust which they embrace? Those who enjoy religion will hardly be troubled on the amusement question. Their religion will afford them higher and better pleasures than any to be found in the popular sports of the day, and their piety and good sense will lead them to such diversions as Christ would approve. With many, however, this question stands as a test of their character and principles. It meets them at the outset of their religious profession, and it is the point where they are swamped in the flood of worldliness, or where they gain a victory which settles their religious fidelity once for all.

AN INGENIOUS CONTRIVANCE was the pulpit at the Seashore camp meeting this year. The venerable David Ayers, of Galveston, being unable to hear preaching in any other way, has invented a pulpit, with an apparatus attached which conveys the sound through a pipe and flexible tube to his ear. It is, in fact, a great funnel, covered with a net-work of wire, over which the book-board is placed. The book-board is sustained by a single upright piece, and can be raised or lowered to suit the convenience of the preacher. The funnel, made of tin, terminates at the floor in a pipe of about one and a half inch in diameter, which goes down to the ground and is laid a little below the surface till it reaches a post, say fifteen feet from the stand, where the flexible tube and ivory ear-piece are attached. There, sitting in his easy chair, our venerable octogenarian was enabled to hear every word, except when the preacher wandered from his place or turned his back on the congregation.

Bro. Ayers was for years unable to hear preaching until he fell upon this simple and comparatively inexpensive contrivance. When first completed and tried at St. John's church, Galveston, and the voice from the pulpit came clear and distinct to his ear after so many years of silence, we can well believe him when he tells us that he was quite overcome with gratitude and joy. Would it not be well for our large churches to have their pulpits furnished with this apparatus, for the benefit of persons of imperfect hearing, who are to be found in almost every congregation?

The pulpit we have described is a very neat walnut desk, and has been presented to the Ocean Springs church and to the camp ground. We trust that Bro. Ayers may live to attend many annual meetings on the ground with which he has thus far been so pleasantly associated. It did us all good to see him in the assembly, and to hear from his lips the ripe experience of fourscore years.

Our Missionary Organization.

BY BISHOP MARVIN.

The conviction has been long fixed in me, and is very deep, that no church can long prosper at home that does not contribute with vigor to the conquest of the nations for Christ. It is equally clear to me that our own church has never come up to the measure of its obligations in this work. We have delivered ourselves feebly upon remote and unenlightened peoples.

Indeed since the war the home work has dragged, and we have much cause of humiliation even with respect to our home missions. Of necessity I have had much to do with this business, and have been compelled to give it much thought. It is now some time since I reached the conclusion that our present missionary organization is faulty, and that in order to the best result—the highest measure of efficiency—there must be important changes.

The organization is faulty in this at least: that it establishes an arbitrary relation between the home and foreign work. In all the Conferences alike forty per cent. goes to foreign missions and sixty to the home work. This is certainly wrong, for there are some Conferences that need all the money they can raise, and more, for the home work, and others ought to give perhaps more than forty per cent. to the foreign field. True, our present plan contemplates some adjustment by appropriations made by the Parent Board to the more feeble Conferences. But the adjustment is, in the actual working of affairs, very imperfect, so that in point of fact great inequalities exist.

The present plan gives no spur to the missionary spirit. I say this with respect, especially to the foreign work, which is the missionary work proper. The plan says in effect to each Conference: "All you need think of doing for the conversion of the world is expressed in the proportion of four to six of what you do for destitute regions at home." True, it allows a Conference to do more, but it suggests this as the standard. It reminds me of the reply of a lady whose church was criticised in her presence as not looking to the production of a high degree of personal religion. "Oh," said she, "my church allows any one to be as religious as he pleases." No doubt we would allow a Conference to do all it might see fit in the way of contributions to the cause of foreign missions. But the tendency of our plan is rather to repress than to encourage. It suggests to the richest churches a low standard.

Under the present plan the Annual Conferences generally determine what may be necessary for the home field, and then add so much as will be necessary to cover the forty per cent. for the Parent Board, and assess it upon the districts, to be assessed again by the presiding elder upon the circuits and stations. Generally, if not universally, the amount assessed upon a charge is considered the maximum amount to be raised. That is the standard of obligation. If they reach that they imagine that they do a perfect work, and unfortunately the majority are content to be very imperfect, while no one thinks of going beyond perfection.

Now it may do to determine beforehand and assess the amount needed for the destitute fields at home. But for the work among the heathen there ought to be a constant, vigorous tendency toward enlargement. There is room without limit. If we should multiply labors and laborers a thousand-fold, there would still be room and demand for enlargement.

If you say there can be no great measure of enlargement, that the limit of resources in the church will not allow it, I reply, the resources of the church have not been touched. My conviction is that two-thirds of our members may be three-fourths never contribute anything to this cause, and not one in a thousand—I speak with deliberation—gives to the measure of ability and obligation. Anything like a spirit of enthusiasm would multiply the sum of contributions by ten at least.

There is scarcely a man in the church, perhaps, who could not give ten times the amount of his habitual contribution annually without damage to himself. Many, indeed, would not feel it. It is not true, then, that the church has begun to approximate the standard of duty. Our missionary organization ought to be continued with a view to quickening the faith and the sensibilities of the church. So I think and feel, and so I am constrained to speak.

But if our present organization fails to reach a satisfactory result with respect to foreign missions, it may be supposed that there is some compensating efficiency in the domestic field. Alas! no!

That I do not speak at random I give the following facts:

1. The Annual Conference Boards are, with few if any exceptions, in debt, and many of them hopelessly so.

2. In many cases appropriations only tantalize the missionary by raising expectations never to be met.

3. What is paid to the missionary comes in irregularly, and is received later, often not until the end of the year. This is humiliating to the church, vexatious to the officers of the board, and oppressive upon the missionary.

4. In the newer and poorer Conferences the amounts appropriated are altogether inadequate.

That these are sober statements of fact the Bishops, presiding elders, members of the Conference Boards of Missions and the men appointed to mission-fields all know but too well.

Can a better plan be devised?—St. Louis Christian Advocate.

Old Sermons.

We have come into possession of a curiosity in the shape of an old book of sermons in manuscript, without sign or signature other than the dates on which they were delivered. The book is strongly bound in calf, two hundred and eighty pages, beautifully written in a round, bold hand, and is only a little discolored by the action of time. It is evidently the work of an earnest Christian minister of the Church of England. The dates are 1755, 1764 and 1777, each sermon having done service at different times. How venerable seem these pages. Coëmporary with Wesley and Whitefield, they breathe a spirit of devotion and desire which elicit our admiration. These written pages have an individuality which printed pages can never make us feel. We can almost see the plain rector in his study, the quiet and calm of the holy Sabbath pervading the atmosphere, the sun glinting through the vines that shadow the window, and making diamonds of the dewdrops that yet hang trembling on the leaves. He is on his knees with this book open before him, praying that God may impress the truths which he may utter upon the hearts of the people gathered to hear them. To show his spirit we quote a few passages from a sermon on the text: "But let every man prove his own works," etc.

"When you see any of your brethren and fellow-Christians fallen into any public and notorious offense, into any sin that is scandalous and detestable in the eyes of men, do not severely censure 'em and triumph in their misfortune; do not exalt yourselves with pride and self-conceit on this account that you have not been so unhappy as to sin as they have done. But rather pity 'em, and endeavor by all possible means to recover 'em from the melancholy state in which they lie, from those sad falls and fallings to which they have been exposed; carefully remembering that if God's grace leave you to your own strength, and you be not particularly watchful against the snares, your cunning enemy will be apt to lay in your way, you yourselves may fall in as scandalous a manner as these your brethren have done.

"But how apt men are to become conceited of themselves on this account, because they imagine themselves to be free from some of those notorious vices which they see others commit, our apostle implies in this verse: 'For, if a man think of himself that he is something when he is nothing, he deceiveth himself.' After which we are taught how to act in such a case, what method we are to take in order to avoid this misfortune which cannot but be attended with bad effects. And that is not to judge of ourselves and the state of our souls by comparing ourselves with other persons whom we fancy to be greater sinners than we are, and therefore entertaining a good opinion of ourselves because we do not seem so extravagantly wicked as they are; but we should rather, by a strict and impartial examination into our own hearts and lives, inquire and try not whether we are better than other vicious Christians, but whether we have behaved ourselves in time past as the gospel of Christ requires of us, in order to be absolved at the last day and made partakers of God's heavenly kingdom. This is what is more than intimated in the words of our text."

The following passage has the ring of old times in it—times when men were not afraid to tell of the terrors of the law:

"The punishment of impenitent offenders in a future state shall be more or less tolerable according as their sins have been greater or less in this life; but the least degree of it will indeed be unutterable and no wise to be conceived but by those that feel it. What a melancholy consideration it is, then, for a man to reflect that he shall be cast into everlasting burnings, with that only comfort, that his punishment will be somewhat lighter than that which will be inflicted on some other persons, when it may be asserted of those that suffer least in those dismal regions that good had it been for them if they had never been born."—Pacific Methodist.

DR. T. O. SUMMERS, JR., in Notes by the Way, in the Nashville Christian Advocate, has a word about Baltimore. He says:

On Sunday, July 27, I heard the Rev. John Hannon, late of Montgomery, Alabama, preach in his church—Trinity, Baltimore—one of the most original, trenchant and incisive sermons I have ever listened to. His text was: "Praise ye the Lord; for his mercy endureth forever." It was full of "likes," and indeed his power of illustration is marvelous. I was introduced to the Rev. Dr. Baird, editor of the Episcopal Methodist, whom I found in delicate health. He was going to camp meeting to recuperate. The camp meeting near Baltimore is a great institution, and if you see empty churches on Sunday you would be very far from right in supposing that their religion is dead—it is only activating. The Southern Church here needs more attention and support. Our brethren are on the circumference where the centrifugal force is very strong, and every now and then a member flies off into the attractive influence of some other orb. Baltimore has been accustomed to a very high order of ecclesiastical privileges, and I tell you it will not do for the Southern Church to bring up the rear. They need a resident Bishop. I just mention these little points by the way. My opinion in such matters of course amounts to nothing, but I speak the voice of the people.

BISHOP FOSTER IN NORWAY AND SWEDEN.—Bishop Foster, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, has visited the missions in Norway and Sweden, and has seen the wonderful work of God there. The Bishop writes:

"By the blessing of God I this day close up my visit to these Northern countries, and start for the Conferences of Germany and Switzerland. My visit has been one of great labor, but exceeding interest. I cannot undertake to write a full or even meager account of the many things I will have to communicate when I return, but I cannot refrain from saying a few things. The work of God in Sweden and Norway is wonderful; it is difficult to credit my eyes and ears, so great are my surprise and joy. Truly the morning has come. Such crowds of worshipers, such eager listeners, such fervor and zeal, I have not witnessed for many years. God is manifestly at work among the people. I have been constrained time and again to praise him for the wonders I behold. The work is also evidently improving in Denmark. The new superintendent is working earnestly and, by the testimony of all, successfully."

WE TAKE the following report of a revival in Atlanta, Georgia, from the last Southern Christian Advocate:

Mr. Editor: A revival meeting of great interest progresses at Trinity church. Thirty-six members have been added on profession of faith, and nine others having joined just before the meeting commenced, make forty-five accessions. Before this communication is published many others, it is hoped, will offer themselves for membership. This church has enjoyed great prosperity. One hundred and ten members have been added during this year by certificate and on profession of faith. Revival meetings at Evans' chapel and St. Paul's church, of similar interest to that which Trinity now enjoys, have just closed. Payne's chapel is also in a state of revival, with abundant promise of a great refreshing, and we are looking forward with confidence to the crowning of all at Wesley chapel. Pray for us.

CLEMENT A. EVANS.

THE REV. DR. WINFIELD, in a report to Dr. Young, says: "Eight hundred acres of land and $2,500 in endowment notes for the Vanderbilt University within two weeks. I am still working ahead. Send me a large quantity of blanks, deeds, etc. I hope to have a good report at Memphis."

Well done for Arkansas and the indomitable doctor! He is working "ahead"—sure enough; and this is not his first report. As early as May he had secured $3,000 in endowment notes.

If these things are done in the green tree, what will be done in the dry? The adage hardly fits—as we see since writing it—but we will not cancel it. We mean just this: If he has done so well in the dog-days, what will he do in the bright, bracing, beautiful days of autumn, which will soon come round?—Nashville Christian Advocate.

DR. FITZGERALD, writing to the Pacific Methodist, August 5, says:

Pacific Methodist College opened for the present term on the thirty-first ultimo most auspiciously. Number of students already in attendance, one hundred and thirty-six. Number at the end of the first week last year, seventy-five. Gain this year, sixty-one. This is encouraging.—Should the gain for the whole year be in the same proportion, my prophecy of three hundred students will be fulfilled.

The faculty seem wide awake and ready for work. The president, quick, sharp, earnest; Prof. Smyth, true as a die and steady as a clock; Prof. Hardy, always lively and genial, whether imparting a lesson in school or "reciting" outside; Prof. King, as ever the earnest student and efficient instructor; Prof. Zellner, full of "the concord of sweet sounds," like a musical bee busy in extracting and imparting sweetness; Prof. Shakspeare, showing in his department of delineating natural objects by drawing something of the genius displayed by his more illustrious namesake in portraying the passions of the human soul; Miss Northcutt, moving in lady-like grace and teacher-like dignity among the bright little folks in the primary department; the entire faculty at their posts, prepared to sustain the reputations they have made.

THE Baltimore Episcopal Methodist of the sixteenth speaks of the Wesley Grove camp meeting, then in progress near Baltimore, in high terms. We quote as follows:

This camp meeting is like all other camp meetings, only there is a little more of it—more tents, more people and more preachers.

With reference to the preachers the distinguishing fact is the presence and ministrations of Bishop Marvin. We were so circumstanced that we could not be present until Sabbath, but we learn that the Bishop preached every day, and he is reported to have preached with universal acceptability.

At eleven o'clock on Sunday morning the Bishop took for his text John xii, 23-25. He had an immense congregation before him.

Dr. Edwards, of Richmond, preached at night a solemn and impressive sermon on the general judgment.

President Arbogast is on the ground and will no doubt preach during the meeting.

The camp meeting is an interesting one, and promises cheering results.

A LIBERAL BEQUEST.—Says the Nashville Christian Advocate:

Colonel Thomas Martin, of Pulaski, Tennessee, left several benevolent legacies, among them $30,000 in Tennessee six per cent. bonds, the interest of which is to be used by the official board of our church in Pulaski for the support of an institution for female education. He also, we are informed, ordered by his will $3,000 to be paid in this behalf. His son-in-law and executor, Judge Spofford, has been prompt to carry out the provisions of the will. A board of trustees has been appointed, of which Governor Brown is chairman. Thirty acres of ground, a most eligible site for the Martin Institute, has been purchased in the suburbs of Pulaski, and an architect is engaged upon a plan of buildings.

The citizens of the town who were favored by the long and useful life of Colonel Martin, and now by his generous bequest, are raising an additional sum of $15,000 or $20,000 to put up and equip the buildings.

ATTENTION IS CALLED to the card of Mansfield Female College. This institution is the property of the Louisiana Annual Conference, and has superior advantages for the education of young ladies. President Stuart has labored long and faithfully at his responsible post, and commands the respect and confidence of all. The college, as a Conference school, has peculiar claims upon our people, and should receive a large patronage. Mansfield is one of the pleasantest of our inland towns—has good society, and is a healthful location. We trust the coming session will open with a full attendance of students.

VERONA FEMALE COLLEGE, Verona, Mississippi, has from its organization steadily increased in popular favor. Its last session was eminently successful, ten young ladies graduating at the commencement in June. The president, Rev. Dr. T. C. Wier, is well and favorably known as a most accomplished educator. The location is in an excellent community and in a healthy region. For particulars our readers are referred to the advertisement in this week's issue.

WE HAVE RECEIVED the circular of Homer College, Louisiana, for 1873-4. President Borden is laboring hard, and, we trust, successfully, to make this institution one of the best. Let the friends of education rally to his support. The scholastic year begins on the third Monday of September.

WE OMITTED, in our notice of the camp meeting, the name of Mr. Christian Gerding, one of the trustees, who was present and exceedingly helpful in the many and onerous duties which devolved upon the board.

REV. JOHN MATHEWS, of the Felicity Street church, left this city on Friday, the fifteenth, for a trip of rest and recuperation. He expects to be absent about six weeks.

BY AN advertisement of the book agent it will be seen that the price of our hymn-book is to be reduced on the first of September.

The Great Camp Meeting.

The editor of the Richmond Christian Advocate, Rev. Dr. Bennett, writing from Prospect, Prince Edward, the seat of the Lynchburg District Conference, relates the following:

While at this meeting we had the privilege of visiting the site of the great camp meeting held in 1814, under the direction of Rev. John Early, at that time presiding elder of the Meherrin district. The ground of the old camp is not far from the present church, and was admirably suited to the purpose. We find Bro. Davis, a member of the church at Prospect, to act as our cicerone on the occasion, and, with a number of brethren, we examined the memorable spot. On a venerable oak we saw the remains of the book-board still imbedded in the solid wood, which had grown over and almost covered the remains of the pulpit from which the fathers of Methodism thundered forth their message to the listening thousands before them. Bro. Richard Pollard, of Lynchburg, secured a small fragment of the book-board, which, with a hickory cane cut from the ground once covered by the altar, he intends to present to Bishop Early. Here, we are told, nearly one thousand souls were converted; and at one time during the meeting it is said that five hundred persons were seen kneeling at once as penitents. The meeting is known as the great camp meeting.

We have heard an incident of this meeting which is well worth preserving. It is authentic, as it was related only a few days since by the venerable Bishop Early to Rev. E. N. S. Biogg. On Tuesday of the meeting, after a sermon by Mr. Early, among other penitents a young lady presented herself at the altar. In a few moments a young man entered the altar, with horsewhip in hand, and, seizing the young lady, who was his sister, took her away. On Friday following, while Mr. Early was in the midst of his sermon, a young man rushed up to the stand, and, catching hold of the preacher's coat, cried out: "Stop, sir, stop, sir; pray for me, pray for me." The minister paused, and, looking him in the face, said: "No, sir, no, sir; go and bring that young lady back you took from the altar, and we will pray for you." He left, and in a few moments after reappeared leading the young lady to the pulpit, and again asked the preacher to pray for him. "No, sir," said Mr. Early, "not here; go and kneel down in the dust in the altar, and then we will pray for you." They did so, and soon both were happily converted.

This is but a sample of the scenes that were often witnessed at the camp meetings in the olden times.

MINNA STREET CHURCH, SAN FRANCISCO.—Knowing, says the Pacific Methodist, the deep interest felt by the Southern Methodist community of the Pacific coast in the church which is their representative in this great metropolis, we are inclined to keep them posted in the movement of affairs here.

Minna Street has been sold. The old church, which has been hallowed by toil and anxiety, by joy and rejoicing in the Lord, has gone into the possession of our brethren of the Christian Church. While the little band who have worshiped in its walls feel sad at the thought of being strangers to its shrine, there is a comfort in the knowledge that it still will resound with the teachings of the gospel of Christ—that its use has not been diverted.

Our sale was advantageous. And now we will give some idea of the purposes of the board of trustees for their future movement:

1. They do not intend to be involved in debt.

2. They will not act hastily either in the location of the house they intend to build or in the character of the building. Their intention is to act with reference to the good of the whole church on the coast, and not with reference to their own individual prejudices or comfort.

3. They have reason to believe that the entire church is so much interested in their plans as to render them valuable assistance, and they will wait patiently for the evidences of this interest.

PROF. REINKENS, the missionary Bishop of the Old Catholics, is said to be a man in the prime of life, and possesses a sympathetic nature which attracts the most lukewarm to him. The goodness of his heart and the spotless purity of his life cannot be gainsaid by the most virulent of the Ultramontane sheets. In addition to this evangelical purity of character, he is a man of deep theological and historical learning, which he handles with inexhaustible vigor and zeal for the cause of his church.

GOD'S CARE.—Two little girls were walking homeward one moonlight evening. I overheard one of them say: "Sister Annie, it don't make any difference how fast we walk, the moon keeps up with us every step of the way; it don't move at all, and yet it is always going along with us." So it is with the dear God in heaven: though he seems far away, he is keeping step with us always in the march of life.

REV. WILLIAM G. CROSS, of the Baltimore Conference, Methodist Episcopal Church South, died suddenly, near Leesburg, Virginia, August 4, of disease of the heart.

A HOT LUNCH—fire-crackers.

JUST AS IT SHOULD BE.—Many of our correspondents are kind enough to keep their book and ADVOCATE business separate. They never write about the business of the two on the same sheet. Although they may inclose the two letters in the same envelop, they are dated, signed and addressed separately, and distinct from each other. This enables us to attend more promptly to each. When the business is mixed the book-keeper of one department must contest himself to wait till it has passed through the other department—order filled, goods shipped and letter answered—before the business of his department can be attended to; and as the book-keepers and clerks of the two branches of business are separate, and file their letters separately, it must be apparent to every man of reflection that much perplexity results from writing about the business of both on the same page. When money is remitted it should be distinctly stated what for; and if for two or more purposes, how much for each. Write nothing in business letters except that which has reference to business.

THE WEEKLY WATCHMAN, LITTLE ROCK, ARKANSAS.—Under contract with E. R. MR. E. E. F. ROSS, our resident advertising agent, is now on a brief tour through the West and North, and we commend him to the attention of our patrons, and shall be thankful for courtesies extended to him. They are assured that Mr. Ross has no other business, but devotes his entire time to the paper, and is entitled to all the consideration of one of its business corps.

WE INVITE the attention of our readers to the advertisement of the Portland Packing Company. They furnish an analysis of the Yarmouth sugar corn, which proves the great nutritive qualities of the grain. Preserved in hermetically-sealed cans, it can be kept for years without injury, and places a nourishing article of food within reach of all.

WE CALL ATTENTION to the advertisement, in another column, of the St. Julian Hotel, Portland, Maine. It is centrally located on the most frequented thoroughfare in Portland. Guests have the privilege of being entertained on the European or American plan, as they may prefer.

THE SYMPTOMS of Liver Complaint are a bitter or bad taste in the mouth; pain in the back, sides or joints, often mistaken for Rheumatism; sour stomach; loss of appetite; bowels alternately costive and lax; headache; loss of memory, with a painful sensation of having failed to do some thing which ought to have been done; debility; low spirits; a thick, yellow appearance of the skin and eyes; a dry cough, often mistaken for Consumption. Sometimes many of these symptoms attend the disease, at others very few; but the Liver, the largest organ in the body, is generally the seat of the disease, and, if not regulated in time, great suffering, wretchedness, and death, will ensue. FROM A RECENT ANALYSIS BY Prof. W. O. Atwater, of Yale College, the following table will show the chemical composition of YARMOUTH SUGAR CORN:

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| Albuminoids | 12.17 | Sugar | 13.10 |
| Gum | 5.21 | Starch | 55.82 |
| Fat | 8.59 | Cellulose | 2.95 |
| Ash | 2.12 | | |

It will be seen that the Albuminoids (albumen, gluten, casein, etc.) constitute nearly thirteen per cent. These, says Youmans, "are the flesh-forming principles—the true elements of nutrition."

It is particularly valuable to all requiring a highly nutritious and at the same time easily assimilated diet, and hence is used as an article of daily consumption in climates which occasion rapid waste of the system. "Almost all Asiatics, Africans and aboriginal Americans use it as their chief nourishment." Lewis Frontier, in his work on Vegetable Diets.

In Hermetically-sealed YARMOUTH SUGAR CORN all the nutritive qualities of the grain are preserved. The grain is cut from the cob and placed in the canisters with the rich juices (or milk) which exude from it, and is then sealed air-tight and the canister subjected to steam heat, which coagulates the albumen. In this condition it will keep for years. It will be seen by this that all the nutritive properties of the grain are preserved, and the most nourishing article of food in the domain of nature placed within the reach of all.

EAST MISSISSIPPI FEMALE COLLEGE,

A Chartered Literary Institution under the Auspices of the M. E. Church South,

Located at Meridian, Mississippi.

ANNOUNCEMENT.

The annual term of 1873-4 will open on TUESDAY, September 2, 1873. It will be divided into two sessions of twenty weeks each. Comfortable conveniences for boarding in the college building will be furnished and supervised by the president. The Board of Trustees claim to have made ample arrangements for the Literary, Scientific, Ornamental and Musical departments of the college, by the election of competent and experienced teachers for the various departments, and thus facilities for thorough and liberal education in the East Mississippi Female College may no more than be equaled by the best of other similar institutions. Our college is recommended to public consideration with candor and with confidence of a successful career. We hope to see its interests and influence widen and deepen, under continued and steady prosperity, and it is apprehended that young ladies who now place their names upon the roll of this institution will be pleased in coming years by recognizing in their Alma Mater a living and honored success of educational enterprise.

BOARDING.

Boarders engaged for the whole term will be charged $160, $80 of which must be paid at the opening of each session.

Those engaged for one session will be charged $90, $60 of which must be paid at the beginning of the session. Those engaged for a shorter or an indefinite time will be charged $20 per month, to be paid quarterly in advance.

Extra charges will be made for washing and lights. Each boarder must furnish two sheets, one blanket and two towels. Expected printed regulations will be given each boarder, giving her directions and restrictions respecting their family and social relations and practices.

In all cases of sickness, resulting in the removal of boarders from the college, advance payments will be promptly refunded. No pains will be spared to render each boarder comfortable and happy. Their treatment will be parental, and influences of strict propriety and refinement will be continually brought to bear upon all their habits.

Our college is in its infancy. The enterprise has been recognized by the Mississippi Conference as meeting a demand for educational facilities in east Mississippi. In the judgment of the church and Conference, Meridian is the proper place for the institution. The location is healthy, access is easy, society is of the right type, and almost every consideration strengthens the judgment of the board and Conference in locating the college at this place. Since this institution is under the supervision of the church there is no hesitancy in urging earnest co-operation on the part of the ministry in the surrounding country. Our appeal is earnest. We propose to place the standard of instruction high, that they who graduate here may prove themselves worthy of honors conferred, and thereby honor themselves, the college and the world. Address J. W. ADKISSON, au21 3m President.

It is an institution where pupils will find a safe and pleasant home, surrounded with the purest influences and a religious atmosphere.

VIRGINIA FEMALE INSTITUTE,

STAUNTON, VIRGINIA

Rev. R. H. Phillips, A. M., Principal.

Assisted by a full corps of Experienced Officers.

The Twenty-eighth annual session will commence SEPTEMBER 16, 1873.

The location is confessedly salubrious and beautiful. The buildings are spacious, elegant and comfortably furnished. The grounds (four acres) have extensive walks and shade trees.

The course of study is full, the standard of scholarship is high, and the classes under the care of experienced graduates of our best institutions.

The Department of Music is under the care of seven professors and teachers, and its facilities are seldom equaled and nowhere excelled. Twenty-five first-class instruments are in use.

French and German are taught by natives, and success in this department has been most satisfactory.

The terms are remarkably low for the advantages. Pupils represented fifteen States during the last term.

From Gen. R. E. Lee and Other Patrons.

The undersigned have had daughters educated at the Virginia Female Institute, in Staunton, Virginia, under the care of Rev. R. H. Phillips. They therefore know it to be an admirably-conducted and superior institution for young ladies, and they cordially recommend it to favor even beyond its most extensive patronage.

GEN. R. E. LEE, W. and L. U.
GEN. F. H. SMITH, V. M. I.
GEN. WM. N. PENDLETON, Lexington, Virginia.

From Hon. R. W. Walker, of Alabama.

Providence placed in my way a circular of your institution, and a two years' residence of my daughter in your family has given the unqualified cause for gratitude.

From (Hon.) Mrs. A. T. Dupuy, of West Virginia.

I have prayed that your life might be spared to educate my youngest daughter—the fifth we have had under your care.

From Col. R. C. Vinery, of Georgia.

To select a school for my daughter I personally inspected the most eminent institutions, even as far north as New York, and finally fixed upon yours. Her success justifies my choice.

From Hon. William Ballard Preston.

Committing my third daughter to your care, I thereby express my increased confidence, for I confess, as a Virginian, I am proud of your institution.

From Gov. John Letcher, of Virginia.

* * * From my own personal knowledge of the school, I cordially commend it as one of the very best female schools, within my knowledge, in the Southern States.

THAT BOY.

BY HEBBIE COOPER.

Is the house turned topsy turvy?
Does it ring from street to roof?
Will the racket still continue,
Spite of all your mild reproof?
Are you often in a flutter?
Are you sometimes thrilled with joy?
Then I have my grave suspicions
That you have at home—that Boy.

Are the walls and tables hammered?
Are your nerves and ink upset?
Have two eyes, so bright and roguish,
Made you every care forget?
Have your garden-beds a prowler,
Who delights but to destroy?
These are well-known indications
That you have at home—that Boy.

Have you seen him playing circus?
With his head upon the mat,
And his heels in mid-air twinkling—
For his audience, the cat?
Do you ever stop to listen,
When his merry pranks annoy—
Listen to a voice that whispers:
You were once just like—that Boy?

Have you heard of broken windows,
And with noisily to blame?
Have you seen a trowserid urchin,
Quite unconscious of the same?
Do you love a teasing mixture
Of perplexity and joy?
You may have a dozen daughters,
But I know you've got—that Boy.

A Story for the Little Folks.

BY HATTIE E. STEVENS PRESSY.

LITTLE HARRY'S CONFESSION.

One lovely June morning, after the dew was dried from the grass, little Harry Ernstine's mother kissed his chubby cheek, gave him a loving caress, and told him he might go out on the greensward and rock on his new hobby-horse. Harry caught his hat, and, pressing it over his flaxen curls, started on a keen run for the little spot he termed his play-ground. Before he was half way there he met his cousin, little Charlie Grey, who was anxious to join him in the morning's sport.

"You ride and I'll make him go," said Charlie, as they caught sight of the elegant little bay pony, with its long yellow main and tail, standing up so grand on its bright red rockers. Harry jumped on its back, and for a few moments sat very quietly, while Charlie flourished the whip over its head and told it to "get up" as fast as ever it could. But the gay-looking little animal only rocked back and forth, never budging an inch ahead. At this Harry soon became angry, and, snatching the whip from Charlie, pelted the unconscious animal with all his might, blaming his father because he did not buy him a real live pony that would kick up his heels and trot along at great speed. Then he jumped from its back and gave it a severe blow with a large stick, which made a great gash in its side. The ill-treated pony made not the least complaint, which enraged Harry still the more, and the naughty boy lay down on the grass and cried and kicked at the pony in a way that shocked his little cousin.

When Harry was at the height of his tantrum who should make her appearance but Aunt Sibyl, the one of all others he most dreaded to see at such times, for her manner toward him was of a kind that awakened every particle of shame within him. This time she took the same course she had on similar occasions. Going to him gently as he lay on the ground, crying and rolling about, she gave him a couple of peaches, which were very large and ripe, and then, sitting down beside him and tenderly raising his curly head into her lap, she said, oh! so kindly: "My dear little Harry, I have come on purpose to tell you a story."

Harry now stopped crying and looked up into his auntie's face with a smile.

"You know I have before now told you I once lived in the great city of New York. After I had been there a couple of years I was taken sick, and as I could not afford to pay a physician for coming to see me at my humble home, I was taken to one of the city hospitals, where the sick are taken care of by paying as their means will allow. I was put into a room or ward, as it was called, where there were twenty-five sick people, each having a single bed with curtains around it. There were also two other wards in the hospital—one where the sicker people were, and the other for children. Poor little things they were, with crooked backs and lame limbs. How much they would have liked to be able to run and jump like my little Harry and Charlie here!"

"Did they ever get mad and act as Harry does?" asked Charlie with much gravity.

Harry hung his head, but Aunt Sibyl, without appearing to notice it, proceeded.

"I seldom saw one of them angry, Charlie. They were the most cheerful set of children I ever saw. There were about sixty of them together, and many of them had to wear braces on their backs and splints on their limbs and take bitter medicines, but they seemed to bear it patiently.

"Now I will tell you about the little well boy who came there with his mother. She was put into the ward with the very sick patients, where no children were allowed; for she was sick with a fever, and could not bear the least noise. And what do you think they did with her little boy, Fraukie?"

"Why they put him with the rest of the children," Charlie wisely replied.

"No; they gave him a little bed in a corner of the ward where I was. When he was brought in some of the cross, fidgety ones fretted themselves nearly to death, for they thought he would be noisy and make them more nervous than they were before. Somehow I did not feel so. I loved him from the first moment I saw him. Not because he was such a bright-looking, handsome little fellow altogether, but for the same reason that I love you, Harry and Charlie, and because God has told us to love one another. I pitied him too, poor little Frankie; for what was there in such a place as that to make him happy? He had no playthings but a broken-headed doll and an old pewter cup. He was told by the nurses he must be very still in playing with these, and that as soon as he became the least bit noisy he would be taken to the dining-room and shut up in a dark closet. Being a healthy child, he of course wanted to exercise his lungs and limbs as well as other boys, but this pleasure was not allowed him. He would sometimes forget himself, and perhaps start and run across the floor, stumping as hard as his little feet had the power of doing. For all such acts of disobedience an hour in the dark closet and perhaps a severe whipping was the result.

"I would call him to my bedside, once in a while, and pet him as I do other little boys and girls who are so dear to me; but the nurses were angry with me for it, and so were some of the sick people. They said I would spoil him if I continued to make so much of him; so I was obliged to do as the rest did, except that I never scolded him. I thought him a very good little boy, but if you had heard some of them talk—those who had no love for little children—you might have believed Frankie was one of the worst of boys. But, Harry, before I give you time to say whether you would have agreed with those people or not in calling Frankie a naughty boy, I want to ask you if you think you would have done any better than Frankie did; without papa or mamma to love, or any little boys to play with, and no toys except an old doll and pewter cup?"

Harry dropped his eyes and said nothing, but I think he trembled a little for fear that auntie would discover the cruel wound he had inflicted on the inoffensive animal, and perhaps speak to his parents about it. She did not appear to notice it, however, although she saw the deed when it was done, for she was standing behind a big maple watching Harry at the time. Charlie looked knowingly at Aunt Sibyl, and was about to pass some remark, but she motioned him to keep silence, and then said, as her story was told, she must leave them. So, after kissing both, she stepped into the house to see Harry's mother. Finding Mr. and Mrs. Ernstine alone in their sitting-room, she hastened to tell them of the unhappy state of temper in which she had found their little boy that morning. The parents were deeply pained, and a consultation arose respecting the proper course to be pursued with the little criminal. Aunt Sibyl's plan was that the parents should, in Harry's presence, appear ignorant of his offense, treating him just as if nothing had happened. By such a course she was sure he would make a full confession of his naughtiness before he slept. And Aunt Sibyl was right. He did not enter the house until nearly dinner-time, when he curled himself up on one end of the sofa, and looked like one of the unhappiest little boys in the world. His mamma patted his head and said: "I suppose my little boy is very tired, driving his new pony, which is probably spry and nimble. But did not Charlie help you, darling? I saw him coming as you left the house."

Harry's chin quivered, and he looked ready to cry as he faintly replied: "Yes, mamma."

"Well, cheer up, and we will have some dinner now. See! papa is already seated at the table."

"I don't want any dinner, mamma."

"Why, Harry, I should think you would be hungry after playing so hard. You are not going to be like your pony—live without eating—are you?"

Another allusion to the pony was more than Harry could bear, and he began now to cry in earnest.

"Why what can ail you, Harry?" asked both his parents in a breath.

"Oh! I have been very naughty, papa and mamma. I got very angry with my little pony just because he wouldn't go faster, and I cut a great gash in his side. I guess I killed him if he ever was the least bit alive. I did not think I was so naughty till Aunt Sibyl told me how happy I ought to be when I have such a nice mamma and papa, and everything so nice to play with. And then she told me about a little Frankie who had nothing to make him happy, but he was a great deal better boy than I."

True, you have been naughty, Harry, but we will excuse you now that you have come and told us what you have done; and if you will kneel down and ask God to forgive you, and plead with him to give you strength to overcome your naughty temper, I think you will be quite happy again," said Mr. Ernstine.

Harry immediately knelt down beside the sofa and sobbingly prayed.

Then Mr. and Mrs. Ernstine, who were both kneeling beside Harry, prayed for their little boy in words still more eloquent than his. After this, with God's help, Harry became one of the best of boys. And when he grew up to be a man what do you think he became? Why a minister!

To-day he is laboring with the heathen in India. And how it rejoices the hearts of his parents and friends, among whom is the now aged Aunt Sibyl, to learn of the good he is doing!—New York Methodist.

Thoughts for the Month.

FALL CROPS.

Plans and preparations for these should be made immediately. If these involve plowing it should be borne in mind that the ground is not often in condition for the plow at this season of the year, and all things should be arranged to take advantage of every rain. Plows, double and single-trees, gear, all should be ready, that a start may be made after a rain without a moment's delay. One of the greatest difficulties in the way of manuring with green crops is the dry weather of our autumns, and the consequent impenetrability of the soil to the plow. Whenever, therefore, the latter is softened by a rain no time should be lost to start the plows. Turnip and barley patches are to be broken up, wheat and oat fields are to be turned over, pea-vines are to be turned under. He is fortunate who succeeds in getting all these things done in good season.

FALL SOWINGS

of all kinds, except wheat, should begin just as soon as the danger of excessive drought is over—from the middle of August to the middle of September. Fall oats were badly winter-killed this year; spring oats have been unusually fine. It will be unwise to conclude from this that fall oats won't do. Our own experience, and the best information we can get from all quarters, is that fall oats are the most certain crop of the two, and especially is this true if they are planted on rich land, or if well fertilized. A plant well fed can resist cold, just as an animal well fed can do.

Another safeguard against cold is to sow in drills and cover the seed in such a manner as to fill the drills in part only, so that the young plants may come up in trenches below the general surface, and have dirt gradually thrown upon them by the freezes. This may be accomplished by running furrows with a scooter, as close together as can be done without filling each other, putting oats and fertilizers in these, and covering by running a light harrow or brush across the furrows. Cotton-seed, Peruvian guano, or sulphate of ammonia with superphosphate, are the best fertilizers for small grain, where stable manure cannot be had.

SOILING CROPS FOR EARLY SPRING.

An excellent succession is rye, barley, wheat and oats. They come on in the order named. The rye, barley and oats should be sown next month. Wheat may be sown a month later. One acre thoroughly rich of either of them is worth a dozen of common land. On the latter they will shoot up slowly, you will not be able to get a cutting until late in the spring, and once cut your patience will be exhausted before you get another. On the rich land the rye and barley will be ready for the binder in February, and will hasten to meet you when you come for a second cutting. Southern Cultivator.

The Olive-Tree.

The olive abounds in Palestine, and grows throughout the south of Europe. It thrives best in warm and sunny situations, and prefers a rocky soil. It is of slow growth, and lives to an immense age, bearing fruit as long as there is a living fragment of the tree remaining. It attains a height of about thirty feet. The leaves are slender, of a grayish green, like those of some willows, and enduring through the winter. The flowers are of a pale yellow in the bud, but when opened white, with a yellow center. They are fore-cleft, of small size, but produced in the most lavish abundance. The olive is propagated almost entirely by cuttings taken from the sprouts and branches of mature trees at the time of pruning. The cuttings are generally from ten to fifteen inches long, and from half an inch to three or four inches thick; the thickest are the best. These are placed in a perpendicular position in a bed of good soil, six, eight or ten inches apart, then tops level with the surface. The earth is pressed closely around them, and their ends slightly covered to protect them from the drying influence of the sun. Here they remain throwing out leaves and branches until April or May, when, with as little disturbance of the roots as possible, they are taken up, and, after being trimmed to a single sprout, are set out in the orchard, in rows about twenty-five feet apart each way. The ground between the trees may be cultivated for several years, with little or no detriment to the young trees. The tree at five years of age returns a slight recompense for care; and at seven an orchard should afford an average yield of about twenty gallons of berries to a tree. If there are seventy trees to an acre there should be obtained from it one thousand four hundred gallons of berries. From twenty gallons of berries may be extracted three gallons of oil; and, if properly manufactured, olive oil will command $4 to $5 a gallon at wholesale.—California Exchange.

CHEAP VINEGAR.—I take a quantity of common Irish potatoes and wash them until they are thoroughly clean, and then place them in a large vessel and boil them until done. I now drain off carefully the water that I cooked them in, straining it, if necessary, in order to remove every particle of the potato. Then I put this potato-water into a jug or keg, which I place near the stove, or in some place where it will be kept warm, and add one pound of sugar to about two and one-half gallons of the water, some hop-yeast, or a small portion of whisky. Prepared in this way, and letting it stand three or four weeks, you will have most excellent vinegar. Indeed it is the only vinegar that will preserve cucumbers cut fresh from the vines without the aid of salt.—Canada Farmer.

JUMBLES.—Three eggs, one and a half cups of sugar, one cup of butter, three tablespoonfuls of sour milk, flour to mix hard, saleratus, and after it is kneaded and rolled sift sugar over the top and bake quick.

MACHINERY, TIES, ETC.

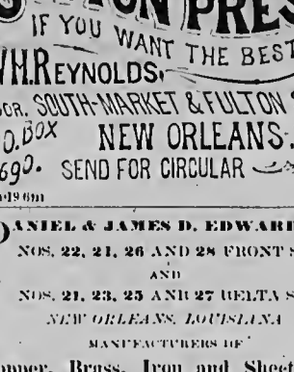
THE DUBOIS FLANGE COTTON GIN.

By the Flange the Cotton is kept in contact with the teeth on each side, until the fiber is taken from the seed, without allowing them to be taken up by the return motion of the roll, as in other Gins.

The Flange prevents hulls, stems, sticks and hard substances from being cut, consequently making a better sample out of roughly-picked cotton than other Gins.



We have sold more from this point than any agency of any other Gin for the crop of 1872-73; consequently we can furnish more and better references, and they are warranted to come up to all that is said of them.

We keep constantly on hand all sizes, from 40 to 80 SAW STANDS, left or right. Price, $5 per Saw.

ALUMNI.

Its Alumni numbers two hundred and three, and they are to be found in the most honorable and useful stations in the land.

Before selecting your school, we ask any of those knowing the college, especially our Alumni and old students, prominent in the Methodist Episcopal Church South, and the Professors of the University of Virginia, who have authorized this reference, or send directly to the undersigned for a catalogue or for any information desired.

SITUATED AT THE

CELEBRATED OCEAN SPRINGS, MISS.

This house is now open and in complete order for the reception of guests. The bathing and fishing is the best of any place on the coast, and persons seeking either health or pleasure cannot do better than to visit the Ocean Springs Hotel, where they will receive every attention during their stay at the hotel. The table will always be supplied with the delicacies of the season.

I would refer invalids seeking health to the pamphlets (to be had at the Hotel, or at Messrs. Schmidt & Zeigler's, New Orleans, Louisiana,) containing an analysis of the waters of the Springs and their wonderful cures, which are certified to by some of the most eminent physicians of our country.

Terms are more reasonable than at any of the other watering-places on the coast for the same accommodations. Liberal arrangements made with families and those wishing to remain during the season.

There are also connected with the house a Ten-Pin Alley and Billiard Saloon; also fine Croquet grounds for the guests of the house.

The proprietor has made arrangements for a Band of Music, which will be in attendance during every evening of the week, besides a fine Piano for the use of the guests of the Hotel.

Thos. Broughton, with John D. Park, of Cincinnati, says: "W. C. Hamilton & Co.—I had had the Ague for two long years, and had tried several remedies of acknowledged or pretended merit without any good result. I finally tried your preparation—KRESS FEVER TONIC. One bottle completely broke up the malady, and I am now perfectly well. I can testify that your medicine does all you claim for it; and it is only due to you that this acknowledgment should be made, especially as so many worthless chill medicines are now offered."

New Orleans Markets.

From the New Orleans Price Current.

The river is 12 feet 4 inches below high-water mark.

COTTON.—The following are the arrivals since the fifteenth instant:

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| Louisiana and Mississippi | bales | 635 |
| Mobile | | 117 |
| Total | | 1,052 |

On Saturday the movement was confined to a few buyers, but as they came forward with a fair degree of spirit the sales summed up 750 bales, at steady prices for the lower grades, which were in some request, while the better qualities ruled in favor of buyers, without any quotable falling off. A good style of good ordinary sold at 15¼c., a higher style at 15¾c., strict good ordinary as low as 16c., low middling at 17¾c., strict low middling at 18¼c., and Liverpool middling as low as 19¼c. On Monday the demand was more limited, and the sales were confined to 350 bales, mostly of mixed lists, which could hardly be used as a basis for quotations. Factors, however, were free sellers, and the general tendency was to still easier prices, but nothing transpired to indicate any quotable variation. On Tuesday the market opened with only a limited inquiry, but the demand subsequently manifested more vitality, and the sales embraced 425 bales, at prices indicating no quotable change, but a tendency in favor of buyers. Strict low middling sold at 18¾c., high style do. at 18¾c., and strict low middling to middling at the same.

The above makes an aggregate for the past three days of 1,525 bales, against 1,400 for the corresponding time last week and 2,400 the week before.

The receipts of new crop this season now sum up 5 bales, including 1 from Texas, against 287 to the corresponding date last year, including 110 from Texas.

The receipts proper at this port since the first of September, exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas, are 1,237,471 bales, against 934,133 bales to the same date last year, and the increase in the receipts at all the ports up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 877,186 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same date last year, there is an increase of 441,722 to Great Britain, of 89,181 to France, and of 181,369 to other foreign ports. We quote:

| | |
|---|---|
| Inferior | 9 @ 9¼ |
| Low ordinary | 9¾ @ 10¼ |
| Ordinary | 11¾ @ 14 |
| Good ordinary | 14¾ @ 16¾ |

| Middling | @ 18¾ |

CHRISTIAN KEENER, P. C.

THERE will be a camp meeting at Lewis' Creek, Alabama, beginning on Friday morning before the third Sunday in September. Ministers of the gospel will be properly provided for, and are cordially invited to attend. The meeting is to be self-supporting—that is, each family goes in covered wagon or provided with tent, and provides for itself. All except ministers who attend must provide for themselves unless they have special invitations. The camp ground is near Slade's station, on the Mobile and Alabama Grand Trunk railroad. Conveyance for the preachers will be at the station on Thursday.

WILLIAM H. MORRIS, P. C.

CAMP MEETING.—The camp meeting on Big Creek, fifteen miles north of Alexandria, begins on Wednesday, October 1. Preachers are invited, and will be provided for. Others must come prepared to take care of themselves. Corn will be on hand at a moderate price.

Ministers and members of the Methodist Church, with all others who wish to be benefited by the exercises of the occasion, are respectfully and cordially invited to be present. We sincerely hope that Methodist preachers will not wait for further invitation. We cannot think of the names of all whom we would be glad to have with us, and may therefore fail to invite each one personally. But, brethren, come to the help of the Lord. Come and help us with your prayers and exhortations.

The camp ground is within the corporate limits of Crystal Springs one mile from the depot. Conveyance at hand at a trifling expense, and ample boarding and sleeping accommodations for all who come.

It is understood, of course, that the camp meeting is upon the self-sustaining plan of last year, which is, indeed, the only practicable plan. The Camp Meeting Association expect, of course, to provide accommodations, free of charge, to all ministers coming to labor with us. We hope to make accommodating terms with the railroads for excursion tickets.

Extensive improvements are being made in the boarding department, and the furniture put down as low as it can be afforded.

Let everybody come to the Crystal Springs camp meeting—singers, preachers and all praying people especially.

All who desire to erect tents will please speak soon. The ground is being rapidly taken up.

News of the Week.

DOMESTIC.

DALLAS, TEXAS, Aug. 20.—At the caucus last evening Governor Davis developed such strength that the opposition became totally demoralized, and he was unanimously nominated at the first ballot.

This morning R. H. Taylor was nominated for Lieutenant Governor, J. W. Thomas for Comptroller, A. T. Monroe for Treasurer, Jacob Knechler for Land Commissioner, A. B. Norton for Superintendent of Education.

The ticket is considered a fair one, but if the Democrats unite it can be easily defeated.

The negro element was entirely ignored in the platform.

An immediate removal of all the political disabilities is recommended.

The convention adjourned to-night.

BOSTON, Aug. 21.—A number of gentlemen, mostly grain merchants, met at Young's hotel yesterday and organized the Boston Grange, Order of Patrons of Husbandry. John B. Bartlett was elected master, and Herbert Radcliffe secretary.

The full number of charter members was obtained.

It is proposed to form granges in all the grain ports on the Atlantic coast.

The Boston Journal of Commerce was made the official organ of the New England granges.

DETROIT, Aug. 21.—Great fires are raging in the woods of Iosco county, Michigan, near the villages of East Tawas and Tawas City. The latter place is in some danger.

NEW YORK, Aug. 22.—The second company of Mennons, from Crimea, came by the Holsatia yesterday. It includes eight families, fifty persons. Like their predecessors, they are well to do, bringing about $100,000 in gold. They start to-day for Elkhart, Indiana.

The building on Fourth avenue, owned by A. T. Stewart, erected for a hotel for single and widowed women, where they could live cheaply, will be devoted to other purposes, it being deemed impossible to establish a house such as Mr. Stewart proposed.

MEMPHIS, Aug. 22.—The first bale of new cotton from Canton, Mississippi, was sold at auction to-day by Ford, Porter & Co. It weighed three hundred and eighty pounds, was classed middling, and brought forty-one cents per pound.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 23.—The military commission over the Modoc prisoners—Captain Jack, Schonchin, Black Jim, Boston Charley, Barncho, alias One-Eyed Jim, and Sloluck—arraigned on two charges, viz.: First, murder in violation of the laws of war, and second, with assault to kill, in violation of the laws of war, have found the captives guilty on all the charges and specifications. They therefore sentenced them—Captain Jack, Schonchin, Black Jim, Boston Charley, Barncho, alias One-Eyed Jim, and Sloluck—to be hanged by the neck until they be dead, at such time and place as the proper authority shall direct, two-thirds of the commission concurring therein.

The President approves the sentences, and orders that they be carried into execution by the proper military authority, under the orders of the Secretary of War, on the third day of October, 1873.

The War Department has issued a general order enforcing the above sentences, to be executed by the commanding general, at Fort Klamath.

HELENA, ARK., Aug. 23.—The steamer George C. Wolfe blew up at St. Francis Island about two o'clock yesterday evening. Twelve persons are known to be lost and fifteen wounded. The officers were all saved, except the second engineer, who was on watch at the time of the explosion; he is missing. The lady passengers were all saved.

The spot where the steamer blew up is known to the river men as the "Grave-Yard," being the same place where the Pennsylvania and St. Nicholas blew up, and the T. L. McGill burned. The Wolfe was from Shreveport for St. Louis. Captain Henry S. Carter was commander and Joseph H. Widen clerk.

The following is a list of the lost as far as ascertained: Peter Helper, second engineer; Mr. Nelson, New York; Mr. Dawson, wife and two children, Shreveport; J. H. White, of Michigan, belonging to the Trans-Atlantic Circus, and seven colored rousters, four of whom were found and buried.

FOREIGN.

PARIS, Aug. 20.—A report from the vessel in which Henry Rochefort was shipped for New Caledonia says his fellow-convicts, considering his course treasonable to the cause of the Commune, made an attempt to lynch him. The officers of the ship were obliged to assign him quarters apart from and protected against the Communist exiles.

LISBON, Aug. 21.—The work of laying a cable from this point to Rio Janeiro has commenced.

The steamer having the wire on board set out this morning.

MADRID, Aug. 23.—The Carlists, at the instigation of the priests, burn all the records of civil marriages that they capture.

BERLIN, Aug. 23.—Dr. Falk, minister of public instruction and ecclesiastical affairs, has ordered the Roman Catholic seminary at Posen to be closed.

ALEXANDRIA, Aug. 24.—Sir William Baker, with the party which went up the Nile, arrived at Snez.

LONDON, Aug. 25.—Bombay dispatches report that destructive floods have recently afflicted the province of Agra. Thirty-five hundred of the natives' houses have been swept away by the waters. There had been some loss of life, the extent of which no estimate is yet furnished.

ALEXANDRIA, EGYPT, Aug. 25.—Sir Samuel Baker and party have reached Cairo on their return from the expedition into the interior of Africa.

VIENNA, August 25.—Of the thirty thousand medals awarded to exhibitors, four hundred go to American.

MADRID, August 26.—The report that the Carlists have left the vicinity of Bergn is confirmed by later advices.

The minister of war and several generals of the army threaten to resign if the government shall decide to commute or in any way fail to execute the death sentence which has been pronounced upon the Communist insurgents.

The Cartagena insurgents have three hundred pieces of cannon; they also have a large number of cattle and other supplies.

Six hundred insurgents who escaped from Valencia succeeded in reaching Cartagena, reinforcing the insurgent garrison.

The village of Tartella was entered and destroyed by the Carlists.

Southern Historical Convention.

At the meeting of this convention Hon. Jefferson Davis was present. A press dispatch of August 18 gives the following notice of the address and of the action of the convention:

Hon. Jefferson Davis addressed the Southern Historical Convention, in session at Montgomery White Sulphur Springs, to-day. He was introduced by Governor Letcher, and received great applause. He returned thanks for this hearty welcome to Virginia, where he felt always welcome, and whose brave men were only excelled in their deeds by the bravery and devotion of the women, whose zeal and heroism throughout the war he highly praised.

He spoke of the object of the Historical Society, and said that to write a true history it must be done by Southern men who knew the facts, and that all the material must be gathered for the purpose South, that the action of the South in the war, and the causes which brought it on, might be fairly laid before mankind. He spoke of "Old Jubal" Early as one who was ever faithful throughout the war and as being the proper man to carry out this great object.

He said: "We have been more cheated than conquered by the declarations of the Federal President, Congress and general government, for there never could have been a surrender had we anticipated what followed, and we could to-day have been free." He still had hopes of the South, he observed, because whatever the men might be, he never yet had seen a reconstructed woman, and, while the men of the day were mightier than the principles for which they had struggled, he had hoped the children who succeeded them would grow up to maintain and perpetuate them and all that we had lost.

Mr. Davis' remarks contained no sentiments of hostility to the Federal government, but evinced an earnest devotion to constitutional liberty, for which the South had struggled. He was listened to with deep interest and frequently applauded.

A resolution offered by Admiral Semmes, that his excellency President Grant be requested to permit the secretary of this society to examine all the papers of the archives of the government captured by the Federal forces from the Confederates during the war, and to make copies of such of them as he may think fit, was adopted.

The convention then adjourned, and the Historical Society met.

A resolution was adopted admitting ladies who had lost relations in the war to membership. The society then adjourned to meet in Richmond at the call of the president.

From the Work.

ST. STEPHEN'S AND WASHINGTON MISSION, ALABAMA CONFERENCE. Mr. Editor: Bro. Pelham, a local preacher on this work, commenced a meeting at Milledgeville, August 3, which continued five days. Five persons applied for church-membership. About the same number were converted. It was a time of refreshing and renewing of strength with many who had previously been converted. WM. H. MORRIS, P. C.

AUGUST 11, 1873.

REVIVAL AT BIG CANE, LOUISIANA.—Mr. Editor: Last night, August —, closed a protracted meeting of the Methodist church in this place, with the happy result of thirty-three members added to the church of Christ. The meeting was ably conducted by ministers from Opelousas and other portions of the State, together with the valuable services of the preacher in charge. The interest felt in the community upon the subject of religion was manifested by prompt and regular attendance at the church. God's power attended the word, and again and again the altar-place was filled with precious souls inquiring the way to heaven. S.

NEWTON, MISSISSIPPI.—Mr. Editor: During the past week there has been in progress a protracted meeting at our beautiful little village. As yet the result seems discouraging, there being only three accessions to the church. But the attention with which the congregation listened to the earnest appeals showed that they were not without effect, and many have resolved in their hearts not to give up seeking the "pearl of great price." I have been informed that it is the intention of their pastor to make another trial in the fall, and that he expects glorious results. May God be with him and bless his efforts. H.

AUGUST 15, 1873.

JACKSON DISTRICT, MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.—Mr. Editor: The work of grace in Jackson district, Mississippi Conference, is progressing. Since the first of July there have been, so far as I have heard from the pastors, about one hundred and twenty accessions to the church. I am not prepared to give the number of conversions, but in some cases they were equal to the number of accessions, or greater. The church is showing more spiritual life and energy. The preachers are working well, and hoping for a large harvest of souls. We pray for at least one thousand accessions in this district for the year. H. H. MONTGOMERY.

AUGUST 18, 1873.

TOOMSUBA CIRCUIT, MERIDIAN DISTRICT, MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE. Mr. Editor: We have just closed a meeting of eight days at Bethel church, on this circuit. The Lord blessed his people. Numbers of the church who had for a long time been only nominal professors were awakened to a sense of duty. Their hearts have been filled with the love of God, and new covenants have been made and promises renewed to serve the Lord. Sinners were awakened, convicted, converted, and forthwith withdrew from the world and had their names enrolled on the church-book, and became followers of the Lord Jesus Christ. Men who had grown old without making a confession of Christ were converted, and added to the church. The meeting was commenced and carried on for a few days by the pastor, James W. McLaurin. Bro. McLaurin has made a fine impression. He is attentive to his duties, fills promptly all his appointments, and is so earnest and devoted that all who know him are constrained to let their feelings go out to him in all kindness. The assisting ministers were Bros. J. C. Brogan, George Bancroft and —— Burnip. Twenty persons were added to the church during our meeting, and we all feel increased love for God and faith in the Lord Jesus Christ. We do believe and confidently trust that we may ultimately enjoy the rewards of a well-spent and a virtuous life.

Yours in hope, G.

AUGUST 19, 1873.

PINE LEVEL CIRCUIT, ALABAMA CONFERENCE.—Mr. Editor: We have held a series of meetings at five churches, which have resulted in ninety-three accessions; ten previous accessions gives us one hundred and three up to this time, and we have yet more than one hundred penitents at the altar, and the church is abundantly revived. Our communion seasons and love-feasts have been the finest it has ever been our pleasure to witness, and some of the oldest and most intelligent members of the circuit tell us they never witnessed anything like them. We have up to this time baptized about sixty infants, and will baptize as many more before the end of the year—a thing which was almost absolete on this work. We have three other churches, and a half interest in a camp meeting, from which we hope to run up our number of accessions to about two hundred. Dr. S. P. Richardson, our presiding elder, with his wise head, warm heart and strong backbone, was with us at one meeting, and did the work that no one but he could have done. Our beloved brother, C. W. Calhoun, of Union circuit, was with us four days, and preached us four of the best sermons it has been our good fortune to listen to in a long time. Our true yoke-fellow, Bro. Avent, a local minister on our circuit, was with us at two meetings. And last, Bro. Johnston, of Olustee circuit, was with us and preached for us. Besides all the above, we had a few faithful Christians, of every age, from the little girl of twelve years old up to the aged mother and father in Israel. But the best of all was, God was with us in power to bless our humble efforts and answer our prayers. To him be all the glory. Amen.

B. F. BLOW, P. C.

SUMMIT DISTRICT CONFERENCE.—Mr. Editor: Our conference convened in Summit on the tenth of July, and at this late date I think best to write you a short notice of its proceedings and of the state of things on the district. The attendance was not full, owing to the want of deep interest in church matters and the low state of our finances generally. Our elder, A. B. Nicholson, presided to the entire satisfaction of the conference.

All the important interests of the district were carefully investigated, and our deliberations were calm and pleasant.

The piety of the district was believed to be increasing, and the growth of the church, though slow, healthful and constant.

Our Sunday schools are more numerous and better attended. Our teachers of Sunday schools are more in earnest, and the instruction is directed more to the conversion and salvation of the children than formerly. We use the uniform lessons, and recommend their use to others.

Our contributions to missions are small, yet we talk about the spread of the gospel and pray for its triumph everywhere, and are giving more and more every year toward its extension.

Church-building.—There are three new churches in course of erection on the district—one at Summit, one at Amite City and one at Greensburg.

Finances.—The claim of our Bishops is the only one on the district which is fully met. The conference claim receives about sixty per cent.; missions about fifty per cent. on claim.

The salaries of preachers in charge on the district average $250. On account of the small pay received our preachers are engaged in secular pursuits to secure subsistence. This in part accounts for the slow growth of the church.

Resolutions were passed by the preachers to increase their diligence, and by the whole conference to more abundant labors. Also to secure a District Conference parsonage, and to invite our beloved brother, Joseph Nicholson, to occupy it, in his old age, free of charge.

Yours very truly, B. JONES.

TALLAHATTA, CLARKE COUNTY, ALABAMA.—Mr. Editor: Permit me a short space in your columns to tell the good news from old Clarke. We have had precious revivals all over the county. Our young and zealous pastor, W. S. Wade, closed a meeting, a few weeks ago, at Charleton's chapel, on the Choctaw Corner circuit, with the happiest results.—Twenty-nine accessions to the church, and the church greatly revived at that place. The oldest of sinners, Felix-like, trembled and came asking pardon at the altar. The services lasted nine days, and the altar was crowded with mourners until the close. Bro. Wade had the assistance of W. Gillmore, John S. Frazer, Hinchy Kelly and W. A. Rice.

The Rev. John S. Frazer closed a series of meetings at Bethel, Union and Grove Hill, with the best results. Fourteen connected themselves with the church at Bethel, nineteen at Union and thirteen at Grove Hill.

Bro. Frazer had Drs. Hunerly, Turner and H. Kelly, and W. S. Wade and W. A. Rice to help him in the good work at the above-mentioned places. I am told that for many years there has not been such rejoicing together of Christians as at the above-mentioned places. Christians of different denominations shouted together for joy, in bright anticipation of that haven of rest beyond the last river. We should all point to old Union church with emotions of pleasure, for like a pyramid (in numerical strength) she rears her head above all others in old Clarke. Yea, she has sent out her Evans, her Chapman and her Calhoun to proclaim to a dying people God's immutable and everlasting truths.

Rev. W. A. Rice held a meeting at Coffeeville for nine days, with seventeen accessions to the church, and the church greatly revived. All I heard speak of the meeting thought it would prove a failure, for it is a place where infidelity and skepticism have long held sway. Bro. Rice was assisted by Bros. Frazer, Wade, Calhoun and Kelly.

The march of Methodism is upward and onward, and I trust to God the old ship that is laden with such precious freight may never founder, but that she may ride above the crest-beaten waves of the billowy sea, until her cargo of immortal souls shall be safely housed in that haven of rest beyond the cold and turbid waters of Jordan. ## Directions for Voting for Delegates to the General Conference.

The Bishops have decided that the law regulating this election requires it to be conducted on the following plan:

The two delegates referred to in the Second Restrictive Rule are construed to be ministerial. As there must be in the General Conference an equal number of each order of delegates from each Annual Conference, it follows that the smallest Annual Conference will be entitled to four delegates, two ministerial and two lay.

The clerical members of the Annual Conference, and the lay members of the Annual Conference, added together, make up the basis of constituency to be represented in the General Conference. To ascertain the number of delegates any Annual Conference is entitled to, divide this sum of clerical and lay members by twenty-eight. This gives the number of clerical delegates; these must be elected by the clerical members of the body. There is an equal number of lay delegates who are to be elected by the lay members of the body. There are virtually two independent electoral colleges. Thus:

|---|---|
| There are in an Annual Conference clerical members | 80 |
| There are eight districts, and therefore lay members | 32 |
| Total of Conference members | 112 |

This sum, divided by twenty-eight, gives the number of clerical delegates as four. There must be an equal number of lay delegates, consequently the representation of that Annual Conference in the General Conference is eight.

As to the fraction of two-thirds, this works as follows:

| | |
|---|---|
| Clerical members of Annual Conference | 92 |
| There are ten districts, and therefore lay members | 40 |
| Total of Conference members | 132 |

This sum, divided by twenty-eight, gives a quotient of four, and a remaining fraction of twenty. This fraction, being equal to two-thirds of twenty-eight, is entitled to representation according to the Second Restrictive Rule. The delegation of such an Annual Conference would stand thus: five clerical delegates and an equal number of lay delegates—that is, ten.

A Modern Reformer.

JOSEPH ARCH AND THE ENGLISH LABORERS' UNION.

Joseph Arch, president of the English National Agricultural Laborers' Union, is expected to land in New York in a few days. His object in visiting this country is to ascertain personally the advantages it affords to emigrants of the farm laborer class, and, if satisfied, he will—according to his statements, made at a public meeting on the third of July—make arrangements to send out over two hundred thousand men. Mr. Arch will doubtless endeavor to obtain American co-operation and assistance in locating these men and their families. He will also visit the Dominion of Canada, the provinces of which already offer pecuniary assistance and other advantages to laboring emigrants from the old country.

Joseph Arch was born at Barford, a sleepy little village, some three miles from Warwick, England. He is now about forty-five years of age; he is short, of sturdy build, with the weather-beaten face and complexion so often seen among English laborers and navvies. The general expression of his face in repose is not unlike President Grant's, but when animated his face is unlike anything appertaining to the President. He has been all his life a farm laborer, is a total abstinence man, and belongs to one of the Methodist sects, of which he has been for many years a local preacher—that is, a layman who preaches in the chapel or al fresco within a certain district and without pay.

In such a school was Joseph Arch brought up, having, as he says, in his twenty-five years as a preacher walked over seven thousand miles to expound the gospel to his fellows. The commonest rudiments of education he acquired without tuition. He is entirely and thoroughly a self-educated man, educated chiefly during his later life, and brought to a knowledge of the issues of the day by the study of the newspapers. When a young man Mr. Arch felt that he and his kind were badly treated, and he rebelled against it. In a speech at Leamington, last year, he said—and his words went home to his hearers: "Men, I'll tell you what I had to do; I had a wife and two children, and one and sixpence (thirty-six cents) a day was all I was getting, working hard morning to night. I asked my master for more; he said one and sixpence a day is all I shall give you. I had sworn at the altar to love and cherish and preserve my wife, and I knew that would not keep her and the children, so I struck. I went away to work where I could get higher wages. Sometimes I could not get anything but straw to lie on, and once I slept for nights and nights on corded wood; but thought if any one was to suffer, it was not my wife and children, but myself." And so, leaving his wife and children at the Warwickshire village, Arch roamed over England, working at job or piece work, sending home all he earned to his wife, and preaching on Sundays in chapel or on village green. A strong, able, intelligent workman, a man in every way superior to his fellows, Arch in time (but with what sacrifices and self-denials who shall say) saved money sufficient to buy the freehold of his little cottage at Barford. There he settled down, working by the job for the neighboring farmers during harvest-time, and cultivating a little land which he rented. When the Warwickshire farm laborers struck they appealed to Joseph Arch, and he became their leader. The strike began in February, 1872, at Wellesbourne, a village seven miles from Warwick. The laborers there and in the surrounding hamlets turned out after demanding an increased pay of four shillings ($1) per week. Their leader was a certain John Lewis, a traveled man, who had worked in Staffordshire, the next county, and seen the operations of the Trades' Union among the iron-workers. Lewis proposed that they should form a union, but he was ignorant of the fine arts of reading and writing, and so they sent for Joe Arch, the local preacher. The Lord of the Manor of Wellesbourne is Sir Charles Mordaunt, well known to the American public through his attempt to obtain a divorce. Sir Charles called a meeting of the Warwickshire squires and parsons, and on the proposition of the Rev. Mr. Holbecke they pledged themselves not to employ any laborer belonging to or who might join the Union, and that by every means in their power they would "put it down." Sir Charles Mordaunt did his share of immediately giving notice to all the cottagers on his estate who had joined the Union that they must leave their homes; this proceeding was imitated by the Rev. H. S. Miller, vicar and land owner at Radway, a village at the foot of the historic Edge Hills. This foolish proceeding, however, attracted the sympathy and opened the pockets of the people of the neighboring town of Birmingham, the most radical borough in the kingdom. The men on strike were thus kept from starving. Joseph Arch went bravely to work, he addressed the laborers at open-air meetings throughout the neighborhood, and the Union increased in numbers. Then the stormy petrel of events, the London "special correspondent," made his appearance upon the scene; philanthropic reformers followed, foremost among whom was the Hon. Auberon Herbert, who (with his wife, Lady Florence, the daughter of an English peer) made Leamington his headquarters for some weeks, and encouraged and assisted the laborers both by voice and deed. It was on Good Friday, the twenty-ninth of March, 1872, that the first united meeting of the Warwickshire laborers was held in the Public Hall, Leamington. At this Joseph Arch presided, and was assisted by Mr. Auberon Herbert, Mr. Edward Jenkins (the author of "Ginx's Baby") and many would-be social reformers. Here, too, also came Dr. Langford, editor of a Birmingham paper, bringing with him a goodly sum of money collected in that town, several radical Birmingham manufacturers, and members of the several trades unions. These last assisted the laborers from the start, the Amalgamated Society of Engineers, the most intelligent and flourishing body of mechanics in England, sending a donation of £300. From an early hour parties of men and women marched into Leamington, lightening their muddy tramp of many miles by singing the refrain of the Union hymn:

> "The farm laborers of Warwickshire
> Have had no rise for many a year,
> Although bread often has been dear;
> But now they've formed a Union."

The associate of high-born and intelligent men and women, his name on every one's lips, praised by the Radical press, looked up to as a leader by his class—how did Joseph Arch behave then? Was it not enough to turn the heads of men of far higher standing and education? He was ever the same—simple, modest, manly, with a marvelous, well-balanced brain and glowing tongue; a strong man—strong in the possession of a good cause and a native integrity. His language was wonderfully moderate. Hear what this dangerous agitator, as the Tory squires called him, said at a meeting at Southam, advising moderation: "Do not, my friends," said he, "let one single word that is unjust, base, bad, foul or unchaste escape your lips toward any one."

After the meeting at Leamington the Union was fairly started. Joseph Arch traveled through all parts of England, organizing branches of the Union wherever he went. In two months the Union was a national one, and on the twenty-ninth and thirtieth of May, 1872, a meeting of delegates from all parts of the country was held at Leamington (which from its central position is made the headquarters of the movement.) Over this Mr. Dixon, member of Parliament for Birmingham, presided. Arch was unanimously elected president of the Union.

The movement, which at first was only a demand for a few more shillings a week, has now become one of political importance, and the laborers will demand a vote in the counties, as the artisans did in the cities. Arch at first avoided all political references. But when her majesty, through her steward, discharged the laborers on her private estates for demanding a few more shillings a week, he spoke strong words, and, even as the movement has grown, there is no doubt his ideas have advanced also, perhaps almost in spite of himself, for, being a deeply religious man, his ideas of republicanism were connected with French atheists and socialists.

The Union did not at first officially encourage emigration. Arch said: "I wish to assist a man to get a living in England, not to run away from it." Still emigration has been tried by many of these laborers. The consul general of Brazil in England early made his appearance at Leamington, and engaged the services of a young Warwickshire farmer who had failed in business. This man, Thomas Alsop, went about speaking on the advantages of Brazil, where he said he was going to form a colony. He induced many of his ignorant neighbors to accompany him, and, once lauded, he returned to England for a fresh batch of emigrants, giving glowing descriptions of the country. The unhappy fate of these emigrants was learned from certain of their number who were sent here by the Brazilian authorities, and landed at this port from the steamer Merrimac on March 20. These men, who had been to the tropics, where they were unable to work, were half starved and decimated by yellow fever, were immediately engaged from the Labor Bureau at Castle Garden at good wages, and the superintendent of emigration told the writer that "they were just the sort of men needed here, and that he could obtain situations for thousands of such if they came."

Apparently having wisely determined to encourage emigration, Mr. Arch, as the representative of such men, who even here at New York would, according to official testimony, be readily snapped up by employers, comes to visit us to see what encouragement we can give. As the leader of a powerful organization, the members of which would make valuable citizens of this country, he deserves recognition and encouragement; as a pure, unselfish, high-minded man, laboring for the good of his fellow, he at least commands our respect.—New York Tribune.

A REVOLVING signal light has been invented, to be attached to the rear of trains, by which engineers behind can tell by the speed of their rotations, as shown by the succession of different colored lights, at what rate of speed the trains are moving, and when they are at rest.

PRESIDENT ADKISSON, of East Mississippi Female College, informs us that the fall session of that institution will open on the twenty-fourth of September, and not on the second, as previously announced.

THE VILLAGE PASTOR.

BY OLIVER GOLDSMITH.

A man he was to all the country dear,
And passing rich with forty pounds a year;
Remote from towns he ran his godly race,
Nor e'er had changed, nor wished to change his place;
Unskilful he to fawn or seek for power
By doctrines fashioned to the varying hour;
Far other aims his heart had learned to prize—
More bent to raise the wretched than to rise.
His house was known to all the vagrant train;
He chid their wanderings, but relieved their pain;
The long-remembered beggar was his guest,
Whose beard descending swept his aged breast;
The ruined spendthrift, now no longer proud,
Claimed kindred there, and had his claims allowed;
The broken soldier, kindly bade to stay,
Sat by his fire and talked the night away;
Wept o'er his wounds, or tales of sorrow done,
Shouldered his crutch and showed how fields were won.
Pleased with his guests, the good man learned to glow,
And quite forgot their vices in their woe;
Careless their merits or their faults to scan,
His pity gave ere charity began.

Thus to relieve the wretched was his pride;
And e'en his failings leaned to virtue's side;
But in his duty prompt at every call,
He watched and wept, he prayed and felt for all;
And, as a bird each fond endearment tries
To tempt its new-fledged offspring to the skies,
He tried each art, reproved each dull delay,
Allured to brighter worlds, and led the way.

Beside the bed where parting life was laid,
And sorrow, guilt and pain by turns dismayed,
The reverend champion stood. At his control
Despair and anguish fled the struggling soul;
Comfort came down the trembling wretch to raise,
And his last faltering accents whispered praise.

At church, with meek and unaffected grace,
His looks adorned the venerable place;
Truth from his lips prevailed with double sway,
And fools, who came to scoff, remained to pray.
The service past, around the pious man,
With steady zeal, each honest rustic ran;
E'en children followed with endearing wile,
And plucked his gown to share the good man's smile.
His ready smile a parent's warmth expressed;
Their welfare pleased him, and their cares distressed.
To them his heart, his love, his griefs were given,
But all his serious thoughts had rest in heaven—
As some tall cliff, that lifts its awful form,
Swells from the vale, and midway leaves the storm;
Though round its breast the rolling clouds are spread,
Eternal sunshine settles on its head.

Conscience.

MR. EDITOR: There has been much said and written on conscience, and yet there are comparatively few who understand the word conscience so as to explain to us its nature and office. The question is still open: What is conscience? Conscience seems to be an internal attribute of the human soul that scrutinizes the thoughts and acts of man, and determines them to be good or evil, according to the law by which they are to be governed. Where there is no written law men are governed by the law of nature and the enlightening grace of God. "For the grace of God that bringeth salvation hath appeared to all men, teaching us that, denying ungodliness and worldly lusts, we should live soberly, righteously and godly in this present world." Now it is the office of conscience to decide whether men think and act according to the law by which they are to be governed. If they keep the law, it is the office of conscience to excuse them from guilt. But if they transgress the law, it is the office of conscience to accuse them of guilt, and they stand convicted and condemned by their own conscience of sin. This was the case with the heathen in St. Paul's day, according to his description of them in his Epistle to the Romans, third chapter. As this was the office of conscience in their case, so likewise it is the office of conscience in our case, who have the written law of God. Notwithstanding our conscience is more enlightened, by the word of God and the outpouring of the Holy Ghost, than the heathen's were, it will not do at all times to rely on as a sure and safe guide to heaven above, because our conscience may be weakened, blinded and seared by our inward and outward sins, and hence it becomes weak, blind and seared as with a hot iron, so it cannot feel and will not do to rely on. It is now an evil conscience, and does not reprove men for doing evil, because it is just like themselves. They may swear it does not reprove them, they may get drunk, commit adultery, steal, tell lies, swear to lies, break the Sabbath, gamble, dance, quarrel, fight, cheat, backbite, slander their neighbor, and commit all other kinds of sin, and their conscience does not reprove them nor condemn them. Because their evil conscience, like themselves, does not condemn them, they say it is no harm to commit the sin they so much love, and they glory in their shame by saying they have no remorse of conscience.

A good conscience, on the other hand, is always true, both as a judge and as a witness. It decides according to God's law in all cases; and hence it never decides a thing to be right that is contrary either to the spirit or letter of God's law. It cannot decide and witness a thought or act to be right that God's law declares to be wrong, because it decides, as a judge, according to God's law. It cannot decide a practice that conflicts with the spirit and letter of God's law to be right, because that would be to decide against God's holy law. It always decides according to God's law, and has not the prerogative to decide otherwise. If this be true, a conscience that decides that it is no harm to do what God forbids is an evil conscience, and not a good conscience. St. Paul had a good conscience. He says: "I have lived in all good conscience;" "I have a conscience void of offense."—Acts xxiii, 1; xxiv, 16. He also speaks of an evil conscience (Hebrews x, 22,) and of a seared conscience (First Timothy iv, 2,) and a weak conscience (First Corinthians x, 12.) Hence it is very clear, from the word of God, that our conscience may be good, it may be weak for lack of knowledge, it may be evil because of sin, and be seared as with a hot iron, so as not to feel at all. And hence it follows that a conscience that decides that it is no sin to do what God forbids is either a weak conscience, an evil conscience or a seared conscience; it is not a good conscience. As we live in the Christian dispensation in the nineteenth century, with the word of God in our hands to read, and good and learned men to expound it, it is reasonable to suppose that it is not the lack of knowledge that causes us to believe that it is no sin to transgress God's holy law, but it is an evil and seared conscience that causes us to believe it.

For illustration we will suppose a member of our church to go to a dancing party and dance, and then contend that it is no harm to dance, because his conscience does not condemn him for dancing. Does the silence of his conscience in not condemning him prove it to be right for him to dance? We answer: We think it does not; but we think his dancing proves that he has an evil conscience or a seared conscience, and therefore it does not reprove him; for the man may be laboring under a strong delusion, sent from God, "to believe a lie (that it is no harm to dance,) that he may be damned, because he will not believe the truth (that it is a sin for members of the church to dance at these dancing parties,) and takes pleasure in unrighteousness" (in the unrighteous practice of dancing with the wicked at these dancing parties.)

Now, Mr. Editor, we contend that if it is right for one member of our church to dance at these dancing parties, it is right for all to do it—Bishops, preachers, editors, members and all. And if this be so, the Methodist Church has been in error all the time, from the days of Mr. Wesley down to the present time, for refusing to tolerate dancing in the Methodist Church. But the good conscience of Mr. Wesley toward God and toward man would not allow him to tolerate dancing in the church of God, and the good conscience of all Mr. Wesley's true spiritual children will not allow them to do it, because their good conscience tells them there is no religion in it, and that it is a sin, because it is the work of the devil. Therefore it is very clear that there is such a thing as an evil conscience and such a thing as a good conscience, and that good men and women are governed by the latter, according to God's law, and that wicked men and women are governed by the former, according to their own lusts, independent of God's holy law. Good men and women make the law of God the rule to govern their conscience by, but wicked men and women make their own evil conscience the rule to govern the law of God, and for them to go by. Hence they transgress the law of God, and tell us it is no sin, because their conscience does not condemn them. They also contend that the word of God does not condemn them, because it speaks of instrumental music and dancing, and therefore it is no sin to fiddle and dance. Now we admit this premise, but we deny the conclusion. We admit that the word of God speaks of instrumental music and dancing as a religious mode of worshiping God, but it does not follow that it is no sin to fiddle and dance as a mode of worshiping the devil. If it be said we do not worship the devil when we fiddle and dance, we ask: Whom do you worship if you do not worship the devil? You do not worship God; he is not in all your thoughts nor in your hearts. You do not fiddle and dance in the name of the Lord Jesus, nor with a single eye to the glory of God and the salvation of your immortal souls, but with an eye to the lusts of the flesh and the lusts of the eye and the pride of life. Hence when you go to these fiddling and dancing parties, and participate in them, you do not worship God, as they did in ancient times, but you worship the devil by gratifying the lusts of the flesh, the lusts of the eye and the pride of life. And if this be true—and you cannot deny it and tell the truth—is it not a great sin for a member of Christ's church to worship the devil by fiddling and dancing, in these frolics of wickedness? The answer is: It is, and they ought not to do it; their conscience is evil and will not do to rely on or trust. A conscience is always evil when it pleads that it is no harm to do what the word of God and the law of his church forbid. God's word is the higher and supreme law, and not conscience.

Country Talk.

BY A LADY.

MR. EDITOR: Summer, with its burning heat, is upon us, and we find ourselves growing anxious and watchful lest our loved ones should be sick. Sickness in a home makes its hearts so sad, and is as a leaden weight upon the spirit. Already our little ones are losing their roses, and growing, we imagine, thinner and taller, and dearer to our hearts. And yet I wonder at this. Our home, which Bros. Daves, Trippett, McKee and Cravens have seen, and Bros. Carter, Harp, White, Adams, Dieffenwierth and Alexander have visited many a time, nestles deep amid the greenest, grandest oaks of God's own planting, and it would seem that the feverish rays of the burning sun could never reach it. We are usually well; and away off here on the banks of this gentle-flowing river—far from the Crescent City, with its wonders and advantages—life is sweet and fresh every morning as the dew upon the wild flowers my children gather with such delight. Our precious darlings!—they are the jewels that crown us, the vines whose tendrils gather round our hearts, the buds whose unfolding loveliness we watch with ever-increasing wonder and delight. God bless our children! how full to the brim they make our hearts and lives, that would otherwise be faded and empty. How their coming has opened up a sweet, bright vista of hope, and made the evening of life of such rich promise that, instead of dreading its approach, we reach out our arms for it as our rest. To be guides to these little immortals whom God has intrusted to our keeping, we feel, deeply feel, that we should read and study, and day by day grow wiser and better. But we have our own cooking to do, dishes to wash, house to keep neat and in order, garden to look after, chickens to attend to, and so many little household duties and cares to occupy our time and thoughts, that we find but little leisure for improvement, and we fear are fast losing our old and sweet appreciation for books. The ADVOCATE—we read every word of it, and watch for its coming as wistfully as if it was a weekly letter from home. Its editor and many of its correspondents have a place in our memory, and what they tell us we receive as bread to strengthen us in our struggle after a better life. Eagerly we search for the names of our ministers. In some mysterious way our fortunes seem linked, and our spirits rise and fall with the tidings they send us. How our sympathies go out after them in their wanderings, and our best prayer to Heaven is that every cloud that hides the light may bring a blessing!

We had a preacher and his bride to see us last week from across two rivers. We know him well, but have never heard him preach. He says he has not

"That charm in delivery—a magical art—
That thrills like a kiss from the lips to the heart."

But I know a character so pure, a spirit so humble, a life so consecrated, must be useful. His gentle wife, with her low, soft voice—so sweet, so endeared in its talking "it makes another ringing of the soul"—is, I believe, an angel that will cheerfully "follow where he leads her," and gladden with love-light and hope-light the humblest pathway in life.

But we must return to our own little world: We have a sweet anticipation for next month—we are to have at our church our first quarterly meeting for this year. May it be an occasion long to be remembered, and may the tide of religious zeal be strong enough to bear saint and sinner

"Nearer, my God, to Thee, nearer to Thee."

Our presiding elder is a man of prayer and of faith, and blessings usually attend his meetings. Our church, in spite of "wild war's deadly blast" and the rough-rolling billows of time, is well preserved—not a broken pane of glass, each blind swings on its hinges, and its plastered walls are still smooth and but little stained. We prize it as something left us of the beautiful past, and as a neighborhood we love to gather there. The oldest and best of its members are gone—those who were our guides, our examples, our models of Christian excellence: Dr. Anderson, Colonel Wailes, Mrs. Wailes, Mrs. Eliza Bowman and Mrs. Harper. These, "one by one, have crossed the river," and those that are younger and weaker are left to fill their places. Dear, buried, loved ones, though they have left us, their light still burns in our church, their influence is still felt in this community, and "in our hearts they live forever."

But I must put up my pen and paper, and return again to duty. You have been patient, Mr. Editor, to listen at all to this dull country talk. If my husband was here he would say: "It is rather vapory, darling;" but nobody expects little women to deal in solids, and this quiet talk on paper, with nobody near, has been an indulgence and a little variety to one of the editor's many admirers. Farewell. A FRIEND.

TENSAS RIVER, July, 1873.

Ministerial Support.

MR. EDITOR: This subject has been discussed in the ADVOCATE of late by several of the brethren, and each has given his views upon the matter, no doubt, in all sincerity. If their views have not been acceptable to your readers, and their style has been somewhat oriental, most surely there is no ground on this score for holding up these fellow-disciples to ridicule, even though the shafts were polished. Follies are sometimes cured by this sort of treatment, but matters of principle never. If we be brethren, the spirit of brotherhood should lead us to cast the mantle of kindness and forbearance over the small peculiarities of mental vision we perceive in others.

Neither the logic of Hamilton nor Mill furnishes a process of reasoning whereby the pains of want can be overcome, for the reason that an empty stomach comes not within the purview of logic; but it is a real want, and that want needs bread and meat to satisfy it. This may be unphilosophical, but it is native to our nature, and follows the law of our being.

Instead, therefore, of finding fault with the views of those who have discussed the question, it were a nobler way either to keep silence or point out some better method of attaining the object. That it is environed with difficulties is no more true than that its neglect by the church is a burning shame to her membership.

To quote texts of Scripture which bear upon the duty of performing this Christian obligation, nor assuming the profession of such exalted faith as to ignore the church's indifference in the matter, may not be this exhibition of the soundest wisdom; but surely there is some antidote to this evil in the membership, and therefore let us see whether the true remedy cannot be found.

We assume that true Christianity is something more than a mere belief. Fruit is the measure of a tree's worth, and it is also the test of a believer's love and appreciation of Christ.—Work must be joined with a man's faith in order to show that he has faith. He that says, "Be ye fed and clothed," and does not contribute thereto, is a self-deceived person so far as his having any Christly characteristics, and will at the judgment find himself on the left. If this be true, then it is very plain that the man or woman in whose heart true love to Jesus has found a lodgment and an abode will be ready to do for Christ. He will not require the spur of conscience to move him in the line of duty. The pastor will be relieved, in some measure, from the necessity of urging the membership to put in action the petition: "Thy kingdom come."

No close observer can fail to perceive that as a church we are lacking in the heart spirituality, insisted on by Christ, and in this want of consecration lies the hinderance to the growth of liberality. From Bishop, presiding elder and pastor comes the mournful dirge: "Finances in a deplorable condition; stewards absent from church because a plea for liberality would be presented." But when the preaching merely touched the generalities of religion the very same churches are ablaze with all the rich garments available, and the display testified clearly that the indigence and hard times, behind which shelter is taken when contribution is the subject, are conveniences rather than truths. Are not the pastors in some measure responsible for this state of things? Have they searchingly laid before their congregations the various things which go to make up a well-rounded Christian, not omitting the so delicate subject called giving? Pastors are teachers, and if they falter in putting the flock in mind of their duties they are guilty. Better by far would it be were more attention given to impressing the congregations with the need of holy living and doing than in striving to swell the numbers in our churches of those who lack the one thing needful. When we all rightly appreciate the love of Jesus, and what he has done for us, then will our substance be cheerfully given to sustain his cause. Neither ridicule nor scolding will reach the evil.

Never, Until I'm Born Again.

MR. EDITOR: Mr. Bushy was a little, short man, who stepped quick, and carried an honorable wound received at the battle of Baltimore, in the last war with England, and which he claimed entitled him to a burial with the honors of war. During my boyhood, on one occasion while at his house, the old man came in, puffing and muttering at quite a rate, which was not common for him, as he was generally on good terms with his neighbors, and seemed content with his lot in life, though not considered a special favorite of fortune. His wife, discovering his discomposure, inquired the cause. He replied rather gruffly that "old Brittle's niggers had been dogging his horses. They had jumped into his wheat-field. He had no fence around it; would never keep up his fence; was always abusing his stock; would stand it no longer; would have nothing more to do with him." The old lady gently remonstrated against his precipitate resolution. He responded emphatically: "Never, until I'm born again."

We infer from this that he was not a professor of religion. Some time after this circumstance occurred the Cumberland Presbyterians protracted a meeting, and a fine revival resulted. One day, while the altar exercises were going on as usual, Mr. Busby was sitting in the congregation quietly looking on, when all of a sudden he rose, stepped toward the aisle, as though he was going to leave the church, but on reaching the aisle he walked directly to the altar, and knelt down and engaged earnestly in prayer, paying no attention to what was going on around him. Now Mr. Brittle was a zealous Methodist, and always took an active interest in the altar exercises, though he did not keep up a good fence around his plantation. Seeing his neighbor Busby at the altar, he at once knelt by him, praying for him and giving him what instruction and encouragement was in his power. After awhile Mr. Busby felt an overpowering sense of love and peace, and, as he rose from his knees to tell it, he discovered neighbor Brittle at his side. He clasped him in his arms, and the two old men rejoiced as though they had been brothers who had not seen each other since they were school-boys. "We know that we have passed from death unto life, because we love the brethren." HERMAN.

JESUS.

Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy-laden,
And I will give you rest;*
For up above those clouds there is prepared for you an Alderon—
A home forever blest.

Blessed is the man whose transgression is forgiven!†
Blest for evermore!
Peace in his one earth, and a home at last in heaven,

HOW DRINKING CAUSES APOPLEXY.—It is the essential nature of all wines and spirits to send an increased amount of blood to the brain. The first effect of taking a glass of wine or stronger form of alcohol is to send the blood there faster than common, hence the circulation that gives the red face. It increases the activity of the brain, and it works faster, and so does the tongue. But as the blood goes to the brain faster than common, it returns faster, and no special harm results. But suppose a man keeps on drinking—the blood is sent to the brain so fast, in such large quantities, that, in order to make room for it, the arteries have to enlarge themselves; they increase in size, and in doing so they press against the more yielding flaccid veins, which carry the blood out of the brain and thus diminish the size of their pores, the result being that the blood is not only carried to the arteries of the brain faster than is natural or healthful, but it is prevented from leaving it as fast as usual; hence a double set of causes of death are in operation. Hence a man may drink enough of brandy or other spirits in a few hours, or even minutes, to bring on a fatal attack of apoplexy. This is literally being dead drunk.

ALL THE DIFFERENCE.—In the Athenæum review of the Life of Dean Alford we read that the Lord Chancellor Cranworth offered him, in 1855, a lucrative living in Cornwall, which he declined, wishing to remain in or near London, with access to libraries and the society of scholars, for the prosecution of his biblical studies. After having made up his mind not to accept the living, he went to call on Lord Cranworth to thank him. "When I asked to see his lordship the servant said his master was engaged; then I said: 'I am not come to ask for anything, but to refuse something offered.' 'O, sir, then I am sure he will see you,' was the reply."

THE Boston Unitarians, in convention assembled, declare their people to have as much dread of a contribution-box as the devil has of a cross.

Obituaries.

DIED, of consumption, in Pike county, Mississippi, on the first of August, 1873, JERRY J. BULLOCK, aged about thirty-two years. He leaves a wife and two children, and a host of friends and relatives to mourn his loss. He was a true Christian and a kind husband, and we have every reason to believe that he has gone to that better world.

MR. GEORGE H. CHILDEES was born October 5, 1833, and died July 15, 1873, aged forty years, less a few months. Absent from home on business, he was violently attacked with disease, and died suddenly and away from his relations.

We have been acquainted with him from his boyhood, and have ever regarded him as an intimate friend and a high-toned gentleman; but we know nothing of his last illness, nor of the state of his mind when called to die. Being the last surviving son of Mrs. M. Childees, it is a sad bereavement to her in her age and decline of life, and she has our warmest sympathies, and earnest prayers that she may be sustained by divine grace.

MARSHFIELD, LA., July 25, 1873.

MISS LITTIE B. ATKINSON, daughter of Robert A. and Bethsida Atkinson, was born February 14, 1851. She was converted and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church South, in Brownsville, Hinds county, Mississippi, in October, 1864, and died in Springfield, Missouri, May 12, 1873.

Miss Littie was an amiable, pious young lady. She exemplified the religion of Christ by her daily walk. Though a victim of that terrible disease, meningitis, she suffered for more than four weeks with true Christian patience, clinging earnestly to the cross. Her feet were upon the rock, and there she stood with her faith holding on to Christ till he called the sufferer home. She has but gone into the silent chamber of death to sleep till God calls his children in the resurrection morn.

TRIBUTE OF RESPECT.

Whereas, It has pleased the all-wise God, in his mysterious providence, to remove from the membership of our school and from the home of fond parents, and taken to his home above, GILMER MCCURDY, known and loved, by all who knew him, as a good scholar and obedient son; therefore, be it

Resolved, By the Sunday school of the Methodist Episcopal Church South at Lowndesboro, convened on the twenty-second of June, 1873, that although in the death of our much-beloved friend we recognize the hand of him that doeth all things well, we cannot but feel sad that one so young and promising should be so suddenly removed from among us.

Resolved, That as a further expression of our sense of loss the secretary of our school be instructed to drape in mourning the July number of our Sunday school papers.

Resolved, That we tender our heartfelt sympathy and condolence to the bereaved family in this their hour of affliction, and would direct them to that consolation which can be found only in the religion of our Lord and Savior, Jesus Christ.

GONE TO ANSWER THE MASTER'S CALL.

SARAH ELLEN BOYKIN, youngest and only remaining daughter of John and Martha Boykin, aged twenty-two years and six months, died of consumption, on the twentieth day of July, 1873, at the residence of her mother, on the Atchafalaya river.

Until the latter part of her illness, when convinced that it was useless, she seemed to cling to the hope of recovering, probably a characteristic feature of her disease; but as sleep gently solicits the foot-sore traveler, so death seemed to bring her summons, and calmly she fell asleep after the weariness and wounds that disease had wrought in her frail frame. The virtue and value of the death in Christ were seen, for she gathered those she loved about her, bade them, one by one, farewell, and showed them how the trustful child of God could die. She said she was ready—had made her peace with God, and believed the blood of Christ could save. The ties binding to earth were strong, but those to heaven stronger. But, more than this, she said finally: "I do not wish to live." Not only ready and willing, but eager, as though her spirit had caught a glimpse of the "King in his beauty;" as though, lifting up her eyes, "she saw none save Jesus only," and her soul would spread its wings, break through the narrow confines of its fleshly cage and reach its native element.

S. H. S.

SQUIRE G. SHROPSHIRE was born in Bourbon county, Kentucky, May 3, 1805. From the age of fourteen he supported and educated himself. He was converted and joined the Methodist Church, in Augusta, Kentucky, in 1827. In 1853 he experienced a great blessing, whose fruits in his life indicated it, in the judgment of others, to be that of entire sanctification, but which he never ventured to call by so bold a name. He was married, March 7, 1827, to Miss Margaret Armstrong. His residence was chiefly in New Orleans for twenty-eight years past, where he was ever prominently recognized as a pillar in the church in every sense of help and support that could be expected of him. His fortunes financially were varied, but he ever shared with the church. He served faithfully as class-leader, steward and trustee. Above all, he adorned by life and example, in speech and temper, the doctrine of Christ. As a husband and father he was the object of idolizing affection, and the testimony of wife and children to his thorough godliness is most emphatic and important.

He was in attendance from the beginning, occupying a tent with his family at the late Seashore camp meeting. At the earliest opportunity he gave in his ever ready and most pleasing testimony for Christ, and he seemed to be in the enjoyment of a constant blessing on the camp ground. On Tuesday of the meeting he was taken suddenly ill, and, returning immediately to the city, he died on Wednesday, the sixth instant, in New Orleans, in the sixty-ninth year of his age. Bearing the extreme sufferings of his illness with exemplary patience, he was more than resigned—he was calm and triumphant in death.

W. V. TUDOR.

MY MOTHER, Mrs. SUSAN MIERS, died at Cotton Valley, Macon county, Alabama, July 27, 1873. She was the daughter of Henry and Priscilla Densler, deceased, formerly of Baldwin county, Georgia, and sister of the late Rev. Thomas L. Densler, of the Alabama Conference, and Dr. Henry L. Densler, of Burnsville, Alabama. These two brothers preceded her only a few years to the spirit-world. She was born January 14, 1812, and married to my father, William Wild, in 1831, and to her surviving husband, Mr. Joseph J. Miers, November 22, 1830. Reared by pious parents, she literally began life in the service of God, and continued a consistent Christian to the end of her days. Almost in childhood she professed religion and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church; afterward the Methodist Episcopal Church South, in which she had all her children consecrated to God in baptism.

For many years she had been a great sufferer, but she bore her afflictions, though severe, with meekness and patience. Often in her letters to me she spoke of her approaching end, and always expressed herself as being ready, willing and waiting to go at the Master's bidding.

On Saturday, July 26, I was unexpectedly summoned to her dying bed (only a few days before I had received a letter written by her own hand.) Arriving just at night of the same day, we found her fast approaching the dark valley—the sweat of death had already settled upon her wrinkled brow. Though fully conscious that she was dying, the thought did not excite her in the least. We asked her many questions, to all of which she gave the clearest and most emphatic answers. Her dying testimony could not have been more satisfactory and encouraging. She died as she lived—a true Christian. On Sabbath evening, July 27, she breathed her last, and her pure spirit left its tenement of clay. Like the dying taper, or the ripe fruit as it gently drops from its parent stem, she passed away without a struggle or a groan.

W. H. WILD.

DIED, at his home in DeSoto parish, Louisiana, April 5, 1873, JOHN HOLMES, aged fifty-three years.

He was born in Oglethorpe county, Georgia. In 1840 he was married to Miss Temperance Oglivie, and moved to Louisiana in 1855. God gave them ten children, and then called the fond wife and mother to himself. One brave son, a victim of the war, preceded his mother. In 1864 he was married again, to Miss Mary Butterworth, who survives him. A more happy family, reflecting joy on all around it, has never been my fortune to meet, testifying nobly to the purity of the fountain-head: "A bitter spring cannot send forth sweet waters." His mother was left a widow, with seven children, of whom the subject of this notice was the youngest. A Christian mother's influence hallowed his orphan childhood, and ripened into good fruit the deeds of manhood. The memory of this good mother's patient toil and unwavering faith is a theme of sacred interest to all her children. Poor in this world's goods, yet abounding in the riches of the knowledge and love of God, she laid all her burden under the shelter of the cross. With an unrelaxing hold on the arm of him who has promised to be ever the friend of the widow and orphan, she nobly worked for her children, and diligently trained them in the fear of God. Her earnest, prayerful efforts were rewarded, and every child was established in the faith before she was taken from them. It is pleasant to think of the dear old mother, robed in the beauty of the angels, standing on the green banks of the crystal stream, under the cool shade of the tree of life, joyfully welcoming her children as they arrive, one by one.

When Bro. Holmes knew that his end was at hand he affectionately bade farewell to his family, and confidently, trustingly left the shores of time. His last faint whisper to his loved ones was: "Do all things right." While his breath was growing shorter, and the death-damp bedewed his brow, he testified to the presence of his Savior. Feebly and with great difficulty he whispered: "I love the Lord, and the Lord loves me. He has loved me through life and he sustains me in death."

Scarcely had he exchanged greetings with the heavenly host when he turned to welcome his youngest child, the infant girl, who was too frail and beautiful to linger from her home in the garden of God.

His large family and the community in which he lived owe a great deal to his energy, exerted for good. The field around him was thriving. The Sabbath school, under his superintendence, was very promising, and, supported by his prayers and energy, had for eighteen years been the means of great good. The church acknowledged him as one of her most efficient leaders; and yet the Father knew best. How true it is that a good man's work is never ended! Whenever a good man dies, to us he seems in the midst of usefulness in his Master's cause. The steward is often called to a reckoning before the harvest is ripe. A good steward, we are told, is only transferred to be made ruler over many things. Since "Jesus wept," we will mingle our tears over departed friends; still we mourn not as those who have no hope.

A FRIEND.

THE greatest glory is not in never falling, but in rising every time we fall.

BEAUTIFUL HANDS.

Such beautiful, beautiful hands!
They're neither white nor small,
And you, I know, would scarcely think
That they were fair at all.
I've looked on hands whose form and hue
A sculptor's dream might be,
Yet are these aged, wrinkled hands
Most beautiful to me.

Such beautiful, beautiful hands!
Though bear) were weary and sad,
These patient hands kept toiling on,
That children might be glad.
I almost weep as, looking back
To childhood's distant day,
I think how these hands rested not,
When mine were at their play.

But oh! beyond this shadow-land,
Where all is bright and fair,
I know full well those dear old hands
Will palms of victory bear;
Where crystal streams, through endless time,
Flow over golden sands,
And where the old grow young again,
I'll clasp my mother's hands.

The Walk of Faith.

BY THEODORE L. CUYLER, D. D.

No character in the Old Testament impresses me with a higher veneration than the patriarch Abraham. His title of nobility is this: he was "the friend of God." Born and reared in a land of Sabian idolatry, he was converted by the Lord in his own sovereign way, and by means of which we have no knowledge. The first thing we learn of him is the abrupt announcement of God's call to him: "Get thee out of thy country, and from thy kindred and from thy father's house, unto a land that I shall show thee."

Abraham obeys. He asks no questions. No map of the strange country is shown him and no guide-book is given him. By faith he sets out with his household caravan and follows whither the heavenly Hand conducts him. "He went out, not knowing whither he went."

In this one beautiful line I read the spiritual history of every child of faith. This line reveals the deepest lesson that a human heart can learn—the lesson of obedient trust in God. It describes in one short sentence the walk of faith. And what is that? Is it an aimless venture, a haphazard wandering by chance? No; but the exact opposite of this. It is the going in God's way, and not in the way that self most covets. The walk of faith is just walking with my heavenly Father hand in hand, step by step, over smooth places or rough, up hill or down, moment by moment. Believing implicitly that "the steps of every good man are ordered by the Lord," I am to obey his orders. To-day I am to do to-day's work with to-day's strength given to me. To-day's burden I am to carry. My rule of duty is for to-day. The promise of help is for to-day; as my day so shall my strength be. To-morrow's journey and to-morrow's toil and to-morrow's trials I must leave until to-morrow comes. Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it; and be not careful for the morrow. This is faith's first lesson. Suppose that Abraham had laid awake all night worrying over his next day's route, and refused to stir a step in the morning till God gave him a map of the road to Canaan! The Lord would have grown tired of his troublesome charge and left him to drift back to Ur.

Abraham knows not whither he is going; but he knows that God knows." Two things he is certain of. The first is that the way in which God leads him is the right way; and next that it is a safe way. This is all that you and I can expect to know. The future is an unmapped territory; every step is literally a step into the dark. The future is a "seven-sealed book," and no man can unloose the seals thereof. We discover its contents only as God unlooses the seals, and turns over leaf by leaf, one at a time. Selfishness often inches to peep into the sealed pages. But faith whispers: "No, no; trust God." And very soon I discover that this, too, is all for the best. Every joy that is lying in wait for me at some new turn in the road breaks on me as a sweet surprise. The mercies, like transporting views in mountain travel, are all the more bewitching that they were not spoiled by anticipation. God does not let us "discount his mercies in advance."

As for the trials that await us, it is far better that we cannot foresee them. When a young pair of ardent lovers clasp hands on their wedding-day, under the bright aurora of sanguine hope, it is naught to them that older heads are shaken ominously and older tongues croak out: "You will have to take the bitter with the sweet." They mean to have no bitter. Why dump their sunshine-joys by pointing to a cloud, even though it be "no larger than the hand of a man?" It will be time enough to watch beside the sick-bed or to weep over the empty crib when those painful scenes are reached in the journey. Sufficient to the day is the evil—and the joy likewise. To forecast our sorrows would but increase the agony, without increasing the strength to bear it.

How many of life's noblest and holiest enterprises might never be undertaken if all the hardships and defeats and sufferings could be foreseen! Had Simon Peter foreseen the dungeon and the cross before him, perhaps he might not have left his net so promptly to follow Jesus. Could every young student for the ministry be permitted to read his history in advance, I doubt not that many of them would turn away—one to the farm and another to his merchandise. "Follow me," says the Master. And all the promise he makes is: "Lo! I am with you always." God did not tell Wilberforce that he would be defeated twenty years in Parliament and be abused at every step before the final victory of emancipation came. Christ does not reveal to every young convert at the outset all the trials that he must encounter or the failures he will make. All that he assures to us is: "My grace is sufficient for thee;" "to him that overcometh will I give the crown of life." Ought we really to ask anything more?

The whole journey to heaven is a walk of faith. Obey and trust is all that God requires of us. Our poor, blind timidity often falters and whimpers: "Lord, how can we know the way?" Our Divine Leader replies: "Follow me. I am the way. I will lead the blind in a path that they have not known. I will make the darkness light before them." Blessed is that soul which has learned to trust and to obey.

The real conflict in life is between choosing our own way or walking in God's way. The sin of the sinner lies just in this, that he follows the path that seems most pleasant to himself; and the end of it is—hell! Even Christians are often terribly tempted to be willful and wayward. Lot chose his own way, and it led him to Sodom. When he took God's directions, they led him up to Zoar, and he was safe. Jonah chose his own way, and it sent him overboard into the raging sea. Then he took God's way, and it led him to Nineveh, on a mission of love. Peter undertook to look out for himself, and he turned liar and coward. Afterward he let God take care of him, and he went to sleep calmly in a prison, to be waked up by a delivering angel. Reader, have you not always found the sweetest peace when you fed most on faith?

One thought more. Abraham "knew not whither he went" on earth; but he knew he was heaven-bound. He sought the city which hath foundations. Toward that glorious capital of the great King he bent his steadfast eye through all his wanderings. So may we march on, day by day, from duty to duty, from toil to trial; but by and by comes the "eternal weight of glory." That is enough. Let the storm roar; yonder is the haven. What though the way be dark, if I can only feel Jesus' hand in mine and hear him say: "It is I; fear not, my child. Where I am thou shalt be also." This divine voice brings the calm. My beloved is mine and I am his.

"So I go on, not knowing! I would not if I might. I would rather walk with God in the dark than go alone in the light; I would rather walk with him by faith than walk alone by sight." Independent.

About Noses.

The most extraordinary men of every age have been distinguished by having extraordinary noses. Beginning with the ancients, Scipio Nasica derived his name from the prominent share of this feature possessed by him; so did Ovid, surnamed Naso, on which account Pope represents his flatterers persuading him that he had "a nose like Ovid's;" Cicero's nose was distinguished by a vetch; Sylla's by a profusion of pimples. This latter made a great figure in those days, and the Athenians, while he was besieging them, cut a number of jokes on it. They compared it to "a mulberry dredged over with meal," as we read in Plutarch's life of Sylla. This joke, as many other jocose things often do, cost the inventors of it very dearly when the revengeful dictator put his nose within their city gates.

The nose of Cromwell was well calculated to vie with that of his Roman prototype, if we may credit Cleveland, Birkenhead and other cotemporary writers. "Cromwell's face," says Birkenhead, "wears a natural tiffany, and his chin may furnish a rusty coat of mail. His nose is a comet in grain. Certainly it is no human feature, but the emblem of a mandrake. And yet this basilisk would king it!" Napoleon the First was wont to say: "Give me a man with plenty of nose—long nose, long head." His best generals were, as a rule, remarkably well provided in this particular. His own was exquisitely chiseled, sculpturesque in mold, form and expression, though, strangely enough, not one of his brothers had a nose worth looking at. But the most prominent nose in Europe was Arthur, Duke of Wellington's. And the Iron Duke's captains, Anglesey, Picton, Combermere and Hardinge, were all men noteworthy in this respect also. Sir Charles Napier, the Conqueror of Scinde, was similarly favored. His nose was "like the beak of an eagle; it was curved and keen as the blade of a scythe." In a celebrated debate in the House of Commons, Sheridan compared Pitt's nose to the steeple of Strasbourg; Pitt retorted by likening that of Sheridan to "a fiery meteor." Sherry's feature, "on the coloring of which thousands of pounds of his creditors' money had been spent, still gleams like a fiery comet from the caricatures of Gillray." The late Lord Kelly had such another nose, and he had a very red face altogether. "Pray, my Lord," said Foote to him, "come and look over my garden-wall—my cucumbers are very backward." Lord Brougham's nose, lithe, flexible, mobile, now wagging with infinite humor, now heaving with terrific wrath, has been the theme of ten thousand pens. By the way, Senor Orense, the veteran leader of the republican party in Spain, is said to be about a duplicate of the late Lord Brougham, the similarity of face, even to the unmistakable nose, being wonderful. Mrs. Siddons' was another remarkable nose, and it gave great trouble to Sir Joshua Reynolds. The prince of portrait-painters was completely baffled by it. For a whole week he had been at the feature, and could not get the hang of it by hook or crook. The witchery of the tragedy-queen's great, merry, yet serious eyes; the ripeness, tinctured with tenderness, and touched with a soupçon of scorn, of the small mouth; the gloom of the eyebrows, the dimple in the chin, the inimitable curve of the graceful neck, the curly head, surmounted by the cavalier hat, the lazy gracefulness of attitude—all were there, true to the original; but then the nose! Booth, the well-known actor, had a broken nose. A lady once remarked to him: "I like your acting, Mr. Booth, but, to be frank with you, I can't get over your nose." "No wonder, madam," replied he, "the bridge is gone." A prodigiously long nose had Sir William Chere. One day, while playing at backgammon with General Brown, Sir William, who was a snuff-taker, was continually using his snuff-box, and leaning over the table. Feeling annoyed at this, and being at the same time in a very bad humor with the game, the general said testily: "Sir William, blow your nose!" "Blow it yourself," answered Chere, "'tis as near you as me!" But by the side of the gloriously immortal nose that Shakespeare drew, that of Bardolph, all other jolly noses must hide their diminished luster. We may apostrophize it in the very words of honest Jack: "Thou art the admiral! Thou bearest the lanthorn in the poop, but 'tis the nose of thee. Thou art the Knight of the Burning Lamp. Oh! thou art a perpetual triumph, an everlasting bonfire light!"—Cassell's Magazine.

Co-Education of the Sexes.

An able and eminently sensible article in the Liberal Christian, doubtless from the pen of the Rev. Dr. Bellows, concludes as follows:

"We have watched the co-education of the sexes for twenty years with some moderate opportunities for observation. We are satisfied that women can be educated like men, and in manly studies—classics, mathematics and the rest. We are satisfied also that they can learn to skate and swim and plow and do carpentry-work, paint the outside of houses and even wield the ax. We are satisfied, too, that no very great objection to co-education arises from the contact of boys and girls in classes or within neighboring premises. We do not see that any injuries to morality would arise from allowing girls to attend college exercises at Harvard. And we think it likely enough that their scholarship would be equal to that of the young men. We are confident, on the other hand, that their health would decline as fast as their scholarship rose; that their safety even as to morals would be very much due to their unattractiveness and absence of womanhood, and that all they gained in the way of masculine culture would be at the expense of things more valuable to themselves and more important to society. In short, we hold the intellectual and literary woman to be an exceptional and not very interesting representative of her sex. She usually disowns herself of her chief glory, her womanliness, by aspiring to what she misconceives to be something higher. We can make room for the few who by irresistible impulse insist upon being men in women's garb, but we decidedly object to manufacturing that kind of person wholesale and of set purpose.

"We are alarmed at the decline of health and sanity among American women of the favored class. And we think it due to the strain under which they are put by ambitious teachers and parents at the critical period of their lives. What they lose nothing can repay. All they give society, intellectually or morally, is nothing compared with the physical deterioration they may entail upon their offspring and the unhappiness they may bring into their homes. We trust there will be a long pause before co-education of the sexes in our more advanced colleges gives a fresh impulse to the stilted intellectuality which is becoming the bane of American women; for what spoils them ruins the hopes of humanity!"

Death of Schiller.

The spring of 1805, which Schiller had anticipated with no ordinary hopes of enjoyment and activity, came on in its course, cold, bleak and stormy; and along with it his sickness returned. The help of physicians was vain; the unwearied services of trembling affection were vain; his disorder kept increasing; on the ninth of May it reached a crisis. Early in the morning of that day he grew insensible, and by degrees delirious. Among his expressions the word Lichtenberg was frequently noticed; a word of no import; indicating, as some thought, the writer of that name, whose works he had lately been reading; according to others, the castle of Leuchtenberg, which, a few days before his sickness, he had been proposing to visit. The poet and the sage was soon to lie low; but his friends were spared the further pain of seeing him depart in madness. The fiery canopy of physical suffering which had bewildered and blinded his thinking faculties was drawn aside; and the spirit of Schiller looked forth in its wonted serenity once again before it passed away forever. After noon his delirium abated; about four o'clock he fell into a soft sleep, from which he ere long awoke in full possession of his senses. Restored to consciousness in that hour when the soul is cut off from human help, and loan must front the King of Terrors on his own strength, Schiller did not faint or fail in this his last and sharpest trial. Feeling that his end was come, he addressed himself to meet it as became him; not with affected carelessness or superstitious fear, but with the quiet, unpretending manliness which had marked the tenor of his life. Of his friends and family he took a touching but tranquil farewell; he ordered that his funeral should be private, without pomp or parade. Some one inquiring how he felt, he said: "Calmer and calmer;" simple but memorable words, expressive of the solid heroism of the man. About six he sank into a deep sleep; once for a moment he looked up with a lively air, and said: "Many things were growing plain and clear to him!" Again he closed his eyes, and his sleep deepened and deepened, till it changed into the sleep from which there is no awakening; and all that remained of Schiller was a lifeless form soon to be mingled with the clods of the valley.—Carlyle's Life of Schiller.

JAPANESE ANTIQUITY.—Japan has a population of more than 30,000,000 souls, and a history which runs back, by tradition, over 2,500 years, with authentic record for more than 1,100; while her neighbors in China, from whom Japan obtained her written language, and whose civilization Japan adopted about a thousand years ago, have a population of nearly 400,000,000, and a history covering about 4,000 years.

Habits of Reading.

All young people read a great deal now; but I do not see that a great deal comes of it. They think they have to read a good many newspapers and a good many magazines. They are very entertaining. But it is not always certain that the reader gets from them just what he needs. On the other hand, it is certain that people who only read the current newspapers and magazines get very little good from each other's society, because they are all fed with the same intellectual food. You hear them repeat to each other the things they have all read in the Daily Trumpet or the Saturday Woodpecker. I see no objection, however, to light reading, desultory reading, the reading of newspapers, or the reading of fiction, if you take enough ballast with it, so that the light kites, as the sailors call them, may not carry your ship over in some sudden gale. The principle of sound habits of reading, if reduced to a precise rule, comes out thus: that for each hour of light reading—of what we read for amusement—we ought to take another hour of reading for instruction or improvement. Nor have I any objection to stating the same rule backward, for that is a poor rule that will not work both ways. It is, I think, true that, for every hour we give to grave reading, it is well to give a corresponding hour to what is light and amusing. Now a great deal more is possible under this rule than you boys and girls think at first. Some of the best students in the world—who have advanced its affairs farthest in their particular line—have not in practice studied more than two hours a day. Walter Scott, except when he was goaded to death, did not work more. Dr. Bowditch translated the great "Mecanique Celeste" in less than two hours' daily labor. But then it was regular as the movement of the planets he described. It did not stop, for whim or by accident, more than Jupiter stops in his orbit because a holiday comes round.—E. E. Hale.

BUYING PROPERTY IN MEXICO.—The Northern Methodist Mexican mission has come into possession of the cloisters of the Convent of San Francisco in the City of Mexico. Dr. Butler says of it: "After wandering all round it, and studying it out, we are fully persuaded that it is really a magnificent property for our mission work." Again he says, comparing it with the other Protestant edifices: "If elegance can attract, none of the others can compare with us; for these cloisters, with their beautiful arches and pillars, form one of the most magnificent courts that you ever looked upon." Another person writes that this structure will soon be opened for Christian worship. To make the necessary repairs in the roof, and to properly cleanse, arrange and beautify the cells, will require, with the purchase money, an outlay of about $3,000. The whole cost of the edifice is less than $20,000. It was never built for five times the money. "It is very desirable that the whole face of the cloisters on the street should be secured. We have now about forty feet front. We need the additional sixty feet. This is offered to us at the very low rate of $1,000. It is now a series of stores. Over them we could put our schools, press, mission families, etc., and all our central work, and make, as Dr. Butler remarks, 'a most complete missionary establishment.' To carry out the purchases already made, and these new necessities, we need about $30,000."

THE following story is well vouched for: About the time of Hallow-eve the mischievous boys in the city of Brooklyn ring violently at door-bells and then run away. A certain old lady about here was grievously annoyed by these bell-igerent attacks, and determined to watch for the offender. She stationed herself just inside the door, and soon the bell rung out sonorously.

The lady hastily opened the door, caught the offender by the collar, boxed his ears right and left most soundly. He was a diminutive person, and it being dark she could not recognize him.

At every whack he protested: "Madam, why, madam!"

"Don't madam me, you young rascal!" she exclaimed, and another blow made his ears smart painfully.

He begged, implored.

"Don't beg for mercy, you graceless scamp!" was the only reply, accompanied by another thundering thump upon his auditory apparatus.

Finally, becoming exhausted by her combative demonstrations, she dragged the little man into the hall that she might recognize the offender by the gaslight, and "tell his mother," as she said, when whom should she discover in the person of her victim but her own minister, who had called to pay a friendly visit!

TURKISH LADIES.—One of the great sources of entertainment among the Turkish ladies, apart from the promenade, is the interchange of calls. No husband would dare, at the risk of making himself an object of ridicule, to refuse his wife permission to go out with an old woman slave to a mosque or to a female friend. Therefore it is not unusual to see at the house of a lady of some rank as many as twenty or thirty visitors. They pass the time in gossiping, watching the slaves dance, listening to songs, drinking coffee or sherbet, and smoking. The ordinary townspeople often stay till after supper, and light themselves home with lanterns. The women are generally the first to learn and circulate news. The men often visit one another, but they are always reserved. They speak with less restraint to their wives, and tell them for their entertainment what they have heard and what they think of doing. The wives of the high functionaries are on terms of close intimacy with other ladies, and repeat to them what their husbands have said; and in this way the news is spread abroad with unheard-of rapidity.

PEOPLE often complain of not getting their rights, and it is sometimes well for them that they don't.

Religious Intelligence.

THE English Churchmen are contemplating an increase in the number of their bishops.

MR. WATSON C. SQUIRE, of the class of 1863, Wesleyan University, has given a prize of $150, to be awarded to that member of the junior class who shall excel in the Greek language.

A WEEKLY newspaper in the native language has been started at Lodiana. It is published by direction of the mission, and it is hoped it will do much to make the gospel known among the Hindoos.

THE Baptists propose to commemorate the national centennial in 1876 by raising, meanwhile, an educational fund for completing the endowment of all their institutions of learning in the country.

IT WAS announced at the convention of the Congregationalists of Massachusetts, a few weeks since, that there are ministers in that State, out of health, who are actually suffering for the necessaries of life.

THE Moravian has a report from its missions in Greenland which is generally encouraging. The congregation at Lichtenau was to celebrate its centennial, July 14 and 15. From Australia also there are good reports.

THE first Christian school in Jerusalem was opened in 1815 with nine members; now there are five schools, with upward of 400 scholars. In all Palestine there are twenty-five Protestant schools, with about 1,000 members.

THE London Methodist Recorder, May 16, says that, so far as at present ascertained from the returns of the district meetings of the Wesleyan Methodists, there has been a net increase of 2,300 members, and 16,500 on trial.

IT WAS mentioned, some time ago, that the Rev. Dr. Newton's sermons for children had been translated into several European languages. Late advices from India inform us that two of his volumes are now being translated into the Hindoostanee tongue.

ARCHBISHOP MCCLOSKEY is fully aroused to the necessity of establishing day schools for Catholic children in all the parishes of New York city which can support them. Prominent grown children of the church have promised the archbishop any co-operation that he desires.

ACCORDING to the annual report read before the New York Sunday School Convention, recently held at Binghampton, of 1,500,000 children in New York, less than one-half attended Sabbath schools. Among these 13,000 conversions were reported last year, and over $500,000 were raised for religious uses.

THE new ecclesiastical law of Prussia is to be enforced. "The new court for its administration," says the Christian World, "has been formed by a royal decree. It is a compound of eleven judges, five of whom are Roman Catholics. The first case for trial is that of the Archbishop of Cologne, who has been summoned to give his reasons for the excommunication of two priests who joined the Old Catholic organization."

THE population of Madagascar, as estimated by Grandidier, of the Paris Geographical Society, is set down at 1,000,000. The Christian population embraces three-fourths of that number. Of course a large proportion are merely nominal Christians, having renounced idolatry, in obedience to the Queen's command; yet a large number are intelligent and sincere Christians. Genuine religion is extending rapidly throughout the kingdom.

THE missionaries who go to Mexico do not have, in all cases, a remarkably smooth and easy time. Rev. Mr. Carter, of the Methodist Mexican mission, writes that a young native minister of the Presbyterian Church baptized a child in one of the towns, and was afterward attacked by a mob of Romanists in the streets, and knocked down. A friend who came to his assistance was killed, and three other Protestants wounded. The native minister was obliged to flee with his family.

BERMAH.—The Baptist mission in Burmah has been very successful. The mission was commenced by Dr. Judson in 1812. Now it reports among the Karens and Shans 18,516 baptized Christians, organized into 356 churches, with 82 ordained and 329 unordained preachers. There are 85 schools, embracing 4,874 pupils, a number of whom are in the Theological College. Large numbers in Tonghoo and in other places have been brought to embrace Christianity through the labors of this mission not included in the above.

IT WAS the Jansenist Archbishop of Utrecht, after all, who died. The telegraph gave the name of the Roman Catholic Archbishop Schaepman, but the telegraph was wrong, for the deceased prelate was none other than the most Reverend Archbishop Loos, Jansenist. He died on the very day (June 4) that the Old Catholics elected their Bishop Reinkens. He was the officer to whom the Old Catholics looked for the consecration of the new bishop. The service of consecration will now probably be performed by Bishop Heijkamp, of Deventer. The other see, that of Harlem, has been vacant several years.

TWO BAPTIST PREACHERS from England are reported to be now in this country for the purpose of obtaining funds to establish a college for the training of close-communion ministers. The Baptist Union says that they admit that the Baptists in England are generally open communionists; that close-communion churches do not prosper there; that the close communionists are few, poor, generally ignorant, and lacking in enterprise, and have little influence; that the close party are separating themselves from the great body of Baptists, and prescribing them as heretics, and that this new college is necessary to add force and efficiency to the schism.

THE Mexican Congress has passed a new law for the separation of Church and State. The law provides that no religion shall be either supported or forbidden by the government; that marriage shall be regarded as a civil contract, to be legally valid only after registration in the presence of a magistrate; that no religious body shall have any corporate rights; that no Mexican citizen shall be bound by any vow he may have made as the member of a religious order; and that witnesses shall not be required to take an oath in a court of justice. Against this uncompromising secularism the Ultramontanes are, of course, arrayed; and it is said that in their agitation for the repeal of the law they are secretly assisted by the President, himself a zealous Catholic, and by several Jesuits, who have lately arrived with instructions from Rome.

THE secretary of the new French Home Missionary Society, says the London Freeman, reports, as the result of a recent tour in the center of France, that the weight of public opinion is turning in favor of Protestantism. Certain barriers previously existing—such as the secular rivalry of the two parties and divisions of Protestantism—are less marked than they used to be. In spite of the difficulties of the work; in spite of the ignorance of the masses; in spite of worldliness, formality and infidelity, there now exists in the conscience of the people a vague impression of the spiritual superiority of Protestantism. Widespread efforts are being made to give life and energy to the ministry of the gospel throughout France. The French Protestants are constantly liable to fall into a tame acquiescence in the present order of things, but the arrangements of the Mission Interieure Evangelique appear to be admirably calculated to promote spiritual vigilance, and the spread and the active profession of the truth.

A GREAT MISSION-FIELD.—In India, Burmah and Ceylon there are 325,000 native Christians, an increase of 85,430 for the past ten years, and 500 missionaries. The attention given to this field by some of the missionary societies is summed up as follows by the London Watchman: "The Baptist Missionary Society devotes three-fifths of its home income to mission work in India and Ceylon; the Church Missionary Society more than one-half; the Propagation Society one-third; the London Missionary Society one-fourth, and the Wesleyan Missionary Society scarcely more than one-seventh. Again, the Baptist Missionary Society expends from its home funds £1,300 more in India than the Wesleyan Missionary Society; the London Missionary Society £5,400 more than the Wesleyan Missionary Society; the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel nearly twice as much; and the Church Missionary Society nearly five times as much, while the American Board of Foreign Missions, with an income of $420,266 for the year 1872, expended in India and Ceylon $100,464."

THE close communionists in various parts of Great Britain are making strenuous efforts to preserve what they call the purity of the Baptist denomination. A pitched battle was fought at the late meetings of the Northern Baptist Association, held in Newcastle-upon-Tyne. A committee had been appointed to revise the constitution, and had provided for the admission of union churches, of which several are already in the association. This was opposed very vigorously. An amendment providing for the admission of none but churches of immersed believers was lost by thirty votes to forty-two. A further amendment was proposed excluding all but close-communion churches. This was lost by a very large majority, only eleven voting for it. The original resolution was then put and carried by forty votes to twenty-four. The principal speakers in favor of the resolution were Rev. James Marsell and Messrs. J. Angus and Hosevear, Newcastle; Rev. W. S. Chesterton, Berwick; Rev. P. W. Grant and Mr. James Wilson, Darlington; and Rev. J. E. Cracknell, South Shields.

REV. S. R. RIGGS, known for his faithful labors among the Indians, reports a late annual meeting of the Dakota mission, held at the Yankton agency, at the station of J. P. Williamson, who now labors in the employ of the Presbyterian Board, but in concert with the missionaries of the American Board among the Dakotas. At this meeting every one of the seven native pastors was present, and licentiates, elders and deacons were largely represented; while from the Sisseton agency there were 10 present, who had traveled a distance of nearly 300 miles, swimming the rivers, and occupying ten days in the journey. The number added to the nine churches of the Dakotas during the year are 79, though, owing to an unusually large mortality, the actual advance over last year is but 50—775, against 725 last year. Of these churches six, with an aggregate membership of 375, are on the Sisseton reservation, in Dakota Territory; and one, the Pilgrim church, of 223 members, at the Santee agency, in Nebraska, are under the care of the American Board.

THIS year's International Convention of the Young Men's Christian Associations has again proved the growth and influence of these organizations. The convention met at Poughkeepsie on the ninth instant, when it was reported that there are 924 associations on the roll, or 80 more than a year ago. Thirty-eight have permanent buildings, valued at $1,750,000, and nearly as many more have building funds. Associations have been organized in 32 colleges and literary institutions. Following this report came the discussion of a variety of topics relating to the work and management of these associations, such as the value of Bible classes, the qualifications of the general-secretaries, the efficiency of personal visitation, etc. The subject, "What can young men do through associations to destroy pernicious literature?" appeared to be as important as any, and brought out some excellent remarks from Rev. Lyman Abbott, Mr. Anthony Comstock and others. There is a wide field here for usefulness and thorough work, and no organizations seem better qualified to enter it than these very associations of active youths.

The First Bale.

We note, as usual at this season of the year, the announcement of the first bale of cotton of the new crop, and the first bale received at different points in the cotton-growing regions. There is much importance attached to the history of these first bales—the name of the producer is given, the precise weight, classification and the price. Why this is so we can only conjecture. In the ancient times of Israel, when the first fruits were given to God, no husbandman touched his crop for himself until the sheaf of barley was offered in the name of the nation. Then every private person also brought the first fruits to the temple—the first of the wheat, barley, grapes, figs, apricots, olives and dates. Neighbors met in companies, we are told, of four-and-twenty persons, to carry their first fruits up to the house of the Lord with fitting ceremony, and each several company was preceded by an ox appointed for the sacrifice, with gilded horns and a crown of olives on his head. Not a grain of wheat or barley went to the market or the garner, and not a fig or an olive was eaten, until the first gathered were carried up to the temple.

The first bale, so prominently heralded, is without any religious significance, so far as we have noticed. The Jews presented their first sheaf to God, and even the pagan Greeks and Romans offered sacrifices of swine, oxen, cows, honey, cakes and fruits to Ceres, the goddess of grain and of harvest. It may be that these first bales are connected in the minds of some with devout and grateful thoughts of the bounteous Giver of all. Some, it may be, are reminded by them of the truth that "every good gift and every perfect is from above, and cometh down from the Father of lights." But, for the most part, we fear there is hardly so much as a pagan recognition of the Hand which spreads the fleecy staple over the fields, and covers the valleys with flocks and with corn. These first bales are laid upon the altar of mammon, and in this respect are a true earnest and promise of the destiny which is likely to befall nearly the entire crop.

In reading about them, as their history is conspicuously displayed in the current news of the hour, we have been very naturally led to think of the devout heathen who had a special goddess, wearing a garland of corn, whom they worshiped in and for the harvest. Are our cotton-growers, stock-raisers and wheat farmers less religious and less grateful? How, with such a parade of first bales, could we help being reminded of that older and darker dispensation, when the earliest clusters of the vine and the first golden ears of corn were counted sacred to him, and as an acknowledgment that to him, as Lord of the harvest, all of right belonged? It is an occasion to recall such passages as this: "Honor the Lord with thy substance, and with the first fruits of all thine increase; so shall thy barns be filled with plenty, and thy presses shall burst out with new wine." If we only had the faith of the ancient Eleusinians, pagans though they were, or the methodical consecration of such Christians as lived and plowed in the days of Gideon and David, who can tell but things might go better with us, and that something might be left of the sweat and toil of the year? There might still be some demand for Paris green and other worm-killers; and the rain, the drouth and the frost might be adjusted to disappoint our hopes, but somehow there would be a blessing and a reward in our labor, and our barns would doubtless abound in all manner of store.

Among first fruits there are better than anything which the wine-press, the threshing-floor, or even the cotton gin affords. The first convert of the year's pastorate, the first soul saved at a camp meeting, the first man whom we have led to Christ are fruits of a higher and nobler sort! One glorious planter announces the first bale from at least one of his fields of toil in this wise: "Salute my well-beloved Epenetus, who is the first fruits of Achaia unto Christ." That was a single ear, but here is a whole sheaf: "Ye know the house of Stephanas, that it is the first fruits of Achaia." Had Paul access to a CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE these would have been items "from the work." Christians are also spoken of "as a kind of first fruits of his creatures;" and those who composed "the hundred and forty and four thousand," and who sung, as it were, a new song before the throne, and before the four beasts, and the elders, "were redeemed from among men, being the first fruits unto God and to the Lamb." Among the most distinguishing blessings of believers are "the first fruits of the Spirit."

We may fittingly end this mention by one other but most suggestive Scripture: "But now is Christ risen from the dead, and become the first fruits of them that slept." The importance attached to the first bale may be in this: that it is regarded as the forerunner of the three or four millions which are to follow, and as the pledge of the entire ingathering of the year. The first sheaf, threshed and waved in the temple, was the earnest and assurance of the vast harvest that waited on the reapers. Christ is the first-born from the dead, the first of all the dead to be raised and glorified, and the pledge of a final and universal resurrection. With him, as "the first fruits of them that slept," our relation is most vital and precious. Our life is hid with Christ in God. The vintage of life is assured by this first cluster, the harvest of our immortality is declared in this first ripe ear which comes to us in golden fruition from the grave. What are all other first things, and all other fruits, and all other tokens of plenty compared to the sublime and thrilling proclamation: "Christ the first fruits; afterward they that are Christ's at his coming?" Would that all our first things and precious things, our first bales, our first boxes, our first baskets and the firstlings of our flocks and herds, might be laid at the feet of him who is the first-born of every creature, the first-born from the dead, and also the Alpha and Omega—the first and the last.

The Mexican Mission.

MR. EDITOR: Our missionary, Hernandez, has safely arrived, and I am in receipt of letters from him weekly. He stepped directly into a church and a congregation. His letter of this past week, dated July 15, says: "I have the pleasure to tell you that from eighty to one hundred persons pay attention to my church on Thursdays and Sundays; and, what is better, the priest, Lorenzo Llepes, whom I have employed, as I told you in my last, has requested of me the baptism, which I will administer next Sunday. * * * Eight days ago a commission from the town of Napala came to me, earnestly requesting me to establish a Methodist worship in the said villa. All the Protestants acknowledge the people of this town of five thousand inhabitants to have the best disposition for Protestantism, as they dismissed the Catholic priest there established. * * I earnestly call your attention to this, that through our newspapers all the faithful ministers be exhorted to pray continually for the Mexican mission."

It will be seen by this that he is already under full headway. He wants "a good supply of tracts, Bibles and Testaments, to furnish with them two or three ministers" he expects to employ.

In this connection I will introduce the translation of a letter from Bro. Hernandez to Mr. William Headen, of Corpus Christi, written just after his arrival in Mexico, which will give his idea of the prospect, and to the reader some idea of our missionary.

CITY OF MEXICO, June 28, 1873.

MR. WILLIAM HEADEN—My Very Dear Sir and Beloved Brother: Health and peace! On the eleventh instant I left Havana, on the fourteenth I arrived at Vera Cruz, and on the fifteenth at this city, and it has surprised me to see in it a powerful aid, sanction and protection in favor of Protestantism, and much more as the ministers of all denominations lend themselves joyfully to help me in my holy undertaking. After the same manner the consul, the United States minister, and other persons to whom I have been recommended, have resolutely tendered me their assistance.

Bro. William, our Bishop's mission to this capital is wonderful. Well, it has presented itself to my individual sight that he has accomplished a work so majestic as to alone be attributable to a divine inspiration.

There are truly more Protestants here, in so short a time, than those which the Bishop was able to mention in his letter, and there is nothing more necessary than a church of our own. * * * This is the opportune occasion in which the Lord selects his own, and unites them to us, to the end that we adore him in an orderly manner. Well, here is a case:

A priest, who exercised the Roman ministry for twenty years and more, and for seven years has been a Protestant, contemplating sadly this disorganization (according to his matured experience,) he has presented himself to me to give me the hand in that which I may employ him; and I, having received a general recommendation of all the ministers here, and having seen his credentials, and fixed excommunication in the Roman churches against him, and his conduct, which is very grave and circumspect—I repeat, I have placed him with an adult school until books reach me to send him as a missionary to Tierra Caliente, to the places where he was parish priest. Moreover, this is the desire which animates him most.

To-morrow, the twenty-ninth, worship begins in our church. Moreover, my corresponding preparations for it have been many. I have an excellent Protestant performer, who is going to play a melodeon for me, which I have hired at $12 a month until my Bishop sends me one which I requested him to send. In fine, it is beyond reach to recount all the rapid strides of the gospel.

If there remain any books which I left in your care, and are not very necessary there, you can send them to me.

I request that not a single person remain unsaluted who knows or asks for me. Salute them with individual remembrances, excusing me on account of my unwearied labors.

"I am eternally yours.

ALEJO HERNANDEZ.

On last Sabbath night I was present at a missionary meeting in Mobile—a mass meeting of our several churches in that city for raising their recent missionary assessment ($1,400.)

The audience was a fine one, though several of the staunchest friends of our church were absent, from whom we expect the balance necessary to make up the full amount—one-half to go to Mexico. The preachers entered into it heart and soul, and so did the Sunday school superintendents, teachers and children, as will be seen by the result. The following is the exact text of the occasion:

The times are said to be hard, but for many of us they will never be better. Time and life both press. What we do must be done quickly, or not at all. The missionary cause has never seen anything else but hard times at our hands. I am glad to believe that the church is rousing up. I have received gifts for this noble cause which show how near it lies to the hearts of the people—from some the most precious relics of departed friends. Two ladies, living at different points in Alabama, have each sent for this mission a gold piece, once "the property of a son killed in the battle of the Wilderness." Yours truly,

J. C. KEENER.

OCEAN SPRINGS, August 20, 1873.

Washington Springs.

MR. EDITOR: These springs are picturesquely situated among the mountains, some twenty-five hundred feet above the sea-level. The site commands a wide and bold view of some of the ranges of the Alleghany mountains. We often see the clouds sailing below their heights, and sometimes veiling them in masses of vapor. The air here has a crisp and bracing feel about it. It is pleasant to nestle under the blankets, grow pleasantly warm, and sink into unconscious and refreshing slumber. Then to wake in the morning, free from the lassitude which one feels in lower and warmer latitudes, is felt by one long subdued by the sun of the South to be a happy change. The holiday feeling is upon us—no care and no task for the day; only some pleasant, innocent and health-giving recreations. We feel grateful to be here, and think it must do us good, toning up our nerves, sharpening our appetites and recruiting our strength. We have the purest air, the best waters—freestone, iron, alum and magnesia and sulphur mingled with most of the mineral springs. We have abundant, various and well-cooked food. We have pleasant, intelligent and highly moral company—no bar and no dancing. In short, a nice place for people who want rest, comfort and quietness.

The location is naturally beautiful, and is easily susceptible of a high degree of ornamentation, which Prof. Longly (of Emory and Henry,) the proprietor, proposes at no distant time to bestow upon it. It is only three miles from the railroad as you ride from New Orleans toward Lynchburg.

The hills, too high or steep for tillage, are covered with green and glorious forests—trees of almost all varieties. In the autumn, when these forests shall assume all the gorgeous dyes of heaven, they will present a most magnificent and beautiful picture.

The agriculture of this "hill country" has within a few years undergone a considerable change—less grain and less tobacco, but far more grass is raised. This change has modified and lessened labor, but has greatly increased the profits. Fine stock is raised in great numbers, and commands a ready sale.

But these goodly mountains are not only the great sanitarium of the South, but the region of schools as well. Emory and Henry is hard by. By the way, I never knew until the other day why "Henry" was added to "Emory." It is in memory of Patrick Henry, the golden-mouthed, blessed beyond common men with the glorious gift of speech. This college has a past of which its friends are justly proud; but doubtless a more glorious future expects it. I suppose for health, morals and cheapness Emory and Henry has no superior. Her faculty are fully equal to their high responsibilities. We doubt not the enlightened Southern public, and especially the Methodist public, will show an increasingly favorable appreciation of Emory and Henry.

But what do you do with yourselves? What all people do who can—we eat good food, and refresh ourselves with sweet sleep; but further, we read the daily papers from all points of the compass, we write and read letters, and talk and walk; and the young folks, and some of the old, for that matter, play various games, and thus the swift-winged hours fly away. Somebody has said: "An undevout astronomer is mad." We think it may be said with equal force: An undevout mountaineer is mad. These grand and venerable mountains proclaim the omnipotence of God—so high, so vast, where the hoary king of winter sits enthroned, with frozen streams for his footstool, the spotless snows for his robe, and the glittering frost for his crown. These towering masses so far surpass those world-wide renowned creations of art—the pyramids, St. Peter's and St. Paul's—that a comparison is simply impossible. All about us in mountain scenery proclaims: "Only God's mind could conceive, only God's hand could produce this sublime display." Mountains in all the heathen ages were regarded as the home of the immortal God; and inspired bards, such as Moses, the psalmist and Isaiah, saw in mountains the wonder-working hand of God. We rejoice in the mountains, and would, if we might, annually temper the fervid summer heats upon their cooling heights.

Our Missionary Organization.

BY BISHOP MARVIN.

MR. EDITOR: There is one thing in our present missionary organization which I have always approved and am more and more satisfied with. It is this: The whole church is taken to be the Missionary Society. This is a decided improvement over the old scheme which had a parent society, with certain conditions of membership, and auxiliary societies with certain other terms. Certain amounts of money paid constituted the donor a member. I greatly prefer our present system, which considers the church itself to be the Missionary Society. And what is the church but a society which God himself has organized for evangelizing the world? To bring men to the knowledge of God in Christ, and then to edify them in love, is the sole function of the body ecclesiastic.

Upon this basis we proceed, having certain officers provided, who are to direct the activities of the church in the missionary field. There is the Parent Board, domiciled at Nashville, and a "Board of Missions" in each Annual Conference. These have charge of the missionary work of the church. In this respect I doubt if the present plan can be improved upon. I believe it to be about perfect. But in a matter indicated two weeks ago our method works badly. There is both inequality and want of efficiency. There is inequality in that all the Conferences alike are expected to provide for the domestic field in their own bounds, and to remit the same per cent. to the Parent Board. There is indeed provision in the constitution for equalizing the Conferences in this matter, but it is a provision which in practice fails of its result signally. There is want of efficiency in two particulars. First, in the absence of any element calculated to awaken enthusiasm in the church with respect to the foreign work; and secondly, in the fact that the Conference Boards are nearly if not quite all in debt, and provide for the missionaries dependent on them irregularly and inadequately. What they do pay comes late, and in many cases is largely discounted in amount.

How may this be remedied? Shall we have two Parent Boards, one for the foreign and another for the domestic work? No, for several reasons. One is sufficient. It would create too much machinery and necessitate too many offices. A desideratum in this work is simple machinery that may be run with very little cost. We have all the machinery we want now. It is just the thing for efficiency. One Parent Board and one general secretary can do the work better than a dozen; and, with but one-half the cost of operating the system, does not subtract an amount from the funds of the society that is an appreciable per cent. upon the whole amount.

Then as to the grand design, the saving of souls, the work is a unit. There is really no reason in the nature of the case why the whole work should be divided. Let one set of officers manage the whole.

What can be done, then? Is there any change that may be practicable and conduce to efficiency?

Yes; so I believe. It has, moreover, this to recommend it: that so far as it will affect the constitutional basis of the present organization the change is very slight. Indeed it can scarcely be said to be a structural change at all, but only a change in the working of the plan.

My proposition has already been submitted to the Parent Board at Nashville, and, so far as I know, it was received with universal favor. Not only did the members of the board receive it with favor, but many men of intelligence to whom it was suggested gave it their hearty approval. Indeed I have not yet conversed with a man on the subject who did not regard it favorably, nor have I heard or read of any objection to it except one. That one objection has been made by a most worthy and intelligent brother, who will, I am persuaded, after more mature consideration of all the facts, see the matter in a different light.

The plan is this: Let all moneys raised for missions be remitted to the treasurer of the Parent Board at Nashville. Then let the Parent Board make the appropriations, both for the foreign and domestic field.

For the domestic work, of course their appropriations will be made, not in detail, but to Conferences, and the Conference Boards will make the appropriations in detail. At the annual meeting the board, having a proximate knowledge of the amount to be relied on for the coming year, will make appropriations to all the Annual Conferences for the domestic missions within their bounds.

This is the method of the old society. It is the method that was in vogue up to the war. And I believe that all who were familiar with its working, and also that of the present method, are convinced that it was altogether preferable.

If we recur to this method, what good effects may we hope to secure?

1. The arbitrary relation between the foreign and domestic work, expressed in the forty per cent., will be destroyed. Nor need there be any fear that the home work will be disparaged. The board is now, and in the nature of the case must be, composed of men en rapport with the home work and fully alive to its needs. No Annual Conference would probably have less appropriated than it has had in hand for this purpose for the last several years. Some would have none.

2. This method is flexible, and looks to enlargement as exigencies may arise. There is suggestion of unlimited growth and enterprise. It has an open eye upon the field, which is the world.

3. It is—what all the best and greatest things are and have been since the creation of the world—perfectly simple. There is just machinery enough to run well, and none over for friction.

4. It will afford the most efficient aid to that illimitable West which we cannot neglect without guilt.

5. What is appropriated to the support of a missionary he will get without any discount. He will not go to his work to create debts on the faith of appropriations never to be met. He will not, as has so often occurred under the present regime, be beguiled by a false hope.

6. The quarterly drafts will be paid when they mature. They will be so much cash at the end of each quarter. The holder of a draft will not have to wait until the end of the year, or perhaps even twelve months longer than that, to have it honored.

The only objection I have heard of is that it concentrates power in the hands of the Parent Board. To this I shall not at present make an elaborate reply. I only offer one suggestion. There can be no achievement without power. And concentration of power is necessary to the highest efficiency. No nation ever accomplished much in war where the power was not concentrated in a few hands. You say there is danger of the abuse of power. Very well. I suppose there is; and I suppose there is ever, in all enterprises, the alternative of taking some risks or achieving little or nothing.

But I am happy to know that up to this time the history of our missionary operations gives no ground for suspicion of abuses.—St. Louis Christian Advocate.

Books and Periodicals.

THE LIFE OF TRUST. Being a narrative of the Lord's dealings with George Muller. Written by himself. With an Introduction by Francis Wayland. Boston: Gould & Lincoln; New York: Sheldon & Co. 1873.

This is a new and improved edition of a work that has been some time before the public, and that has excited a great deal of interest. George Muller is certainly a remarkable man, and is doing a great work of benevolence and piety in the world. Everything to him comes in answer to prayer, as he avers that he never makes appeals for aid to man. Nevertheless, we regard his enterprises as more advertised than any others in the world, and his appeals as more adroit and persistent, though in a more indirect and novel form. A very readable and suggestive book, and favorable to faith and devotion.

THESAURUS OF ENGLISH WORDS AND PHRASES. So classified and arranged as to facilitate the expression of ideas and assist in literary composition. By Peter Mark Roget. Revised and edited, with a list of foreign words defined in English, and other additions, by Barnas Sears, D. D., LL. D. New American from the last London edition, with additions and improvements. Boston: Gould & Lincoln; New York: Sheldon & Co., 1873.

Writers and speakers will find this work an important one for reference and to be kept, with a good dictionary, at their elbow. The book is substantially bound and most convenient arranged. 367 pages.

WANDERINGS OVER BIBLE LANDS AND SEAS. By the author of Chronicles of the Schönberg-Cotta Family. Revised by Attieus G. Haygood, D. D., Sunday school secretary. Nashville, Tennessee: Published by A. H. Redford, agent for the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, 1873.

A delightfully entertaining and instructive volume, and published in good style. An excellent work for Sunday school and family libraries, and good reading for everybody. Send for it at once, and enjoy it. For sale by our Publishing House, Nashville and New Orleans.

A BRIEF HISTORY OF TEXAS. For schools. By D. W. C. Baker. A. S. Barnes & Co., New York and Chicago, 1873.

The history is from the earliest settlement down to 1870. As the work contains only 200 duodecimo pages, sixty pages of which are occupied by the constitution of Texas and an appendix, the historical matter is necessity very brief and condensed. It is a fair and faithful record, so far as we can judge. Price, $1.25 by mail.

A LEXICON TO XENOPHON'S ANABASIS. By Alpheus Crosby. New York and Chicago: Woolworth, Ainsworth & Co., 1873.

A special lexicon is a great saving of labor to the student. The danger is that the special lexicon is apt to be helpful overmuch. Prof. Crosby has avoided this evil, and has furnished a work which will be prized by beginners and also by advanced students. Price, $1.25 sent by mail.

WE HAVE RECEIVED the annual report of the Board of Missions of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, June 1, 1873. This pamphlet of 72 pages is one of the most important issued by our church, and should have a wide circulation. Let all the preachers and all the people interested in our church affairs obtain the report and study it. It contains a detailed account of our missionary operations for the year ending June 1, 1873.

THE SOUTHERN METHODIST HOUSEHOLD ALTAR, a guide to Christian Perfection. Published monthly by Rev. William Baker, at McMinnville, Tennessee, at $1.25 per annum.

A GATHERED FLOWER.—We deeply sympathize with our Bro. Davies and his wife in the bereavement which they have suffered in the death of their little daughter. The blossom is not blighted, but transplanted to a clime where it can never fade. The afflicted father writes us as follows:

Dear Bro. Parker: Our dear, sweet little Jeanie left us for a brighter world on Monday morning, the eighteenth instant, just as the day star forth its first rays of light. As the natural day dawned, so dawned on her bright spirit the great day of eternal life. She was six years old. "The Lord gave and the Lord has taken away; blessed be the name of the Lord." Affectionately,

JOEL T. DAVIES.

HEALTH OF THE CITY.—The Board of Health reports, for the week ending Monday, the twenty-fifth instant, eight deaths from yellow fever. A good deal of bilious and congestive fever has prevailed lately, and also the dengue, but there is very little yellow fever. We meet daily with physicians of large practice who have seen not more than a case or two, and some are of opinion that there is no genuine yellow fever here. We do not apprehend anything like an epidemic, nor do we consider the unacclimated in much danger at present.

JUST AS IT SHOULD BE.—Many of our correspondents are kind enough to keep their book and ADVOCATE business separate. They never write about the business of the two on the same sheet. Although they may inclose the two letters in the same envelop, they are dated, signed and addressed separately, and distinct from each other. This enables us to attend more promptly to each. When the business is solved the book-keeper of one department must commit himself to wait till it has passed through the other department—order filled, goods shipped and letter answered—before the business of his department can be attended to; and as the book-keepers and clerks of the two branches of business are separate, and file their letters separately, it must be apparent to every man of reflection that much perplexity results from writing about the business of both on the same page. When money is remitted it should be distinctly stated what for; and if for two or more purposes, how much for each. Write nothing in business letters except that which has reference to business.

THE WEEKLY WATCHMAN, LITTLE ROCK, ARKANSAS.—Under contract with E. B. Hotchkiss, editor and proprietor, the subscribers of the Watchman will be furnished with the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE during the time of the suspension of said paper, being thirty-six weeks further, as agreed upon, or until notice thereafter.

It is warranted to cure, when first taken, cholera, diarrhœa, dysentery, croup, colic and sea-sickness; and externally, chronic rheumatism, sore throat, mumps, old sores, sprains, bruises, etc. Depot, 10 Park Place, New York. au28 4t

DR. E. P. MILLER'S HOME OF HEALTH, Nos. 37, 39 and 41 West Twenty-sixth street, New York.—This is a pleasant house for the preservation or the restoration of health. Liquors and smoking are excluded, and the whole management is had with reference to health and comfort. Many a dyspeptic and otherwise invalid has been restored here to vigorous health; and the advantages of the house to visitors to the city cannot be overestimated. The house is conducted with a strict regard to neatness. The table is well kept and the charges are moderate.

Turkish baths are furnished in the house to both sexes.

With these advantages we may confidently claim the liberal patronage of those who are permanent residents or temporary sojourners in the city. Circulars sent on application. au7 1m

We are Southern people, and had been teaching in Alabama and Mississippi eighteen years previous to our removal to Kentucky. We have over a thousand pupils in the South. Desiring a favorable location and opportunities for doing good, we readily consented to removal. Send your daughters to Crab Orchard Springs. Our college building is the finest south of the Ohio river. Our requirements excel those of any other in the Gulf States. It is lighted with gas, will be warmed by steam, with water pipes running through the entire building, has numerous bath-rooms, and every other convenience of a modern city hotel. The building has been newly equipped—every room elegantly carpeted and furnished. Only two pupils in a room.

FROM A RECENT ANALYSIS BY Prof. W. O. Atwater, of Yale College. The following table will show the chemical composition of YARMOUTH SUGAR CORN:

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| Albuminoids | 12.87 | Sugar | 13.06 |
| Gum | 5.21 | Starch | 35.62 |
| Fat | 8.59 | Cellulose | 2.95 |
| Ash | 2.12 | | |

It will be seen that the Albuminoids (albumen, gluten, casein, etc.) constitute nearly thirteen per cent. "These," says Youmans, "are the life-forming principles—the true elements of nutrition."

It is particularly valuable to all requiring a highly nutritious and at the same time easily assimilated diet, and hence is used as an article of daily consumption in climates which occasion rapid waste of the system. "Almost all Asiatics, Africans and (aboriginal) Americans use it as their chief nourishment."—Louis Figuier, in his work on the Vegetable World.

In Hermetically-sealed YARMOUTH SUGAR CORN all the nutritive qualities of the grain are preserved. The grain is cut from the ear and placed in tin canisters with the rich juices or milk which exude from it, and is then sealed air-tight and the canister subjected to steam heat, which coagulates the albumen. In this condition it will keep for years. It will be seen by this that all the nutritive properties of the grain are preserved, and the most nourishing article of food in the domain of nature placed within the reach of all.

EAST MISSISSIPPI

FEMALE COLLEGE,

A Chartered Literary Institution under the Auspices of the M. E. Church South,

Located at Meridian, Mississippi.

ANNOUNCEMENT.

The annual term of 1873-4 will open on WEDNESDAY, September 24, 1873. It will be divided into two sessions of twenty weeks each. Comfortable conveniences for boarding in the college building will be furnished and supervised by the president. The Board of Trustees claim to have made ample arrangements for the literary, scientific, Ornamental and Musical departments of the college, by the election of competent and experienced teachers for the various departments, and that facilities for thorough and liberal education in the East Mississippi Female College may no more than be equaled by the best of other similar institutions. Our college is recommended to public consideration with candor and with confidence of a successful career. We hope to see its interests and influence widen and deepen, under continued and steady prosperity, and it is apprehended that young ladies who now place their names upon the roll of this institution will be pleased in coming years by recognizing in their Alma Mater a living and honored success at educational enterprise.

BOARDING.

Boarders engaged for the whole term will be charged $160, $80 at which must be paid at the opening of each session.

Those engaged for one session will be charged $90, $50 of which must be paid at the beginning of the session. Those engaged for a shorter or an indefinite time will be charged $20 per month, to be paid quarterly in advance.

Extra charges will be made for washing and lights. Each boarder must furnish two sheets, one blanket and two towels. Especial printed regulations will be given each boarder, giving her directions and restrictions respecting their family and social relations and practices.

In all cases of sickness, resulting in the removal of boarders from the college, advance payments will be promptly refunded. No pains will be spared to render each boarder comfortable and happy. Their treatment will be parental, and influences of strict propriety and refinement will be constantly brought to bear upon all their habits.

Our college is in its infancy. The enterprise has been recognized by the Mississippi Conference as meeting a growing demand for educational facilities in east Mississippi. In the judgment of the church and Conference, Meridian is the proper place for the institution. The location is healthy, access is easy, society is of the right type, and almost every consideration strengthens the judgment of the board and Conference in locating the college at this place. Since this institution is under the supervision of the church there is no hesitancy in urging earnest co-operation on the part of the ministry in the surrounding country. Our appeal is earnest. We propose to place the standard of instruction high, that they who graduate here may prove themselves worthy of honors conferred, and thereby honor themselves, the college and the world. Address J. W. ATKISSON,

SCHOOLS AND COLLEGES.

VIRGINIA FEMALE INSTITUTE,

STAUNTON, VIRGINIA

Rev. R. H. Phillips, A. M., Principal,

Assisted by a full corps of Experienced Officers."

The Twenty-eighth annual session will commence SEPTEMBER 10, 1873.

The location is remarkably salubrious and beautiful. The buildings are spacious, elegant and comfortably furnished. The grounds (four acres) have extensive walks and shade trees.

The course of study is full, the standard of scholarship is high, and the classes under the care of experienced graduates of our best institutions.

The Department of Music is under the care of seven professors and teachers, and its facilities are seldom equaled and nowhere excelled. Twenty-five first-class instruments are in use.

French and German are taught by natives, and success in this department has been most satisfactory.

The terms are remarkably low for the advantages. Pupils represented fifteen States during the last term.

From Gen. R. E. Lee and Other Patrons.

The undersigned have had daughters educated at the Virginia Female Institute, in Staunton, Virginia, under the care of Rev. R. H. Phillips. ## The Child's Corner.

TO A CHILD.

Never, my child, forget to pray,
Whate'er the business of the day;
If happy dreams have blessed thy sleep,
If startling fears have made thee weep,
With holy thoughts begin the day,
And ne'er, my child, forget to pray.

Pray him by whom the birds are fed
To give to thee thy daily bread
If wealth its bounty should bestow,
Praise him from whom all blessings flow;
If he who gave should take away,
O ne'er, my child, forget to pray.

The time will come when thou wilt miss
A father's and a mother's kiss;
And then, my child, perchance you'll see
Some who in prayer ne'er bend the knee;
From such examples turn away,
And ne'er, my child, forget to pray.

Our Nightingale.

BY SOPHY WINTHROP.

"And there's a nightingale in the garden," said the Herr Proprietor, with his hat in the air.

That decided us.

The mountains, the river, the garden already sweet with hyacinths and "little stepmothers," and the nightingale! Who could resist?

"But she is not come yet. She will not be here till a few weeks yet," added the Herr Proprietor politely after the bargain had been made. Ah, very well. There are a great many things in this world that we bargain for, but that do not "come yet." We are quite used to that sort of thing. We can wait.

So the mountains put on their beautiful garments, and the river sparkled as if conscious of its world-wide glory, and the hyacinths breathed out their very souls in sweet living and early dying, and the "little stepmothers" looked brighter and more contented every day, and the spring days and the spring nights "went on, went on," but we heard no nightingale.

"Ah, but have you not heard her? She is already a long time here," said the Herr Proprietor, rubbing his hands, one fine morning. "Yonder is her nest in the plum-tree. Ah, there she is! Quick! In the tip of the hemlock—no—now in the myrtle! Do you not see her—the little brown thing?"

So we saw her, but we wanted to hear her.

"Jawohl, my lady, and you'll be sure to hear her. I hear her every day. She sings the whole day long."

"But we thought nightingales sang in the night," we ventured patiently to suggest.

The German shrug was the answer. "Jawohl, gewiss, of course they do. But that is altogether a matter of spirits. They sing in the night when they feel like it!"

That is it? Ah, very well, and extremely sensible of Madam Nightingale. But how is the world in general to know when she does feel like it? Perhaps, however, she does not sing for the world in general. Perhaps she sings for herself alone, or perhaps—yes—now I think I have it—perhaps she sings for those unhappy ones who lie awake at night, and who also "feel like it."

At any rate the duty lying nearest us was to hear her in the day-time, and we tried faithfully.

"There's the nightingale! Hark! Don't you hear her? Right there, among the plum-trees!"

"That? That's the mocking-bird on the porch of the next cottage. He was singing the very same thing when I was there yesterday."

A pause.

"There! That's the nightingale! Do you hear? I'm sure that's it."

"Nightingale, my dear? That's the little thrush down in the syringa-bush. I can see him this minute, nearly splitting his throat at every note."

A longer pause.

"There! That must be the nightingale! Just hear it! That clear, liquid ——"

"How bright you are this morning! Don't you know that English lady's canary?"

But we did really hear her before many days had passed. First a low, clear whistle, reminding one of a French horn, and then a tender little melody. We heard her, and were thankful. We had a nightingale in the garden. What a very fine thing it was! But somehow our enthusiasm was not so great as at first. It is a little disappointing to have people fail in their specialties, and if you get up a reputation for doing a certain sort of thing you are wise to keep it up, my Lady Nightingale.

Presently, however, there were rumors afloat that she did sing at night; vague tales of a nightly concert between two and three o'clock, and of a group of hearers collected under the plum-tree.

"If you will get up and go out any night at two o'clock you will find out the truth of the matter," said a disinterested friend. This suggestion we met with dignified silence, regarding it as a base attempt at a practical joke.

But we can at least make inquiries, we thought. There is the young man whose room is on that side of the garden, and who, by the way, speaks fluently what our nice fat old German countess innocently calls "the American language."

"Heard the nightingale? Guess I have! The old thing was a whistlin' all las' night jest outside my winder. Felt like chuckin' all my old boots at it."

So there were two sides even to a nightingale song!

At last she was actually heard by one of our party, then by another and another. Envy filled the hearts of the others. They were heartless, selfish creatures, not to waken a body.

The following course was at length agreed upon. With some difficulty a bell, of suitable size and tone, was procured, which was placed by the bedside of the one most likely to be favored, and at the first warble of the "songstress of the night" was to be rung to waken the whole party.

Charmed with our ingenuity, we retired to our beds and lay awake an hour or two thinking how nice it would be. In the midst of our first sweet dreams the rude sound of the bell "echoed along the vacant hall," bringing every one on our "flat" to his feet in an instant. The nightingale at last! In expectant attitudes, and somewhat scanty clothing, we leaned out of our windows many moments. Silence filled the air of the soft spring night. Only a gentle plashing of the river and a stray insect or two broke it. We waited long. We waited hopefully. At last, one by one, we folded our curtains, like convicted men, and "silently stole away." The conclusion forced itself upon us—the bell had frightened the nightingale away!

But at last—and this is "positively the last" at last—at last she did come. To every one of us in our turn she came. There came restless, wakeful, troubled nights, and then came the nightingale. And, by the way, did you ever notice how often things happen so? And are you sure that it is happening?

Her little song was perfectly brimming over with richness and comfort, and she sang as if she should never be happy again till she had poured every drop of it out into somebody's heart.

And when she had done singing she whispered one or two things in my ear which I thought were worth remembering.

She reminded me that we are all more or less nightingales. To say nothing of dreams (and how deliciously entertaining they are! some of the best and pleasantest things in everybody's life come to him in the night. Through what a delightful glamour we see things in the night! What charming romances we weave out of our every-day homespun! What noble poems are composed that never get on to paper! What heroic resolves are made that never get performed!

A famous preacher once confided to me that his best thoughts usually came to him in the night, and that he was in the habit of drawing largely upon them for his sermons. One night, having fallen upon a particularly exalted strain, he was afraid to trust his memory till morning. He therefore rose, found a pencil in the semi-darkness, and, having committed his weighty thoughts to paper, returned to his peaceful slumbers. In the morning what was his grief to discover that the pencil, for which he had so assiduously fumbled, was minus its point! We too have had our fine thoughts in the night. We too, we will even confess, have in faith and hope committed them to paper, but in the morning—ah, me, if it were only the pencil that had lost its point!

Yes, we all have our night thoughts. In the night come to us our tenderest thoughts of those we love, our best desires for them, our best intentions toward them. In the night come to us our precious thoughts of him who watches over us in all our helpless hours.

"Thee in the watches of the night
When I remember on my bed,
Thy presence makes the darkness light,
Thy angels stand around my head."

Unhappy the man who has no such "song in the night" as this!

The nightingale whispered also, and I am inclined to believe it, that nightingales are not always appreciated. Sing their very best they might, but more than half the world would be asleep. It was only now and then one who was awake and listening. Very discouraging work it was. She had sometimes thought of giving it up, but, on the whole, she liked it too well herself to do that. Christian Union.

Hard Work.

"What is your secret of success?" asked a lady of Turner, the distinguished painter. He replied: "I have no secret, madam, but hard work."

Says Dr. Arnold: "The difference between one boy and another is not so much in talent as in energy."

"Nothing," says Reynolds, "is denied well-directed labor, and nothing is to be attained without it."

"Excellence in any department," says Johnson, "can now be attained only by the labor of a lifetime; it is not to be purchased at a lesser price."

"There is but one method," said Sydney Smith, "and that is hard labor; and a man who will not pay that price for distinction had better at once dedicate himself to the pursuit of the fox."

"Step by step," reads the French proverb, "one goes very far."

"Nothing," says Mirabeau, "is impossible to the man who can will. 'Is that necessary?' 'That shall be.' This is the only law of success."

"Have you ever entered a cottage, ever traveled in a coach, ever talked with a peasant in the field, or loitered with a mechanic at the loom," says Sir Edward Bulwer Lytton, "and not found that each of those men had a talent you had not, knew something you knew not?"

The most useless creature that ever yawned at a club, or counted the vermin on his rags under the suns of Calabria, has no excuse for want of intellect. What men want is not talent, it is purpose; in other words, not the power to achieve, but the will to labor. I am no believer in genius, but I believe that labor, judiciously and continuously applied, becomes genius.

A BOY was once sailing down East river, near New York, which was then a very dangerous channel. He watched the old steersman with great interest, and observed that whenever he came near a stick of painted wood he changed his course.

"Why do you turn out for those bits of wood?" asked the boy.

The old man looked up from under his shaggy brows, too much taken up with his task to talk, and simply growled out: "Rocks."

"Well, I would not turn out for those bits of wood," said the boy. "I would go right over them."

The old man replied only by a look. "Poor, foolish lad," it said, "how little you know about rocks!"

The Bible is full of buoys to show where the rocks are hidden.

AN eccentric old fellow, who lives alongside of a graveyard, was asked if it was not an unpleasant location. "No," said he, "I never jined places in all my life with a set of neighbors that minded their own business so stiddy as they do."

Farm, Garden and Household.

The Flower Garden.

The time for putting out cuttings of plants to be bedded out has arrived, and all who wish healthy, vigorous roots of geraniums, coleus, and so on, should prepare at once boxes in which to plant cuttings. A writer in the New York Rural gives the following directions: "Large plants of coleus, verbenas, heliotropes and the like, that have been growing in the border during the summer, are far too large and cumbersome to be preserved in the house during winter; besides it is a difficult matter to lift them and preserve all or any considerable part of their foliage. A far better plan, and the one usually adopted by florists, is to take off cuttings, and strike them either in frames or in the house, thereby securing a sufficient number of small, healthy plants as a stock from which to propagate next season. Cuttings of nearly all of the half-succulent bedding plants will strike very readily at this season, without the aid of bottom heat. Small boxes filled with sand and covered with glass will answer every purpose, and plants sufficiently large and vigorous can be secured before cold weather. Much of the trouble experienced by amateurs in keeping bedding plants through winter in a healthy condition is due to the practice of lifting the old plants, instead of starting new ones in time. Even layers from verbenas, geraniums and heliotropes are not as good for stock plants as those grown from small, healthy cuttings. Seeds of annuals should be collected as fast as they ripen, also of perennials and biennials."

Those who possess roots of gladiolus should by all means save their seeds also. The same writer above quoted from says: "Raising gladiolus from the seed is just as simple an operation as raising onions, and no one need be deprived of a garden full of the choicest sorts; all that is required is a little care and patience. Save seed from choice sorts. Keep them until spring and then sow in good, rich soil, and give water occasionally if the weather should prove dry. In spring plant out again, and give good culture, taking up the bulbs in the fall, as before. If the plants have been well cared for they will bloom the third season, and then comes the pleasure of watching the unfolding buds. Although the seeds may have all been gathered from one plant, the seedlings are pretty certain to be of various colors. It is best, however, to obtain seed from the very best sorts, instead of the poor ones, as it costs no more to save them, and the chances of obtaining superior varieties are greatly enhanced thereby." Give the garden a thorough cleaning of all weeds and grass now, and there will be very little trouble from them again this season. Look over all the hyacinth, tulip and other bulbs which were taken up, to see if they are perfectly dry and not injured by mold and not eaten by rats. If any roses are to be budded this is the best time, as they are putting out their fall growth. They can be successfully layered during this month also.—Southern Cultivator

AUGUST AND SEPTEMBER are favorite months to plant out strawberries with those who desire a crop of fruit the next season. In making a strawberry-bed a warm, dry spot of ground should be chosen, with, if possible, a good loamy or clayey subsoil. A moist, wet situation is very unfavorable. Trench at least eighteen inches deep, and if the soil is poor let it be moderately enriched with well-decayed stable manure. In setting out take care that the plants do not become dry from the time they are taken up till they are replanted, and see that they do not wither afterward. Many persons cut off the leaves, if they are afraid of their wilting under hot suns, but a much better plan is to shade. Inverted four-inch flower-pots are excellent for this purpose; they may be taken off at night. The dews will so invigorate them that the shade will only be required for a few days. Sometimes in September they may need a good watering; but this should never be attempted unless a thorough saturation of the bed be given, and in a few days after the hoe and rake should be employed to loosen and level the surface, which the heavy watering will, in all probability, have caused to bake and become very crusty.

Strawberries are best grown in beds about four feet wide for convenience in gathering fruit, and giving them the best of cultivation. About three rows in a bed, and the plants twelve inches apart in the row, will be a good arrangement.—Gardeners' Monthly.

TO PICKLE EGGS.—To make a good pickle get one bushel of clean lump lime, free from dirt and all foreign matter, four quarts of fine salt and sixteen ten-quart pails of pure water, hard or soft, and as free from vegetable matter as possible.

Slake the lime with two or three pails of the water, and dissolve the salt in a pail of it; then add the salt and the balance of the water. Stir the preparation well, let it stand a short time, and stir again three or four times. Finally let it settle and dip the clear pickle into the cistern or cask you are to preserve in, filling it about half full. After this has been done dip the eggs into the pickle with a dipper or basket made for the purpose. When the cistern or cask is nearly full of eggs, and they are well covered with pickle, spread a cotton cloth over them, and spread on that a layer of two or three inches of the thick lime that is left after the clear pickle has been dipped off. Be sure that the eggs are well covered with the pickle while they remain in it, and the lower the temperature of the pickle is kept the better the eggs will come out.

Eggs pickled according to the recipe given have been kept well for two years.—New York Weekly Times.

IT IS ESTIMATED that the great trunk lines of railways carried last year 3,000,000 tons of Western produce to the Atlantic markets, valued at $400,000,000.

MACHINERY, TIES, ETC.

THE DUBOIS FLANGE COTTON GIN.

By the Flange the Cotton is kept in contact with the teeth on each side, until the fiber is taken from the seed, without allowing them to be taken up by the return motion of the roll, as in other Gins.

The Flange prevents hulls, stems, sticks and hard substances from being cut, consequently making a better sample out of roughly-picked cotton than other Gins.

We have sold more from this point than any agency of any other Gin for the crop of 1872-73; consequently we can furnish more and better references, and they are warranted to come up to all that is said of them.

We keep constantly on hand all sizes, from 40 to 60-SAW STANDS, left or right. Price, $5 per Saw.

The institution is located in the lovely village of Jackson, about twelve miles from Bayou Sara, a grove of pine, magnolia, oak and beech. The location is remarkable for its beauty, its wooded island and delightful atmosphere, its pure water, its unrivaled healthfulness, and its cultivated society.

WHEN FOUNDED.

The College was chartered by the State of Louisiana in 1839 and ceded to the Methodist Church in 1845.

ALUMNI.

Its Alumni numbers two hundred and three, and they are to be found in the most honorable stations in the land.

APPARATUS AND CABINET.

The college possesses a valuable set of Philosophical, Astronomical and Chemical Apparatus, also a well-selected Mineralogical and Geological Cabinet. The apparatus includes a Theodolite, Transit, Compass, Chronometer, Atwood's Machine, Whirling Tables, Electrical Machine, Air Pump, various combinations of the Mechanical Powers, Batteries, Chemical Tests, etc., sufficient for a full and extended course of observations and experiments. Steps have been taken by the Board of Trustees to put these in thorough repair.

LITERARY SOCIETIES.

There are two regular Literary Societies connected with the Institution. These are of great use in training men acquiring a liberal education—improving them in the art of public speaking and familiarizing them in some degree familiar with the proceedings of deliberative bodies, and in cultivating good business habits. Each Society has a convenient hall and a well-selected Library—one containing six hundred volumes each, which, added to the College Library of two thousand volumes, makes a total of five thousand volumes in the college.

BUILDINGS.

The Trustees are determined to continue the repairs on the buildings till completed. The Main Center Building is a fine specimen of architectural beauty and adaptation to the purposes of education. The wings, built of solid brick, present each a front of two hundred feet, with upper and lower galleries the entire length, supported by Tuscan columns, and with the center making in the rear a continuous front of seven hundred feet.

PREPARATORY DEPARTMENT.

In the Preparatory Department students are fitted for regular college classes, or may graduate through English or commercial education.

OCEAN SPRINGS HOTEL,

SITUATED AT THE

CELEBRATED OCEAN SPRINGS, MISS.

This house is now open and in complete order for the reception of guests. The bathing and fishing is the best of any place on the coast, and persons seeking either health or pleasure cannot do better than to visit the Ocean Springs Hotel, where they will receive every attention during their stay at the hotel. The table will always be supplied with the delicacies of the season.

I would refer invalids seeking health to the pamphlets (to be had at the Hotel, or at Messrs. Schmidt & Zeigler's, New Orleans, Louisiana,) containing an analysis of the waters of the springs and their wonderful cures, which are certified to by some of the most eminent physicians of our country.

Terms are more reasonable than at any of the other watering-places on the coast for the same accommodations. Liberal arrangements made with families and those wishing to remain during the season.

There are also connected with the house a Ten-Pin Alley and Billiard Saloon; also fine Croquet grounds for the guests of the house.

The proprietor has made arrangements for a Band of Music, which will be in attendance during every evening of the week, besides a fine Piano for the use of the guests of the Hotel.

THE CONVERSATION FAN.

THE LAST AND MOST ABSORBING SENSATION OF THE DAY IS, TO USE A theatrical phrase, "a great take." Everybody, to be en regle for the season, and to avoid the proscription of imperious fashion, must have

A CONVERSATION FAN.

No family circle is complete in social diversions and entertainments without one, and in order to enjoy the pastime it should be distinctly understood that the answers do not numerically follow the questions, but to spice the amusement an answer must be looked for that will afford a telling response to an interrogatory.

Where a direct answer is not to be found to a direct question, it will be discovered that it furnishes the sequel to a sustained conversation, so that couples can carry on a tete-a-tete, which they may not wish to make audible, by silent indications of numbers.

THE CONVERSATION FAN

is an infallible remedy against dullness, breaking the spell of silence by a suggestive inquiry, furnishing congenial pleasures for an evening's entertainment, and opening up a novel and ingenious method of whiling away agreeable hours at home, in the promenade, at a party or private gathering.

COTTON.—The following are the arrivals since the twenty-second instant:

| | |
|---|---|
| Louisiana and Mississippi | bales... 778 |
| Mobile | 307 |
| Texas | 15 |
| Total | 1,100 |

On Saturday the movement was partially suspended, and the sales were confined to barely 50 bales. Nothing transpired in the few transactions which occurred to serve as a basis for quotations, but factors evinced a disposition to meet the demand more freely, and average low middling, as well as strict good ordinary, could be bought at less than previous quotations. On Monday the market continued quiet throughout the day, but, as one buyer took 325 bales, the business embraced 450 bales, low ordinary to ordinary, with good staple, selling at 11¼c., strict ordinary, benders, of 13¾c., good ordinary to strict good ordinary at 15⅜@15⅝c., strict good ordinary, good style, at 16⅛c., strict good ordinary to low middling at 17c., and low middling at 17⅝c. On Tuesday the market opened with indications of increased vitality and a more general demand, and the business amounted up 650 bales, mostly at easier prices. Ordinary to strict ordinary sold at 12⅜c., strict ordinary to good ordinary at 14c., strict good ordinary at the 16¼c., strict good ordinary to low middling at 17⅛c., and strict low middling at 18c. The sales also included 5 bales new crop, which classed strict good ordinary to low middling and sold at 17⅛c., and 2 bales which were put in a list of old crop without discrimination.

The sales noted above make an aggregate for the past three days of 1,150 bales, against 1,225 for the corresponding time last week and 1,400 the week before.

The receipts of new crop embrace 24 bales. This makes a total thus far this year of 33 bales; including 1 from Texas, against 1,102 to the corresponding date last year, including 209 from Texas.

The receipts proper at this port since the first of September, exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas, are 1,226,783 bales, against 935,106 bales to the same date last year, and the increase in the receipts at all the ports up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 881,553 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same date last year, there is an increase of 443,296 to Great Britain, of 71,645 to France, and of 181,279 to other foreign ports. We quote:

| | |
|---|---|
| Inferior | @ 8⅞ |
| Low ordinary | 9⅜ @ 10⅜ |
| Ordinary | 11⅝ @ 13¾ |

Special Notices.

MIDWAY CAMP MEETING, Floyd and Delhi circuit, Louisiana Conference, will commence on Wednesday, October 1, 1873. Arrangements have been made to establish a public restaurant for the accommodation of those who may prefer it to tenting on the ground. Meals will be furnished at fifty cents. Horses will be fed and taken care of at reasonable rates. In case families desire board they should write and make arrangements with P. W. DeFrance or James A. Leggett, Midway, previous to the commencement, so as to avoid inconveniences that otherwise might occur. All ministers of the gospel are invited, and will be cared for free of charge. Ministers should report to Joel T. Daves, presiding elder, or G. M. Livermon, preacher in charge, as soon as they arrive, who will see that they are provided with comfortable lodging. Brethren, remember in whom you trust, and that nothing good has ever been accomplished without great effort. Heaven is to be gained only by overcoming.

Appointments for Quarterly Meetings.

NOTICE.—The Publishing Committee of the ADVOCATE gave it as their opinion that the insertion of the notices of Quarterly Conferences once or twice was sufficient, and, as the space of the paper is valuable, they passed a resolution recommending that they "be not inserted more than once or twice." Our friends who are interested in these appointments will take due notice thereof, as we propose to be governed by the resolution in future.

THE LIFE OF TRUST.

Being a Narrative of the Lord's Dealings with GEORGE MULLER, written by himself, with an Introduction by FRANCIS WAYLAND, D. D.

A New Edition, revised, enlarged and improved, and the History brought down to the present time. Also five full-page pictures of the several Orphan Houses added.

12mo. Cloth, $1.75.

The wonderful history of Mr. Muller and his work in Bristol, England, furnish an emphatic reply to Prof. Tyndall's demand for proof of the value of prayer in common life. Since the commencement of Mr. Muller's amazing "work of faith and labor of love" he has received, and from every quarter of the globe, as he affirms, in ANSWER TO PRAYER and for one having over been solicited to contribute, including over $2,500,000, and by means of which five buildings for the accommodation of 2,050 Orphans have been erected; 22,000 have been taught in the various schools and entirely supported. Bibles, Tracts, etc., in immense numbers and in various languages have been distributed; 150 missionaries are employed in England, Ireland, Scotland, British Guiana, West India Islands, East Indies, etc., and supported entirely or in part from contributions received; and, as Mr. Muller states in his last report, "we want nothing; the work goes steadily on. Faith is always circumstances—no war, no fire, no water, no unexpected panic, no loss of friends, no death is permitted to touch it. It triumphs over all difficulties."

Let the Christian read and ponder the facts of this wonderful history, and they cannot fail to find that which is as fresh, as remarkable for stirring incidents, for all-absorbing interest as any novel, producing incentives to a life of holy exertion, and imparting an unwonted and powerful motive to earnest and believing prayer of bold trust in the LIVING GOD. ## News of the Week.

DOMESTIC.

ST. LOUIS, Aug. 27.—An immense meeting of Grangers and veterans of the Mexican war was held to-day at Sweet Springs, near Brownsville, Missouri. Nearly fifteen thousand people were present, many coming a great distance. A good many prominent men, including members of the Legislature and members of the press, were also in attendance. Thomas R. Allen, master of State Grange, opened the grange on the part of the meeting with a speech, in which he ridiculed the lack of interest bestowed on the farmers' movement at the outset. But it had now became a great power, and attracted attention from all quarters and all parties; he believed that farmers were the noblest class of people in existence, and it was time they had something to say about public affairs.

The Grangers are growing, and before January there will be twenty-four States prominent in the movement. He warned monopolies not to crowd them, or they might make them go too far.

NEW YORK, Aug. 27.—Yellow fever is still raging at Vera Cruz.

WACO, Aug. 27.—The stage-driver brings in news that a large body of Indians surprised and captured Fort Sill, in Indian Territory, massacreing the women, children and nearly half of the Fourth United States Cavalry.

GALVESTON, TEXAS, August 28.—Dr. G. W. Peete, health officer for the port of Galveston, has issued an order that from and after Sunday, August 31, at sunset, all vessels arriving here from New Orleans or Brashear will be subject to detention at quarantine.

NEWBURG, N. Y., Aug. 28.—A committee of citizens have undertaken to improve the appearance of Washington's headquarters in this city, now in a very dilapidated condition. The expense will be defrayed by private subscription. The War Department at Washington promises co-operation.

Secretary Belknap has ordered thirty cannon—ten Spanish, ten Mexican and ten pieces taken from the rebels—to be sent here, to be placed on the headquarters' grounds.

SAN FRANCISCO, Aug. 30.—A heavy shock of earthquake was felt yesterday at San Jose. Great excitement prevailed, but no damage was done there. At the towns south, however, great injury is reported. The damage here is slight.

GALVESTON, Aug. 30.—The following order was issued this evening:

"Being satisfied from dispatches received that there are but two or three cases of yellow fever in New Orleans, and they confined to a remote district and limited area, the special quarantine instructions against New Orleans are suspended until Monday, September 8, at noon, unless there should be an increase of the fever. GEORGE W. PEETE, Health Officer."

NEW YORK, Sept. 1.—Hine Moto writes the London Times that all the young men sent out by the Japanese government throughout Europe and America, with a view of applying themselves to the study of different branches of science, have been ordered home. The students at present number six hundred. The government has charged the resident ministers to make choice among the students, requiring the best-deserving of them to be pointed out, and the remainder sent back to Japan.

The ministers, however, preferred to send all back, advising the government to submit them to an examination, after which those who shall have to return to Europe should be chosen. The order of departure has not been transmitted.

The reason given for their recall is that upon their return from Europe and America they were unable to bear satisfactory examination in the studies they were pursuing.

This failure is attributed to the want of knowledge of the language of the country in which they studied. The Japanese government, acting upon this, have resolved to send no more students abroad until such time as they have undergone some three or four years' tuition in home colleges, and can submit to a rigid examination in English, French and German.

LEXINGTON, KY., Sept. 1.—Specials from Paris and Millersburg state that the cases of cholera in the latter place are of the most malignant character, and up to the present time not a person attacked has recovered. At five P. M. eighteen deaths were reported at Millersburg for the past twenty-four hours; twenty new cases, all white persons. The disease runs its course in from three to six hours, terminating in death.

At Paris, Tennessee, new cases are reported to-night and one death. A panic prevails at Millersburg, and great alarm at Paris. Many are seeking places of safety, and removing their families out of the infected districts.

Eight cholera deaths reported at Stamford.

GREENBRIER WHITE—SWEET SPRINGS, WEST VA., Sept. 1.—Hon. D. M. Barringer, of North Carolina, formerly minister to Spain, died here this evening.

WISHITA, KANSAS, Sept. 1.—The stage which left Fort Sill on August 25 reports the rumored massacre a hoax. There was no trouble with the Indians at Fort Sill or on the route.

ST. LOUIS, Sept. 2.—A dispatch from Okaw ville, Illinois, twenty-nine miles from here, on the St. Louis and Southeastern railroad, says cholera of the true Asiatic type is raging there fearfully. Twenty-three persons died in twelve hours; among them the principal bridge-builder of the Southeastern railroad and his three children.

Five persons died in one family in three hours. The patients expire within fifteen minutes after being attacked, and turn black immediately. Medical aid will be sent from the surrounding towns. The citizens are rapidly leaving the place. Those recovering are using disinfectants freely, and tar is being burned in the streets. It is said that no local cause exists for the disease.

FOREIGN.

MADRID, Aug. 27.—Senor Castellar, in his speech, said that the troubles, difficulties and perils of the nation were increasing. The Republicans, while struggling to establish the republic, were united, but after they had achieved the victory were divided, because an ideal always exists. The present government represents a solid reality, and the opposition represents an ideal. He brilliantly traced the history of democracy, and declared that the death of the republic would be the sign of the death of liberty, and that the generation would be infamous which achieved liberty and failed to preserve it. I am a Federalist, he said, but madness rends the Spanish nationality, while Italy and Germany are becoming more united. He reviewed the public life of M. Thiers, which he said was a life of warfare. In conclusion Senor Castellar invoked divine protection to save the liberty and integrity of Spain.

HALIFAX, Aug. 27.—Dispatches from Sydney report thirty vessels driven ashore; many buildings prostrated; the crops throughout the country devastated, and the bridges washed away. The tidal wave is ten feet high. Fifty vessels at Cow bay are all ashore.

The Cunard steamer Alpha is there, with steam up and anchors down. She succeeds in holding down the breakwater, but is badly damaged.

The destruction to shipping in Cow bay is frightful.

HALIFAX, Aug. 28.—Accounts of the recent disastrous storm in the provinces are continually coming to hand. The gale was severely felt in the town and county of Pictou. In the harbor the tide rose to a great height, and in the town trees, fences and chimneys were blown down, and goods and chattels scattered in all directions. At least twenty schooners were driven ashore, but most of them are believed to be comparatively free from damage. Seven vessels are ashore at Port Mulgrave, four at Pirate Cove, four at Port Hawkesbury and four at Port Hood, east of Halifax.

The details of the storm by mail and telegraph show a frightful destruction of property by Sunday's storm. The loss is certainly several millions of dollars.

LONDON, Aug. 28.—Captain Halpin writes from the Great Eastern that the broken cable has been grappled and raised to the surface at the point designated by the electricians, but upon testing the wire the fault was found to be still to the eastward. The Great Eastern had experienced adverse weather. A series of alternate fogs and gales rendered the work of grappling exceedingly difficult, but Captain Halpin is sanguine the fault will soon be found and remedied.

PARIS, Aug. 28.—During the past three months the French railroads have sold three hundred and sixty thousand tickets to religious pilgrims.

BERLIN, Aug. 29.—Roman Catholic Bishop Kaltt has been sentenced to pay a fine of four hundred thalers for an infraction of the ecclesiastical laws in appointing clergymen without obtaining the sanction of the State authorities.

A dispatch from Leipzig says riots have occurred there, in which a number of peasants were injured. The authorities were compelled to call out the troops, who dispersed the rioters and restored order.

The city is now tranquil, but the troops are posted at various points, so as to be in readiness to prevent any repetition of the disturbance. It is not stated what occasioned the riots.

MADRID, Aug. 30.—General Campos summoned the Carthagena insurgents to surrender. They answered by raising the black flag on the works. As yet the operations before the town on the land side have amounted only to slight damage. It is reported the insurgents have agreed, if hard pushed, to deliver some of the forts to the Carlists, on condition that all the Carlists at Valencia, some four thousand in number, will join the insurgents in the attack on the Republican troops.

MADRID, Sept. 1.—Rear Admiral Alden has gone to Barcelona in the flagship Wabash.

The English residents have all fled from Carthagena in anticipation of an attack from General Campos on the insurgents. The provisions of the rebels in the town are nearly exhausted, and the men are marauding in the shops and private houses to obtain food.

Among the many reports circulated concerning the intentions of Don Carlos, in the event of his success, is one to the effect that he has promised the priests to re-establish the Inquisition.

ROME, September 2.—King Victor Emanuel will leave here about the middle of the present month. He will be at Vienna about the twentieth, and afterward go to Berlin.

AN HONEST MAN is the noblest work of God; the demand is great, but the supply is limited.

From the Work.

ROCKY MOUNT CIRCUIT, ALABAMA CONFERENCE.—Mr. Editor: On the first of August Bro. P. H. Moss and myself commenced a meeting at Rocky Mount church. Thirty-five were added to the church. A clearer manifestation of God's power I have never witnessed. From Rocky Mount we went to Sandy Ridge village, and there the Holy Ghost came down upon the people. Nine were added to the church. From Sandy Ridge I went to Athens, and there the same power came to aid the preaching and prayers of the people of God. Eleven accessions to the church, and the church greatly revived. In about a month I have received fifty-five into the church. Heads of families have gone earnestly to work, established family altars, and are consecrating their children to God in holy baptism. Bro. Moss has rendered valuable service to the church on my circuit. B. L. SELMAN, Pastor.

AUGUST 21, 1873.

SELMA DISTRICT, ALABAMA CONFERENCE.—Mr. Editor: On Sunday last I closed a meeting of nine days' duration at this place. The Spirit of the Lord was present, moving many to the anxious seats, where several found peace in Jesus. Seven joined the church, five of whom were heads of families; the other two were young men. It is thought by many of the old citizens that this meeting has had the best influence for good that has been held here since the war. Bros. Turner, Kelley, and our much-beloved presiding elder and his oldest son, were with us.

But while we have rejoicing we have sorrow, for it pleased the good Lord, on the morning of the twenty-fifth instant, to take from our fold one of our tender lambs—our dear little Lemuel Coke, a promising little boy, aged four years, eight months and nine days—to his own fold in heaven. In this I thank God for his grace that enables me to say with Job: "The Lord gave and the Lord taketh away; blessed be the name of the Lord." A. C. HUNDLEY.

LOWER PEACHTREE, Aug. 27, 1873.

NEWBERN CIRCUIT, ALABAMA CONFERENCE.—Mr. Editor: Our third quarterly meeting was held at Mount Carmel on the second Sabbath in August, and continued until the Sunday following. Dr. Mitchell, presiding elder, remained with us four days, rendering efficient service. His absence was supplied by the Rev. E. V. Levert, the oldest member in the Alabama Conference, being now in the seventy-eighth year of his age. His preaching was in power and demonstration of the Spirit. Before his polished shaft many were slain, some of whom were raised again—and others, we hope, soon will be—into newness of life. To this grand old preacher Methodism in this country is largely indebted. He it was who fought her battles in the days of our fathers, and won for her victories that are likely to be imperishable, for the Methodist Episcopal Church South in this section is emphatically the church. God bless the venerable old pioneer, and grant that his bow may yet long abide in strength. Thus, while Paul planted and Apollos watered, God gave the increase, the visible fruits of which were twenty-nine conversions, twenty-four of whom joined the church.

B. D. GAYLE.

SOUTH BOSSIER CIRCUIT, LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.—Mr. Editor: Our meeting at Gum Springs was reported through the ADVOCATE some weeks ago by Bro. James Ford. We commenced a meeting at Fillmore on Saturday before the first Sabbath in August, which lasted nine days. There were twenty-two conversions and thirty accessions to the church. The church was abundantly revived. President Stuart, of Mansfield, was with us three days. Bros. W. P. Kimball and R. Randle were also with us, all rendering efficient services.

Our third quarterly meeting, embracing last Sunday, was held at this place. Bro. Scott, our presiding elder, was with us until Monday evening, when Bros. H. O. White, Kimball, Randle and Wiley came to our help. The meeting lasted six days. Fourteen were added to the church. I did not ascertain the number of conversions. I note this one fact in these meetings: the character of the conversions and accessions are men and women of mature age, some advanced in years and heads of families—all of the best material in the communities. The church on this circuit is very much strengthened. Prayer and class meetings are being revived.

Your brother in Christ,
JOHN A. MILLER, P. C.

CATTON VALLEY, La., Aug. 22, 1873.

GREENVILLE CIRCUIT, ALABAMA CONFERENCE.—Mr. Editor: Our third Quarterly Conference was held at Spring Hill, including the nineteenth and twentieth of July. Our very efficient presiding elder, Rev. S. P. Richardson, was with us, and preached with power and in demonstration of the Spirit; and the work of the Lord began. Many young men have considered their way and taken heed thereto according to the word of God, and are going forward with the determination not to be "idlers in the vineyard of the Lord." How often have we been made to exclaim: "Bless the Lord, O my soul, and all that is within me bless his holy name, for his wonderful works to the children of men." We have had fifty-three additions to the church on this circuit, and the people of God were revived and strengthened every way. We are truly thankful to Bro. B. L. Selman, of the Rocky Mount circuit, for valuable aid rendered. He preaches with the unction from above, and feels the worth of immortal souls. He is one of the true standard-bearers of the cross. He baptized several for me, as I am not yet ordained. Also to Bro. Uriah Evans, local on this work, who is a man full of the Holy Ghost, and preached with much earnestness. Many have erected the long-neglected family altar, and promise never to cease this duty while life shall last. May the work of the Lord still go forward; and we feel that it will. There are other fields now ready, waiting for the sickle. P. H. MOSS.

AUGUST 21, 1873.

UNION SPRINGS DISTRICT, ALABAMA CONFERENCE.—Mr. Editor: We have said nothing about our work on this district. Since the dedication of the Greenville church I have traveled all round and all through this large district, and as a whole regard it as the best agricultural district in Alabama. It is in the main a beautiful country, although hundreds have left it to seek a better country in Texas. Some of our best churches have been almost depopulated by removals; but while we are the losers, other sections of Methodism will be the gainers.

God has been in our midst in revival power. We had a gracious outpouring on the church at Union Springs. We lost much in the death of Dr. Cotton, but God has been pleased to greatly bless the prayers and labors of our young brother Peterson who fills his place. About fifty-eight have been added in that charge. We have just closed a meeting of much interest in Greenville; about thirty added to the church. Bros. Blow, Selman, Connerly, Johnson and Moss have had extensive revivals on their circuits; about four hundred have been added to the church. The other circuits have much encouragement, and many have been added to the church, but no special outpouring of the Spirit. We have reason to hope that the entire district will be visited with revival power before the year closes. It will require at least six hundred additions to fill up the gap made by removals during the past eighteen months.

We are making a vigorous effort to build up the circuits. This part of our work has been much neglected since the war. The tendency of the planting part of our people has been to move to Texas, and many of our best circuits have been almost destroyed. We must adopt some method to re-establish the prestige and importance of our circuits. The towns and cities cannot sustain themselves without the constant supply from the country. Take any of the towns or cities in Alabama, and on an average about three-fourths of the membership are from country churches. We are making an effort to ceil or plaster all our country churches and put stoves in them. There was but one Sunday school outside of the villages that lived through the winter on this large district, and not a school in the entire district under the control of the church.

We find here, as elsewhere, strong opposition to denominational schools, but the more enlightened and thoughtful see the propriety of the church taking charge of the education of her own children. The time will come when Methodists will be so enlightened as to see that it is as important to have Methodist teachers to teach their children as to have Methodist preachers to preach to them.

We are building a first-class male and female high school in this place. The trustees have secured the services of Bro. Urquhart, one of the most accomplished educators in the State, and with him an able corps of assistants. It is a Methodist school, under the control of the Quarterly Conference. We are moving at three other important points to build Methodist schools, and we hope the day is not far distant when every Methodist community will have their own school, taught by good, pious Methodist teachers. Then may we hope for a permanent movement forward. Ignorance is the most formidable enemy the gospel of Christ has to meet. Depravity, intrenched and fortified in ignorance, can only be overcome by enlightenment.

We are trying to revive camp meetings, and we think we will succeed. Our camp meeting at Hill's chapel, twenty-five miles south of Montgomery, will commence on Friday before the second Sunday in September. All are invited.

S. P. RICHARDSON.

GREENVILLE, ALA., Aug. 18, 1873.

DON SEBASTIAN LERDO DE TEJADA, the president of the Mexican republic, is an enlightened statesman. Under his government Mexico has been more tranquil than ever before. There is a total absence of "pronunciamientos" and bloodshed, and a degree of political harmony seems to prevail, which is quite unprecedented in the history of that beautiful but unfortunate country.

According to the latest Mexican papers the government will have the support of two-thirds of the new Congress; peace prevails in every part of the republic, and commerce has increased forty per cent. during the first half of this year over that of the same time last year.—Picayune.

TWO GENTLEMEN were complimenting each other on their habits of temperance. "Did you ever," said one, "see me with more than I could carry?" "No, indeed," was the reply, "but I have seen you when I thought you had better have gone twice after it."

LITTELL'S LIVING AGE for the weeks ending August 9 and 16 have the following interesting and valuable contents: DeRetz and the Fronde, by the author of "Mirabeau," etc., Temple Bar; the third of Max Muller's series of Lectures on Darwin's Philosophy of Language, Fraser's Magazine; A Last Art, Fortnightly Review; The Opposition in France, Economist; Old Continents, Colemporary Review; The Cause of Revolution in France, Spectator; Montrose, Colemporary Review; The Combos, Chambers' Journal; Prince Bismarck's Position in Germany, Pall Mall Gazette; The Conquest of Khiva, Spectator; Church and State in Hungary, Pall Mall Gazette; together with the conclusion of the Two Brothers, by MM. Erckmann-Chatrian; installments of "Innocent," by Mrs. Oliphant; The Prescotts of Pamphillon, by the author of "Dorothy Fox," and poetry, etc.

OUR Sunday school publications for September are out in good time, and just as good as need be. For us older people the Magazine is, of course, most attractive, full of instruction, and all alive with matter adapted to the times and the hour; but we always go through the Visitor and Little People, and enjoy them.

SCRIBNER'S MONTHLY for September is, as usual, brilliantly edited, splendidly illustrated, and contains a great variety of able and pleasing articles. This number has a second article on Modern Skepticism, and an answer to the Liberty of Protestantism, which appeared in the August number.

FROM LAUIS GRUNEWALD, Canal street, New Orleans, we have received "Far Away Where Angels Dwell" and "Teach us, Heaven," both fresh and excellent pieces of music. From F. W. Helmick, Cincinnati, we have received "Champion Schottish," a fine piece of music.

WE HAVE RECEIVED number one, volume one, of a commentary on the New Testament, by Rev. Lyman Abbott. A. S. Barnes & Co., publishers. It is designed for Christian workers, and is to be issued in numbers. The present number embraces the first seven chapters of Matthew.

OLD AND NEW for September has a good table of contents. Among other articles of interest we note: Against Darwin; The Last Witch; Garnett's Escape; The Assyrian Cuneiform Inscriptions; Farmers and Railroads.

THE September Galaxy has: The Coming Marriage; The Anti-Slavery Men of the South; The Mammoth Religion of the World; Symbolism and Language; The Carlists, and other articles.

LIPPINCOTT'S MAGAZINE for September is fresh and beautiful, and handsomely illustrated, as usual. A fine number of this always entertaining magazine.

A LITTLE FELLOW while playing with two gold dollars, one of which he was going to put in his little savings bank, and with the other to buy toys, lost one of them. His mother reproved him sharply for being so careless, when he replied:

"Well, I don't care, anyhow; it wasn't the one I was going to buy toys with."

From President Johnson.

ASHEVILLE, N. C., August 19, 1873.

REV. LINUS PARKER—Dear Bro.: From the superscription you will see where I am. This is my second trip to this region during the summer. I returned home about two weeks ago, but owing to my health it was deemed advisable for me not to remain.

I am enjoying the hospitality of the Rev. Mr. Kennedy, president of Asheville Female College, a worthy man and an excellent educator. I expect to attend a camp meeting in a few days near the spot where I was born. There have been camp meetings held there annually for over forty years, except about three years of the war.

I exceedingly regret my inability to be with my brethren of the Mississippi Conference in any of their meetings. I had purposed attending a camp meeting in north Louisiana, but of this pleasure I shall be deprived.

The climate here is most delightful at this season of the year. A fire has to be kindled very often during the summer months to make it comfortable. Last night it was quite cool.

I inclose you a communication in reference to Whitworth College, which I hope you will publish, and greatly oblige

Yours fraternally,
H. F. JOHNSON.

WHITWORTH FEMALE COLLEGE.

Something of the history of this institution is known to most of your readers. Its growth has been remarkable. About six years ago it opened under its present management with fifty-seven pupils. Over two hundred matriculated the last term. The music department is not excelled in any school, South or North. The languages, including French, the natural sciences and an extensive course in mathematics are taught by a full faculty.

At the last meeting of the board of trustees it was resolved to endow the college. As a beginning, it is proposed to secure $10,000. The main object is to give greater facilities to young ladies for acquiring a thorough scholastic education.

Here is an institution, under the auspices of the Methodist Church South, which we think is doing a good and a great work. So preachers and people say. The buildings are large and well arranged. The school is prosperous—remarkably so. Then some one may ask: "Why endow it?" To enlarge its usefulness and give it greater permanence.

It is not an effort to build up a broken-down institution, nor to start a new one. The college is a live one. Money expended here will not be thrown away.

I shall be glad to hear from any of the friends of the institution on the subject, giving advice, or giving money, which is far better. One hundred men who will give $100 each are called for. Address

The Pope on Protestantism in Rome.

The Pope may be a prisoner in the Vatican, but the power to curse is still left him, and he uses that power freely. "Bless, and curse not," is a sentence of the Bible to which the vicar of Christ gives but little heed. The latest objects of his wrath are the evangelical Protestants who are laboring among the people of the city of Rome. Under the authority of and in the name of the Pope an invitation has been issued to the faithful to attend the commemoration of St. Peter's liberation from prison, "in order to appease the wrath of God, excited by the progress of Protestantism in Rome."

The text of this precious document should be read by every American who is in doubt of the real spirit of the Roman Catholic Church. It calls the missionaries "mercenary apostates" who have come to Rome "with the intention of overthrowing Catholicism in its very seat. Profiting by that liberty which, to the shame and detriment of the Catholic religion, is granted to all sects, they first began secretly to spread falsified Bibles, and then openly to invite principally young people and idiots to public conferences." "What," the invitation adds, "but a hypocritical larva is that specious name of Evangelical which Protestants give to themselves and their conventicles? And what but a lying appearance is that faith which they so much exalt, and pretend is alone sufficient to justify men and lead them to salvation?"

The Pope says very plainly that if he could he would clear the Protestant missionaries out of the city. "It is a cause of supreme bitterness to the heart of the Holy Father not to be able otherwise to impose a limit to so much evil, as he certainly would do if he could make use of other means to bridle the license of the impious perverters of true doctrine." If Pius had his will, would not the Inquisition be active this very day in Rome?

And this man calls himself a god. This mouth so full of cursing dares to speak for the Prince of Peace! And his priestly followers, under the protection of liberty here, are conspiring for liberty's overthrow. What they would do in Rome, if they could, their principles would oblige them to do in New York. Under Ultramontane direction the Roman Catholic Church is a perpetual conspiracy against the liberties of mankind. It denies all liberty but its own; when it can it crushes, when it cannot crush it curses. Thank God, its curses are harmless.—Methodist.

FOR THE ADVOCATE.

LEARNED FROM THE LILIES.

BY JEANNIE.

"Consider the lilies," good wife,
That have blossomed under your care;
Do you think that they dream how each bright beam
Sinks down in their chalices fair?
Or do they know, as they silently grow,
Whose the hand that planted them there?
Ah, no!
Yet the sun shines, and they blossom and blow.

"Consider the lilies," good wife,
That open their hearts for the dew;
Do they see from where drops the blessing there
That on every night is new?
Do they understand who tills the land,
Or seek the deep mystery through?
Ah, no!
Yet the dews fall, and they blossom and blow.

"Consider the lilies," good wife,
For God sees them, every one;
No matter how low each blossom may grow,
It is his; and he sends it the sun,
And blesses the earth with its gentle birth,
That to him our hearts may be won.
And so
It rains and shines, and they blossom and blow.

"Consider the lilies," my wife,
How they fill with fragrance the air,
And by every breeze that stirs the trees
Send their sweetness everywhere;
And they never cease, through their lives of peace,
To fulfill their mission so fair.
And thus
Be it also, dear, in the life with us.

"Consider the lilies," good wife,
As they sway in the warm spring light;
For down from the blue the sun searches through
Their hearts; but their hearts are of white.
And the, rich gold their depths unfold
To his pure and piercing sight.
And so
Would our Master, my love, have us grow.

"Consider the lilies" once more,
For summer-time goes, and they fade,
And their fair blooms shake and shiver and break
And die in the autumn shade;
But their hearts are of white, so they pass from the light
And sleep, and are never afraid!
Ah! so
Must we. Are we ready, my dear, to go?

Education by the State.

MR. EDITOR: Some time ago Dr. McCarty conducted in the columns of the ADVOCATE a discussion adversely to education by the State. The subject was announced by you at the time to be of grave importance, and the ability displayed in the discussion entitled it to a respectful attention. The silence that has ensued may be construed into a general concurrence with the sentiments of the article, and satisfaction with the conclusions reached. As we entertain opposite convictions we crave of you the privilege of space to show that primary education is most properly the business of the State:

1. On the score of benevolence.
2. On the score of justice.
3. On the score of economy.

1. The cost of educating the young is assumed from a feeling of benevolence toward them, and in consideration of the advantage which education gives for the work of life.

Besides the fact, which is obvious, that education is an advantage to the individual, placing him in advance of a natural development, it is also obvious that in every business and trade the educated man has by consent the advantage over his uneducated fellow. Now if the highest development of man is the work of education, and is also the proper aim of benevolence, not only is the consideration the strongest appeal that can be made to the sense of benevolence, but it is also a calamity to be deplored that a lack of means, in the great majority of cases, operate to repress the feeling of benevolence and to defeat the greatest advantage to many children. Every educated man is indebted to the benevolence of some other person for his education. The poor man's child only finds that poverty is a crime that even benevolence will not commute.

In taking the education of the young in its own hands, the State can justify this exercise of benevolence on the ground of its greater ability and impartiality, recognizing the claim upon kindness among the children of the State to be equal, irrespective of the conditions of their birth.

The plea that bachelors and married people without children would feel it a hardship to be taxed for educating the young of the race is too superlatively selfish to claim consideration in a scheme of humanitarianism, much less to be tolerated by Christian obligation.

To provide for the universal education of the young by the State is only a proper exercise of benevolence toward them, which is justified by each and every consideration which justifies the parent in seeking an education for his child. Whatever advantage education is to a human being by that, the most unanswerable plea that can be made, is the State justified in taking in her own hands schools so as to secure the benefits of education to every one.

2. But there is a higher consideration than this, which, when understood, will compel the State to take the education of the young into its own hands; and that is the obligation of simple justice. The State is under no constraint to be unjust, cannot afford to be unjust. Justice is both the right and the reason for a thing. The exercise of justice is the highest duty, as it is the life, health and growth of a community. Injustice is poison, death, desolation. All over the world avenging impoverishment, misery and ruin follow injustice.

It is the baldest injustice, the very effrontery of violence, to arrogate the right to make law as the State does, and then to evade the obligation that follows, as it does in relegating the education of the children of the State to individual enterprise and cost.

His own to every one is the invariable motto of law. The ascertainment of rights and the defense of those rights are essential to the true notion of a just or rationally constituted law. The State claims and exercises the sole right to make law, and in so doing ascertains, appropriates and assigns the rights and duties of every child born into the State, and establishes for each child, as his indefeasible right, the greatest possible outcome of his being.

He is held to be responsible for his conduct, eligible to great dignities and subject to grave duties. To secure this outcome, to prepare for these duties of which the State derives the sole and great benefits, the time of the child is appropriated to training—the maintenance of the child and cost of his education) charged to his parents; so that the entire burden of making a man a citizen devolves upon individuals, without compensation or benefit. And the State, to which all the profit accrues, and which exacts the service and imposes the obligation, escapes the burden. According to its own assumption, the State is bound, in simple justice to each child, to see that he has the means to make a good outcome, and that the State charge itself with the cost of his education.

The child is the most helpless member of the community, and, although bound by duties and restraints, is utterly dependent for his own upon the sense of justice of those who exercise the power of law over him. He does not know his rights, and can therefore be defrauded out of them. He cannot enforce his claims, and must therefore suffer the loss entailed upon him, without recourse or compensation, throughout his earthly life. But what of the State that perpetrates this injustice? Can it have health? Can it live? Can it prosper? Can it grow? When we consider what class of children suffer this injustice at the hands of the State, the marvel is that a single feeling of self-respect survives. They are the most helpless of the children—the children of the poor. Upon them falls this heaviest injustice, this most cursed inhumanity, starting at a disadvantage. They are straitened in circumstances, and do their whole life-work in the hardest way, and reap the smallest profits. Whatever of evil inheres in ignorance, whatever of depression and crime seeks cover in ignorance, this, by connivance of the State, hardens the hard lot of the poor. Are there any conditions of sacredness in learning that compel us to persist in such injustice? Is this the cost of sanctified education? Then, in the name of simple justice, down with such cant and cupidity. Secularize learning, open the school-house to every child in the State, and let us trust to the power of letters and divine Providence for good results. Let the State do justly, "though the heavens fall."

We insist that the education of the young can be most economically provided for by the State. Every method and institution of learning must be endowed, or restrict the benefits to the few who are rich. The cost of education otherwise could be borne but by a comparatively small number. The benevolence of mankind which has sought to benefit the young through education has cheapened education only to those who could pay for it. Universities and colleges have been endowed, but toward these the feet of the very poor never turn. To endow schools for raising up the masses is not possible to individual liberality. There can be no change hoped for in the direction of those gifts which seek the good of the race by helping forward the cause of education. The State cannot rely upon individual or church enterprise to do more than has been done. Therefore, unless the State take the matter in hand, a very large percentage of the children must grow up uneducated. As it is, the cost of education is at its maximum. The very same benefits could be secured at a greatly reduced cost. Education, to become universal, must be made free. It is enough that the parent maintain the child. In many cases the parent cannot spare the time of the child. It is exactly where the case is the hardest that the management can be made most economical by the State.

If the whole property of the State stand for the endowment of the educational machinery of the State, only the percentage necessary to maintain the schools and afford free education to every child need be annually collected and disbursed. And to what higher, nobler purpose could the property of the State be devoted and the power of taxation be employed?

Administration of Discipline.

MR. EDITOR: It seems to me that something is wanting in the Discipline to make the commencement of its administration as clear as it ought to be, and also to promote its objects, "which are the following, to wit: To rebuke offenders, to remove scandals and vindicate the character of the church; to clear the innocent, to reclaim the erring, to promote purity and peace in the membership, and the spiritual welfare of the offenders themselves." The Discipline makes it the duty of the class-leader "to advise, reprove, comfort or exhort, as occasion may require," and "to inform the minister of any that walk disorderly and will not be reproved;" and for one class of offenses it says: "First, let private reproof be given by a preacher or leader." These quotations from the Discipline are sufficient to show that the preachers and leaders are bound by the law in the administration of discipline, and the whole responsibility seems to rest on them. It was probably not the design of the law of judicial administration to relieve the members of the church of their duties to each other, or transfer them to the officers of the church; but as it stands, and is understood by most if not all of the members, they do not feel bound by the Discipline in the matter of offenses, as they consider the preacher and leader under obligation to look after them. It is my candid opinion that this view of the law has had a tendency to increase the difficulty of administering the discipline of the church, and there ought to be a law giving no uncertain sound.

The General Rules bind the members to do good "by instructing, reproving or exhorting all we have any intercourse with;" and in this we discover the principle which should begin, prosecute and consummate all ecclesiastical administrations. Every member of the church is bound to try to correct the brother whom he knows to be an offender. The Scripture is clear upon this point: "Thou shalt in anywise rebuke thy neighbor, and not suffer sin upon him."—Levitieus xix, 17. "Moreover, if thy brother shall trespass against thee, go and tell him his fault between thee and him alone; if he shall hear thee, thou hast gained thy brother."—Matthew xviii, 15. See also verses 16 and 17. A trespass against a brother is a trespass against the church, and an offense against the church is an offense against every member; therefore the principle that is to govern in the case of individuals is applicable to the church as a body. The course prescribed for the trespass against a brother is the proper course with offenders against the church, and when individuals have done their part, and failed in the object, then they must "tell it unto the church"—to the body that must try and determine the case. When the class meetings were common, and the preachers and members were brought by them into more frequent converse with each other, there was not so much necessity for the members to observe this course; but in the absence of the class meeting it is important that they should recognize the duty of watching over one another in love. Every one ought to feel that he is in some way his brother's keeper.

I believe that those who most frequently converse together have the greatest influence over each other, and that they can correct each other's faults if they go about it in the right way. But many of our people seem to think it their duty to tell others about the failings of their brethren, while they say nothing to those who have offended in order to gain them back to the right way. No brother has the right to accuse another until he has tried to correct what he supposes to be wrong. If the members of the church would cultivate a proper spirit of love and forbearance toward those who offend, and manifest an interest in their restoration to the enjoyment of the divine favor, many who go astray would come back again. Let all the members of the church know it is their duty to assist in preserving the peace, purity and dignity of the church. Let them feel that they bear with the ministers the responsibility of any scandal that may come upon it, and that they may rejoice in whatever honors they may be instrumental in sharing with it. They can labor successfully in many ways which the pastor cannot see, and perhaps more can be done by them to reclaim the erring than could possibly be done by the pastor in the capacity of administrator of the Discipline.

Fifth Sundays.

MR. EDITOR: Of late I have been revolving this question in my mind: "Has a preacher in charge of a station, circuit or mission the right to take the fifth Sundays from his regular charge and use them upon the regular work of another preacher in charge?"

To help in settling the question I turn to our Book of Discipline, and read the advice given and obligations taken in the solemn service of ordination, as follows: "It is therefore your duty to employ your time in the manner which we direct." In the next sentence this is further qualified thus: "If you labor with us in the Lord's vineyard, it is needful you should do that part of the work which we advise at those times and places which we judge most for his glory." In order that this important matter might be settled upon voluntary, individual recognition of duty, the question is propounded in the following language: "Are you willing to conform to the Discipline of the church?" Upon these questions being satisfactorily answered the Conference may admit the candidate to full membership by a majority vote. Hence the question is plain. Therefore no preacher, who has taken upon himself the fearful responsibility of doing the work of an ordained preacher in charge, has any right to take his fifth Sundays from his regular work and give them to some other pastoral charge. When he does this he violates his ordination obligation, and is chargeable with disobedience to the order of Discipline.

If one preacher may do as he pleases with his fifth Sundays, so may others. If one preacher may use his fifth Sundays contrary to the order of the Discipline, then may he so use any other Sunday if he choose; and if he may, so may all others; and then the whole system will fall into Lorenzo-Dow independency, and everywhere we shall see "confusion confounded."

Another duty of a preacher in charge is "to see that all the ordinances and regulations of the church be duly observed." Under this instruction is found the duty of the preacher, when capable, to administer the sacrament of the Lord's Supper. But if the pastoral charge embraces six or eight appointments it is exceedingly important that the fifth Sundays be employed at those places where, in the main, they have to take week-day preaching for sacramental meetings. Owing to carelessness and criminal neglect in these respects there are churches at which the Lord's Supper has not been administered for years. Can a preacher in charge be regarded "blameless in his life and official administration" when such a state of facts exist?

Besides, such a loose, slip-shod way of managing the affairs of the church will necessarily estrange the membership of the charge from their pastor, as they see from time to time that he has no abiding interest in their well-being; and in the long run the preacher himself is damaged in the esteem and confidence of his fellow-preachers.

A. DOWLING.

OZARK, ALA., August 16, 1873.

A SILENT SERMON.—Massillon was once asked to preach in aid of an orphanage. The day appointed the church overflowed, so that even standing-room was not to be found. In the great gallery above the pulpit were the children who so sorely needed help. At length the preacher stood up, and all waited breathlessly the bursts of eloquence they anticipated. Massillon paused a moment, looking down on the sea of upturned faces, then silently he turned and pointed to the poor children. It was enough. Purses were emptied, and sobbing women threw their jewels into the plate.

Union Springs District Conference.

MR. EDITOR: The eighth District Conference of the Union Springs district, Alabama Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, convened at this place at nine o'clock A. M., in the Methodist church, Rev. S. P. Richardson, presiding elder, in the chair, and Fleming Law secretary. All the charges in the district were represented excepting Troy circuit and Elba mission. Reports of the respective charges as to the spiritual condition of the district indicated it to be in a healthful and improving condition generally, showing an accession of one hundred and fifty-nine members to the churches in the district the present year.

It was recommended to the Annual Conference that the Elba mission be raised to a circuit. It was also recommended that a mission, to be known as the Snowdon mission, be established in the northern part of the district.

Reports in regard to finance and church-buildings showed a general financial depression throughout the district, and that the church-buildings were, with few exceptions, in good condition.

Reports as to Sabbath schools showed that throughout the district there is much interest and zeal manifested, there being twenty-five schools in operation, all, with but few exceptions, using the uniform lessons of the Methodist Episcopal Church South.

The following visiting brethren were present and invited to participate in the deliberations of the conference: Rev. W. S. Turner and Rev. Thomas Dees, of Eufaula district, and Rev. H. D. Moore, president of the Alabama Conference Female College, at Tuskegee, Alabama, and Rev. A. S. Andrews, D. D., president of the Southern University, at Greensboro, Alabama. Dr. Andrews and Rev. H. D. Moore each addressed the conference with ability upon the subject of education and in behalf of the institutions represented by them respectively, and resolutions were adopted commending these institutions to the confidence and patronage of our people.

The reports upon the subject of education show that the High School at Greenville and a school at Mount Hilliard are the only institutions of learning under the auspices of the church in the district. Resolutions of commendation were adopted in regard to the High School at Greenville, and Fleming Law, T. E. Branscomb, E. A. Rutledge and W. C. Menefee were appointed trustees.

R. H. Powell, W. C. Menefee, Fleming Law and W. W. Wilkinson were elected delegates to the Annual Conference; and Rev. J. W. Hightower, T. E. Branscomb, W. B. Gilmer and E. B. Wilkinson, alternates.

The committee appointed to report resolutions in regard to the death of Rev. J. L. Cotton, D. D., reported the following resolutions, which were adopted:

Whereas, In the providence of almighty God our friend and brother, Rev. James L. Cotton, D. D., has been removed from the scenes of his earthly labors to "the rest that remains for the people of God;" And whereas, He was for about thirty years an earnest worker in the vineyard of his Lord and a faithful watchman upon the walls of Zion, and during the greater part of that time was identified with the Methodist Episcopal Church South in Alabama, sharing its seasons of prosperity and its times of adversity; And whereas, He was by virtue of his office, as pastor of the church at Union Springs, a member of this District Conference; And whereas, It is proper that his co-laborers in the kingdom of Christ should bear testimony to his fidelity, and spread upon the minutes of this conference their sense of the loss the church has sustained in his death; therefore, be it

Resolved, That we have heard with profound sorrow of the death of our well-beloved brother, Rev. James L. Cotton, D. D., who was an eminent preacher of the gospel, a faithful pastor, a devoted father and a sincere friend.

Resolved, That in his death the church of God has lost a useful minister, and this conference a member whose wise counsels and godly example will ever exert a wholesome influence upon its members, and guide them in the paths of uprightness and peace.

Resolved, That we will cherish the memory of his virtues, and, by God's grace assisting us, will follow in his footsteps as he followed Christ, until we too, like him, shall lay down our armor and cease to labor and to love.

Resolved, That we cordially sympathize with his doubly-orphaned daughters, and devoutly pray the blessing of God upon them, that he will be a father to them, guiding them in the paths of usefulness and holiness safely to the shining shore in the land of the faithful.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be furnished the daughters of our deceased brother, and be published with the proceedings of this conference.

J. R. ROGERS, Chairman.

Rutledge was selected as the place for holding the next conference.

It was resolved that a concise statement of the proceedings of this conference be published in the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, Southern Christian Advocate and the Union Springs Herald and Times.

Conference adjourned.

FLEMING LAW, Secretary.

UNION SPRINGS, ALA., July 10, 1873.

(NOTE BY THE EDITOR.—A copy of the above proceedings were sent promptly by the secretary, but were not received; hence the delay in their appearance.)

GOOD HEALTH says that a German observer has recently calculated the average longevity attained in different professions. Doctors reach fifty-six years, artists fifty-seven, lawyers fifty-eight, but clergymen keep on to sixty-five. Physicians of the soul have nine more average years than physicians of the body.

Obituaries.

WILLIAM ARDRY, only child of William M. and Lizzie James, and grandson of Uncle Billy James, of precious memory, was born September 29, 1867, and died, near Bethel, Wilkinson county, Mississippi, July 25, 1873.

Like Timothy, he had "been instructed in the Holy Scriptures from his infancy," and was "one of those little ones that believed in Jesus."

PASTOR.

NANCY ANN SWAN died May 10, 1873, aged thirty-nine years. Her maiden name was Ware, and she was left an orphan when quite a child, and was cared for by Silas Garrett until sixteen years old, when she was married to Mr. William Kilgore, who died in 1865. She was married the second time, January 16, 1871, to Mr. E. D. Swan.

From her girlhood she was pious, and before and after her connection with the Methodist Episcopal Church South the writer knew her as a faithful, devoted Christian. Her delight was in doing good to others. Much of her time and means were expended in relieving the distressed, visiting the sick, and sympathizing with and comforting the bereaved and afflicted. She passed away peacefully, calmly and triumphantly to that long-sought home in the skies.

JOSEPH M. SCOTT, P. C.

GREENVILLE, ALA., August 22, 1873.

MRS. ELLA D. RAMSEY, wife of J. M. Ramsey, and daughter of W. T. and E. C. Harwell, was born in Petersburg, Virginia, September 5, 1838, and died of consumption, in Sumterville, Alabama, July 28, 1873. She was married July 11, 1854, and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church South about the year 1856, in which she continued a consistent and faithful member until death. Her gentle and obliging disposition had won for her many friends, who deeply sympathized with her in the hours of affliction. She fully met and faithfully discharged the duties of an affectionate wife, a devoted mother and a kind neighbor. Her sickness was protracted and painful, but she bore it with true Christian fortitude. During her last illness she often spoke of her departure with entire composure, and with perfect resignation to the divine will. Her relatives and friends sorrow not as others who have no hope, for she died in full hope of that rest which remains to the people of God.

ALEXANDER HOOD.

SUSIE E., daughter of Alonzo and Eliza J. Blanks, was born in Caldwell parish, Louisiana, February 11, 1868, and died, at the residence of her parents on Ouachita river, Caldwell parish, of congestion of the brain, July 9, 1873.

Little Susie was a very interesting child, possessing a loving and affectionate disposition. I had been with her in large, promiscuous crowds of people, at church, on steamboats, at home and at other places, and in consequence of her loving spirit, pleasing and cheerful manners she was sure to gain the affection and admiration of all with whom she came in contact. Though young, she would always try to comfort those she saw in distress, putting her little arms around their necks and offering some word of consolation to them. But she has gone from our midst, and doubtless is now associated with her two little brothers, Eddie and A. Lane Blanks, who preceded her across the turbid waters of the Jordan of death to the banks of deliverance.

C. R. GODFREY.

DIED, after a long-protracted illness, in Leake county, Mississippi, June 8, 1873, Sister NANCY EURE. She was the daughter of Rev. Abraham and Lucretia Beeman, and was born in Gales county, North Carolina, September 3, 1811. She was first united in marriage to Reddick B. Eure, who died leaving her with three children; after which she married Jethro Eure, who survives to mourn her loss. She embraced religion and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church in the fall of 1828, at a camp meeting at Pugh camp ground, in Gales county, North Carolina, in which church she lived an acceptable member and a devoted Christian until the hour of her death. She was loved and respected by all who knew her, and esteemed very highly "for her work's sake." Her house, her head and her heart were all fully consecrated to the cause of Christ and to the church of her choice. Well may it be said of her that she filled up her station on earth with dignity and Christian propriety, and then died, as she had lived, in the triumphs of our holy Christianity.

F. M. WILLIAMS, P. E.,
Her former pastor.

DIED, in Amite county, Mississippi, July 28, of pulmonary consumption, Mrs. SARAH TERRELL, in the sixty-seventh year of her age.

She was born in South Carolina, only a few hours previous to the death of her mother, and at a very early age was removed to the State of Mississippi by her adopted mother, Mrs. Susanna Halford. At about the age of sixteen years she was married to Mr. John Terrell, with whom she lived happily until his death, which occurred in 1852. She was raised up under the influence of the doctrines and usages of Methodism; and in her youth was converted and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church South, of which she remained a consistent member until her death. She honored the church of her choice by promptly and willingly conforming to its rules, and faithfully discharging the duties devolving upon her as a member. She cordially welcomed the preachers to her house, bestowing upon them every necessary comfort and attention, and when in health was punctual in her attendance at all the church services, and met her sisters and brethren with a warm hand of Christian regard. She adorned her Christian profession by an exemplary walk, pious conversation, and the development of those Christian virtues which are so becoming to "women professing godliness."

In her last illness she was bedridden for six long months, but was not heard to murmur. A few days before her departure, when asked by the writer how she felt about dying, she answered: "I feel prepared and willing to go; would like to stay longer with my children, but the will of the Lord be done." And when the time came for her to go she summoned her children—two sons and two daughters—to her bedside, bade them farewell, commended them to our heavenly Father, bade adieu to those of her friends who were present, and then feebly though distinctly pronounced those exhilarating words, first sung by the angels from heaven: "Glory, glory, glory to God." G.

MAJOR JOHN J. GREENING died, at his late residence near Mansfield, on the twenty-second day of July, 1873, aged sixty-nine years and eleven months. He was born in Sumter county, South Carolina. When young he came to Dallas county, Alabama, where he lived for many years. He came from there to Louisiana, and settled in DeSoto parish, where he had been living nearly thirty years. It was late in life before he became religious, which is always a source of regret to those who put off getting religion till in after-life. In 1853, when we were on this circuit, at a protracted meeting at Pleasant Hill, he joined the Methodist Episcopal Church South, and since that time has been a member of the church and a professor of religion. He has always been a liberal supporter of the church. In his last illness Bro. Carter, his pastor, visited him, talked with and prayed for him, and commended him to the Savior, whom he professed to be able to trust. He talked with and advised his family, and told them that he was prepared for his change. He leaves a wife and a large family of children, the most of whom are religious. His funeral discourse was preached by his pastor, at his late residence. His remains were followed to the grave, where he was laid to rest till that day when the dead shall be raised.

J. P.

JOHN BOYD was born in Newburg district, South Carolina, on the eleventh of October, 1795, and died of pneumonia, November 9, 1872. He was reared by Presbyterian parents, under whose godly example and pious instruction he grew up a model young man. He was married to Elizabeth Blackburn in September, 1817, moved to Perry county, Alabama, the same year, and settled on Oldtown Creek, where he was one of the first white settlers. In 1830 he removed to Brush Creek, in the same county, and, seven years later, embraced religion and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church at Mount Zion, Brush Creek circuit, during a revival carried on by the Rev. William B. Nell. His walk from this time forth was that of a Christian. Like the Master, whose example he was striving to follow, he was meek and lowly in heart. Working on in his quiet and unpretending way, his leaven of influence quietly and thoroughly permeated the entire community. His sound judgment and practical sense, sanctified by grace, constituted him a worthy exemplar and a safe counselor. By these many young men and some young ministers have profited. His house was the preachers' home, where they could go in and out and find pasture. His religion was pure and undefiled, evincing itself in visiting the fatherless and widows, and in keeping himself unspotted from the world. In 1856 he met with a sad bereavement in the loss of his wife, a most excellent Christian woman, and mother of all his children; but this he bore with Christian fortitude, for he sorrowed not as those without hope. He was again happily married, in 1857, to Miss Chellie M. Nixon, who still survives him, and in full assurance of faith is waiting the summons of her Master. During the last years of his life he seemed like one of the patriarchs of old, so strong was his faith, and surrounded as he was by his children, grandchildren and great grandchildren, numbering one hundred and thirteen. With characteristic meekness and fear of giving trouble, he frequently expressed a wish to die before he should become a burden. In the last speech he made in love-feast he said his days were almost numbered, and that he was ready to go should the summons come. The night before his death he evinced the same spirit of faith and readiness. And, true enough, when the bridegroom made his appearance Father Boyd, with his vessel filled with oil, and his lamp trimmed and burning, went in with him to the marriage.

SELF-EDUCATION.—The learning we acquire at school is but the beginning of education, and because we have left school our education is not complete, but only begun; for what we had there gained we have yet to learn the application and practice of in all the requirements and duties of life; and now it is that we must commence the most important part of education—self-education, the applying what others have taught us to the teaching ourselves, the carrying on what others have begun for us to our own self-improvement. Now, in reality, begins true education, for whatever a man learns himself he always knows better than what he learns from others. Not that therefore the help and the advice of others is to be disregarded at any time, for we must use all the aids of men or books that we can. But we must set ourselves to work upon ourselves, and we must no longer be children dependent upon others to teach us, but striving to teach ourselves. When we were young our food was provided for us, but even then we ate and digested it for ourselves; now we must not only do this, but we must earn it also, acquire it for ourselves, and so in understanding and in knowledge become men.

A BOSTON exchange has the following: Wanted, by a clergyman in this vicinity, about six enthusiastic church members to set the other six hundred on fire.

THE UNMASKING.

BY JAMES H. WORSE.

The winter masked a pearl of spring
Long time before spring's first sweet sign,
When buds were dumb that soon would sing,
And dun clouds cold that yet would shine.
All lakes first lift, then overflow,
Then down the wild rocks sparkling go.

And I had gathered many a thing
That was but alien to the time,
If Time did naught but winter sing,
Nor subtler sense hold by his rhyme.
But Time's secrets best to know,
For thus and thus read so and so.

One day I tapped a maple-tree,
And there, the moistened bark behind,
A secret cup was brewed for me
Better than best wines, to my mind.
And I was quick to understand
Behind the cup what brewer's hand.

Another day, over a brook
There leaned a yellow cowslip new;
And in a sheltered, sunny nook
Three tiny arbute blossoms grew;
And these, when weighed against the cold,
Than it weighed more a hundred-fold.

So I have known a soul frost-bound
That, struggling upward for its spring,
Long time the stalers frozen found,
That would not open to let in sing;
And yet I knew, by sign and sign,
That what it would sing was divine.

By sign and sign the winter turned,
And, while unvanquished seeming, died.
By sign and sign the red blood burned
Until a king rose garlanded
With those same flowers that, late repressed,
Lay hid against the warm earth's breast.

And still the gathering of the will
Must have its time, though that be long,
And still the heart must fill and fill
Before it bursts full-bunched in song.
Still it must fill, then overflow,
Then down the wide world sparkling go.

Smoking and Thinking.

Dr. Richardson has so clearly explained the influence of smoking upon the blood that it will be best to quote his graphic account. His scientific eminence entitles his evidence to respect, and lovers of the weed must recollect that it is a smoker to whom they are listening: "On the blood the prolonged inhalation of tobacco produces changes which are very marked in character. The fluid is thinner than is natural, and in extreme cases paler. In such instances the deficient color of the blood is communicated to the body altogether, rendering the external surface yellowish, white and puffy. The blood being thin, also exudes freely, and a cut surface bleeds for a long time, and may continue to bleed inconveniently, even in opposition to remedies. But the most important change is exerted on those little bodies which float in myriads in the blood, and are known as the red globules. These globules have naturally a double convex surface, and at their edges a perfectly smooth outline. They are very soluble in alkalies, and are subject to change of shape and character when the quality of the fluid in which they float is modified in respect to density. The absorption, therefore, of the fumes of tobacco necessarily leads to rapid changes in them; they lose their round shape, they become oval and irregular at their edges, and instead of having a mutual attraction for each other, and running together, a good sign of their physical health, they lie loosely scattered before the eye, and indicate to the learned observer, as clearly as though they spoke to him, and said the words, that the man from whom they were taken is physically depressed, and deplorably deficient both in muscular and mental power."

Tobacco modifies the circulation in the brain, as in other portions of the body. Hence it would be remarkable indeed if it did not exercise some influence upon the mechanism of thought. "A sincere, self-observing smoker cannot fail," says M. Meunier, "to recognize that tobacco creates a new nature, more disposed to dreaming than action." Although a great smoker himself, he considered the habit was inimical to the rational mind. His frequent diatribes against this mort aux puptes excited much raillery; but the habit of twenty years was long too strong for him. So close was the connection between work and smoke with M. Meunier that the amount of intellectual labor he had performed was chronicled by the extent of his consumption of tobacco. When at last, after many fruitless attempts, he put his conduct, in harmony with his opinions, it required several weeks of undivided attention to break the chains of habit which bound him. The mode by which nicotine acts upon the blood-vessels explains the apparent contradiction that it should be able to excite into momentary activity an organ which it has enfeebled and stupefied. The excitement and over-activity which it causes in the contractile apparatus of the walls of the blood-vessels are quickly followed by a general fatigue, which is only a modified paralysis. Thinking, as we have seen, is closely related with the cerebral circulation. When, by continual usage, the muscular tissue of the blood-vessels has become gradually benumbed, the blood, in place of its natural rapid flow, circulates slowly and sluggishly, and the functional energy of the brain is diminished. But with a new exhibition of the stimulant, the muscular contractility is again stimulated, the circulation becomes quicker, the brain, abundantly and regularly bathed by the life-blood, takes up again its functions, the brain-power increases, ideas flow with greater rapidity; but the activity thus produced cannot last. With this stimulation disappear the brilliant results which it had produced, and the organ falls into a relaxed condition, from which only increased doses can temporarily rescue it.

One of the results upon the brain is the loss of memory. Many authors have noticed this fact.

The case of l'Abbe Malgno, the celebrated editor of Les Mondes, is curious. He had often been in the habit of taking snuff, which had always led to prejudicial results. After various temporary renunciations he had returned to its use. In 1861, while engaged in some mathematical labors, he took from twenty to twenty-five grammes daily, and found himself continually having recourse to the snuff-box. The effect was a rapid extinction of the faculty of memory. He had learned several languages by their root words, o. which he knew from one thousand two hundred to one thousand five hundred of each tongue, but he found that his power of recalling these words was gradually diminishing, and recourse to the dictionary became each day more necessary. Struck with this fact, he resolved to abandon the tabatiere and cigar. Writing after six years' experience as a non-smoker, he says: "It has been for us the commencement of a veritable resurrection of health, mind and memory; our ideas have become more lucid, our imagination more vivid, our work easier, our pen quicker, and we have seen gradually retire that army of words which had run away. Our memory, in a word, has recovered all its riches, all its sensibility. * * * That tobacco, especially in the form of snuff, is a personal enemy of memory, which it has destroyed little by little, and sometimes very promptly, cannot be doubted. Many persons with whom we are acquainted—M. Dubrunfaut, the celebrated chemist, for example—have run the same dangers, and escaped them in the same fashion, by renouncing tobacco, which we do not hesitate to say harms the greatest part of those who employ it, since for one smoker or snuffer who uses it there are ninety-nine who abuse it."

Memory depends upon the vigor and health of the nervous system; it is likely to be impaired by whatever causes unhealthy excitement and nervous waste. Hence, if the smoker's memory fail, it may be considered as one symptom of general injury of the nervous centers, from which arise other ills. The perceptive faculties become coarser, and this leads to hallucinations. Blatin quotes from Ehrhart some curious cases of this nature. M. X., forty-six years old, nervo-sanguine temperament, and in apparent good health, had often experienced embarrassment in speech and motion after indulgence in tobacco. One fine day in the country, when the air was calm and the sun was shining brightly, he was astonished to see a heavy rain shower which appeared to be driven toward him by a violent wind. He extended his hand. No drops were falling, his clothes were quite dry, but at the same moment he was struck with violent palpitation. He threw away his cigar, the violent beatings of his heart ceased, and the vision disappeared. Many times this phenomenon recurred. He abandoned tobacco, and the accidents quickly disappeared. Thinking himself perfectly cured, he commenced again to smoke, but the palpitations and visions reappeared. Complete abstinence was his only safety.

The step from temporary hallucination to chronic lunacy is not very great, and we find on record the case of a man who became insane, and whose recovery was due to a lucky accident, which barred him from access to his usual indulgence. Druhen narrates another noteworthy case. A middle-aged man, in good health and of steady habits, was sent by his employer to Paris, charged with papers of considerable value. The importance of the trust preyed very much upon his imagination, and led to an attack of melancholy mania. He was under medical treatment about three weeks, during which time his usual desire for tobacco disappeared. On his recovery he again commenced smoking moderately. A few months after another attack commenced, and he began to talk once more of the (imaginary) risks and dangers he had encountered in his journey to Paris. Druhen saw that he was upon the brink of insanity, and his first prescription was: "No tobacco." Under this regime the man has since enjoyed the best health.*

These facts, although curious, are not entirely decisive, for in judging by individual cases there is always a risk of mistaking the exception for the rule. There are, however, data of a more absolutely convincing nature, which we commend to the careful consideration of young smokers and their parents.

In 1857 M. Bertillon divided the one hundred and sixty pupils of the Paris Ecole Polytechnique into smokers and non-smokers, with a view of testing this question. The results in the examinations of the twenty who stood highest, and those next to them, have been thus stated:

| Smokers. | Non-smokers. |
|---|---|
| 6 | 14 |
| 10 | 10 |
| 11 | 9 |
| 14 | 8 |
| 13 | 7 |
| 15 | 5 |
| 16 | 4 |
| 17 | 3 |
| 102 | 58 |

An examination of this table will show that while the non-smoking pupils exhibit a steady upward tendency, the contrary is the case with the smokers. Although the majority in numbers, they were the minority in intellectual attainments. The contrast is most instructive, and demonstrates conclusively the deadening influence of this popular narcotic upon the functional activity of the brain. If tobacco were, as its apologists sometimes claim, the handmaid of thought, a very different result must have ensued. Dr. Murray, of Newcastle, who is not an opponent, but a defender of smoking, says: "My own personal experience and observation among medical students is supported by the results of examinations for law and divinity, smokers having been found behind non-smokers in mental caliber. So long ago as 1606 a medical writer said tobacco is not safe for the young, and should be called youths' bane." Sir Benjamin Brodie, from the result of experiments upon animals, affirms that the oil of tobacco acts by destroying the function of the brain. This, of course, refers to its administration as a poison; but who can think with coolness upon our youth, voluntarily sapping the vigor of their brains—the only organ in which we excel (?) the brute creation—and thus wearing out their nervous systems ere they have fairly entered upon the important duties of life?

It will be seen that medical science and statistics confirm, by a posteriori evidence, that which physiology would lead us to expect on a priori grounds. It would be folly to suppose that the brain, with all its minutely wonderful mechanism, should not be injured by continual contact with blood weakened and deteriorated—poisoned—by contact with the deadly principles evolved in smoking tobacco.

Smoking is now so common among persons of unformed constitutions that the facts here detailed require a grave importance. If juvenile smoking continues and extends, we may look for generations endowed with weaker brains and duller intellects in a continued series of degradation. Let those who would not have our brave, bright, English lads degenerate into a race of dyspeptic duffards, warn them, as they wish for the full exercise of that power to think, which is their greatest privilege and glory, as they hope for clear heads and unclouded brains, to resist the dreamy seductions of tobacco.—The Builder.

Excuse-Making Machines.

The author of this valuable article, finding that it takes more time than he has to spare to attend to the many demands made upon him, we will cheerfully act as his agents. We have already received quite a number of applications. Elder A. wants one. He is the richest and the stingiest man in his village and church. He has but one child, and he has quarreled with her, and thus lives alone and saves the money it would cost to keep her. He lets irreligious people pay the pastor's salary, while he talks about the hard times. He needs a machine of greatest power and best material, as he will subject it to severe and constant strains. We would recommend the two hundred horse-power $1,000 machine. It will pay for itself in a few years.

Rev. Mr. B. writes for another. He is a young man of great talent, who is too indolent to study regularly or visit his people. He needs a machine of varied power, able to turn out a great assortment of excuses. We would recommend the double vibratory, oscillating machine, which—as we intend to charge ministers double price—he can have for $1,500. He can lie around as much as he pleases ever afterward.

Squire C. needs one. He does not want to lead in prayer, and talk to the Sunday school children, although he can talk in the courthouse by the hour. A constant, steady-going machine, well supplied with butters, will answer for him. Price, $50.

Mr. D. has been prosperous in business this year, but makes no larger contributions to benevolence than he did last year. All his neighbors call him generous, but his conscience troubles him. It is not an uncommon case; and a $100 machine will soon make him feel quite comfortable. After awhile, however, he will have to buy the $1,000 machine we have recommended to Elder A.

Mr. F. feels that he ought to be a Christian, and his conscience at times sharply reproaches him. His case is a common one, and he does not need any of the machines. Let him buy at any jeweler's a common spy-glass, and look at his own virtues through the small end, and at his neighbor's through the large end. His own virtues will be greatly enlarged, and his neighbor's diminished; and he will experience an immediate relief.

Let not the ladies and the children think, because the applications have been from men, that we cannot supply them. The machines are suited to all, from ten years old and upward. Every family should have two or three of them. Address, for further information, price list, etc., Growl, Jr., care of the editors of the Observer.

We will add that these machines, all being of human manufacture, cannot be carried beyond the grave. They serve an excellent purpose in this world, but are worthless at the judgment bar of God.—Christian Observer.
